THE opening episodes of this new serial, "The Perils of Thunder Mountain," by Vitagraph, have as their background a settler's cabin on a snowy mountain. The settler, his nephew and his adopted daughter live together with an Irish cook of humorous proclivities, and an Indian man-of-all-work. At the start, the settler jumps over a cliff, after leaving a will that bequeaths a mine to two nephews, one absent, and the daughter.

The will is read, and the young man seeks his cousin, whom he finds on the Barbary Coast, in San Francisco, and brings him to the cabin. We soon discover that this villainous man wants the whole mine, and the girl too. In the first two reels he makes four attempts to kill the hero, and fails. A man of mystery appears in one instance and foils him. A confederate, whom he had palled with in the city, comes to help him. At the close of the last reel of episode two, it looks as though he was going to get the hero, after knocking him off a bridge into a ravine, where, fortunately, he falls into a tree.

While these two installments do not show quite the punch found in "The Man of Might," the recent Vitagraph serial, it promises to be full of action and with no slow spots. It ought to go well.

The role of the hero is portrayed by Antonio Moreno, and he is assisted by a capable cast, headed by Carol Holloway.

"Love's Prisoner"

Triangle Special Presents Olive Thomas In Role of Pretty Feminine Cook.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is good entertainment value in this six-reel Triangle subject, entitled "Love's Prisoner," though it has not sufficient suspense to give it first rank. The story is worked out in leisurely, but consistent, narrative style, punctuated at intervals by some rather strong dramatic episodes.

Olive Thomas is cast in the role of

Olive Thomas
Appears altogether satisfied to be "Love's Prisoner."

Nancy, a girl who inherits culture and refinement on her mother's side and a criminal taint from her father. The story of Nancy's career is interesting, though it has points of similarity with many predecessors. She hates the law because her father was railroaded to the penitentiary for a crime he did not commit, though he had perpetrated others. Nancy at first "goes straight," but after she has been left a widow of an English lord, and has a high place in society, the temptation comes to her to steal, and she becomes a mysterious thief, known as "The Bird." The end finds her, after many exciting experiences, happily engaged to the detective who worked on her case.

Joe King fills the part of the hero in an agreeable way and William V. Mong gives an interesting character study in the role of Jonathan Twist.

Director: Jack Dillon.
Cinematographer: Steve Norton.
Scenario by E. Mayor Ingleton.

The Story.

Nancy, the daughter of a refined mother and a father of a criminal proclivity, is a girl of mixed instincts. She has been reared as a pickpocket, but inherits her mother's love of good. When her father is railroaded to the penitentiary, Nancy sends her two sisters to the country, and takes a job as a demonstrator of Climax cocoa. She comes in contact with a visiting English lord, whom she marries. Lord Cleveland dies, but under the laws, Nancy cannot have his wealth, because she is American born.

Nancy has grown up distrusting the law, because of certain inequalities of justice she has seen and experienced. Though she moves in high social circles, she yields to her instincts for crime, and becomes known as "The Bird" in police circles. Jim Garside, the city's best detective, eventually connects Nancy up with the mysterious robberies. Garside has already fallen in love with Nancy, during the course of his investigations, and is distressed over the situation.

Nancy lies glibly in her efforts to escape from the net which has closed about her, but finally confesses everything to Garside. He struggles between love and duty, and finally surrenders Nancy to the law. She is sent to prison, but upon her release, Garside still claims her as his prisoner.

"Break the News to Mother"

Very Satisfying Melodrama of the Home Coming Soldier Boy by Select.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE spectator will call it a good picture, for "Break the News to Mother," the new Select release, has the always satisfying elements: love-ties, home-ties, and difficulties overcome by the hero, who returns to his mother, freed from a charge of homicide, which he didn't commit, a war medal on his breast, and the people cheering outside his door. It is well-made, smooth, emotional and pleasing.

Pearl Shepard plays the heroine, daughter of a rich factory owner. The superintendent, played by William Bailey, is scheming to win the rich girl, though he has betrayed a woman, played by Alice Gerard, who shoots him in a fit of jealousy. The hero, played by Raymond Bloomer, lives with his old mother, taken by Gertrude Berkley. The home scenes of these two are especially pleasing, and give something of the same kind of sentiment that has been successfully played up on the stage by Belasco. It is rich in good old things.

It is not a great attraction, but is surely a good one, and quite likely to be popular for reasonable runs.

Select Announces Three Attractions for June

SELECT announces an important list of Star Series attractions for the month of June, including Olive Thomas' first Selznick Picture, "Upstairs and Down." This attraction, like all of Miss Thomas' Selznick pictures, will be distributed by Select. The two other productions on the Select list for June are Constance Talmadge in "Happiness a la Mode," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and Alice Brady in "His Bridal Night."

In the distribution by Select of "Upstairs and Down," Miss Thomas makes her official debut as a Selznick star, the pre-release showing of this attraction in Providence, Rhode Island, having been by special arrangement in connection with the motion picture ball, in the First Providence Armory.

"Upstairs and Down" is a screen adaptation of the stage comedy of the same name by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. It was directed by Charles Giblyn. Miss Thomas' leading man is Robert Ellis and the other members of the cast are: Rosemary Theby, Mary Charleson, David Butler and Andrew Robson

The name of Constance Talmadge's Select picture for June, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, is "Happiness a la Mode," a comedy-plus-drama attraction in which Miss Talmadge has the part of a young married woman who divorces her husband. The part of the husband is played by Harrison Ford.

The production was written by Edwina Levin, and the scenario is by Alice Eyton. It was directed by Walter Edwards. In addition to Harrison Ford, Miss Talmadge is supported by a cast which includes Betty Schade, Myrtle Richelle, Paul Weigel, Thomas D. Persse and A. Fremont.

"His Bridal Night," in which Alice Brady is starred, is by Lawrence Irving Rising. In this picture Miss Brady plays a dual role, appearing as Tiny and Vi, twin sisters who are alike as two peas on the surface, but decidedly different in nature. The story is a rollicking farce and begins the night before Vi's wedding. Kenneth Webb directed, and the scenario is by Kathryn Stuart. The two male leads are played by Edward Earle and James L. Crane and the others in the cast are Daniel Pennell, Daisy Belmore and Mrs. Stuart Robson.

Coleen Moore in Salisbury Cast.

Coleen Moore, who played in support of Monroe Salisbury in "The Savage," is again his leading woman in "Devils Have Their Friends," which is being completed under the direction of Paul Powell. Ethel Ritchie and Virginia Foltz are included among the feminine stars of this Salisbury attraction.

Big Cast in Tom Moore's Newest Goldwyn Picture

THE cast of Tom Moore's newest Goldwyn Picture, "The City of Comrades," a picturization of Basil King's novel of the same name, is in keeping with the dignity and beauty of the story. Tom Moore assumed the role of Frank Melbury, the young man of fine family, who sinks to the lowest depths and makes his way up again through force of will.

As Regina Barry, the girl whose home is robbed by Frank, and who later falls in love with him, Seena Owen finds her third opportunity as the star's leading aids. The part demands refinement, distinction and sympathy, besides feeling and emotional force.

Otto Hoffman as Lovey, the curious old man who embodies a strange combination of good and evil—good in his devotion to Frank, and evil in his influence over the young man—contributes a splendid study to his gallery of screen portraits.

Dr. Cantyre is played by Albert Roscoe, who sheds the sandals and goatskins of John The Baptist in "Salome" and other similar production to play an everyday gentleman. He does it with unassuming dignity and appeal; while Robert Walker, as Ralph Coningsby, acts a small role with finesse and intelligence. Mary Warren is seen as Elsie Coningsby. Alec B. Francis and Kate Lester, both of whom bring a vast experience and a degree of sympathy only to be found in veterans of a score of Goldwyn Pictures, complete the ensemble.

Offers "Screen Letter Box" to Exhibitors.

Morris Kashin and Jack Cohn are offering exhibitors what they term "The Screen Letter Box." It gives fans an opportunity to ask questions about the pictures and have them answered. These letters and answers are made up into a short reel, enhanced by animated cartoons, questions and answers introduced in a novel way and the whole film being out of the ordinary.

Leah Baird Has Big Role in Second Thomas Picture

THE big scene in Augustus Thomas' second big drama for Four Star Pictures is based on a theme as old as Bible history—the woman scorned—but its handling is a brilliant refutation of the adage, "There's nothing new under the sun."

Mr. Thomas makes the young school teacher, his heroine, who has been forced out of employment in the public schools of New York through unjust doubts of her patriotic Americanism, turn suddenly from the arms of the man she loves and demand his death at the hands of anarchists who have convinced her by seemingly sound proof of his treachery.

It is easy to recognize that the ridiculous rather than the sublime might be easily achieved in a scene that calls for transition on the heroine's part from a loving trusting woman in the arms of her lover one minute to a virago with eyes blazing hate and a tongue screaming out that lover's death sentence in the next.

The rehearsal of this particular scene occupied a whole day of production at the Biograph studio. Leah Baird plays Ruth, the high-strung little schoolteacher of a poor foreign community in lower New York. George Irving is the director of the picture and Harry Raver the producer.

Triangle to Film Wilde's "Lady Windermere's Fan"

TRIANGLE announces that it will release on June 15 one of Oscar Wilde's best known stories, "Lady Windermere's Fan." Everyone is familiar with the story of a mother who sacrifices her own good name that her daughter's may be saved; of the struggle against pride, and the final overwhelming triumph of mother-love over the desire for personal happiness.

When first published, "Lady Windermere's Fun" brought forth a torrent of criticism, favorable and otherwise, and the fame already enjoyed by Oscar Wilde was considerably increased. This play has served as a starring vehicle on the legitimate stage for such actresses as Lillian Russell and Margaret Anglin.

"Spark Divine" to Feature Alice Joyce.

With the first anouncement of a new Alice Joyce offering last week, to be released the end of June, a veritable flood of reservations and inquiries poured into the various Vitagraph branch offices. More detailed information coming from the Brooklyn plant of Vitagraph, where the picture is being made, disclosed the fact that it is a production especially written for Miss Joyce, and will be called "The Spark Divine." It is a small-cast offering, therein insuring not only Miss Joyce extended opportunities, but likewise giving a greater dramatic scope to those in her support.

Five persons comprise the cast, these being, besides Miss Joyce, Eulalie Jensen, Frank Norcross, William Carlton, Jr., and Mary Carr.

"The Spark Divine" was written by Alicia Ramsey and put into scenario form by George D. Broctor. It will be directed by Tom Terriss.

Milton Sills Selected as Leading Man.

Pauline Frederick's choice of leading men seems to have settled on Milton Sills, who is to appear opposite her in her next Goldwyn Picture. He has just finished with her in "The Fear Woman." Miss Frederick says that, speaking of leading men, she likes them tall and Grecian, and apparently Mr. Sills suits the requirements.

The Story.

Damophilia Illington is the daughter of an aged Greek scholar in "Phil-for-Short." The girl is forced to do work in the garden in overalls in order to support her father, whose learning has brought him no wealth. "Phil," as she calls herself, is subjected to criticism because of her unconventional apparel.

Just after her father's death, Donald McWrath, the village banker, assumes guardianship over Phil, whom he really wishes to marry. The girl flees from the village, accompanied by Pat Mehan, an old employe of her father's. Phil, while a runaway, dresses as a boy and chances upon John Alden, who teaches Greek in a nearby college.

Alden is attracted by the supposed youth, because of his knowledge of Greek, and invites Phil to call on him. The latter then dresses as a girl and applies for a position as assistant teacher of Greek at the college. She pretends to be a sister of the youth who talked with Alden.

Alden has been jilted in a former love affair and hates the fair sex, but in the course of the story Phil marries him, or Alden rather marries the girl after unwittingly compromising her. The girl then sets out to make Alden really care for her, which she accomplishes with no little difficulty. She wins her husband's love and at the same time makes a fool of a violinist of flirting proclivities.

"The Divorce Trap"

Gladys Brockwell Is Featured in Picture by Fox with a Big Climax.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE seamy side of life, and it is very seamy, is the background of the Fox picture, "The Divorce Trap," five reels. Gladys Brockwell has the lead as the wife whom a scoundrelly young husband "frames up," so that he can get an adultery charge and a divorce. This sweet-smelling character is about as yellow a villain as the pictures have ever portrayed. His rich father is no saint, but when he finds out what his son has done, he kicks him out of the house, and it is the most satisfying scene in the film.

If the character of this individual is not pleasant, the way he is shown up and given justice is, and the popularity of the picture is sure. That last act, in which the woman's lawyer works his case up before the judge at the trial, has real punch. Miss Brockwell shows her skill in picturing various emotions all through the film. Francis Macdonald, as the despicable husband, does what is required of him well. They are ably supported. Frank Beal has directed a most telling act in the trial scene, and has kept the whole picture effective.

"High Time We Put This Over," Says Louis Bennison in "High Pockets."
Not much high-larity in this Betzwood-Goldwyn. It's all serious business.

Louis Bennison's Next Film Is "High Pockets"

THE newest Goldwyn-Betzwood picture starring Louis Bennison is entitled "High Pockets." It will be released by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation on July 1.

Once more Bennison portrays a cowboy; as usual his vehicle for this presentation is a strong story of the West. Opposite Bennison is a new Betzwood star, Katherine MacDonald, a beauty of the highland type.

"High Pockets" follows on "The Road Called Straight," which continues to gather momentum with each showing. As in this picture, the smiling cowboy star gives in "High Pockets" the same vital and sensitive interpretation of the soul of the cowboy—which, as Benison himself says, is the soul of the West.

The production is rich in scenic environment and no expense has been spared in the production.

Riesenfeld's Theme-Sheet Adds to Power of "Sahara"

THE musical genius of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York, is still further revealed in the theme-sheet prepared by him for J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, production, "Sahara," starring Louise Glaum in a C. Gardner Sullivan story personally supervised by Allan Dwan and distributed by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

For days before a superb mounting of "Sahara" at a special trade showing at the Rialto Theatre, Dr. Riesenfeld worked on the scoring of this production.

"Sahara" possesses the color, the warmth, the atmospheric seductiveness to appeal to the creative talents of a musician. Its initial scenes laid in Paris, the story of "Sahara" quickly shifts to mystic Cairo and to the Desert of Sahara, where two men and one woman work out their destiny in a drama of great emotional intensity.

Nigel De Brullier Ideally Cast.

One of the important roles in "Sahara," J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, drama, starring Louise Glaum, is in the capable hands of Nigel De Brullier, prominent for his many fine screen characterizations. With the face of a dreamer and idealist, De Brullier is admirably fitted for the character of Mustapha, the Hindu philosopher. He shows uncommon skill with several of the dominating scenes with the star. De Brullier also proved a valuable aid to Allan Dwan, who supervised the production of the C. Gardner Sullivan story. Having only recently returned from a tour of the world, De Brullier gave freely of his knowledge of Cairo, Egypt, for many of the important scenes in "Sahara."

"Leave It to Susan" Goes Over Big at the Strand

THE most successful Madge Kennedy picture that has appeared at the Strand Theatre, New York, since the inception of the Kennedy contract with Goldwyn, is "Leave it to Susan"; that is if the reception of the picture during the early part of this week can be taken as a criterion on the rest of the performances.

The Sunday attendance at The Strand was phenomenal, according to box office reports, and the reception of the Goldwyn picture was truly remarkable. A dramatic portrayal, a little unusual for a Madge Kennedy part, was not warranted to evoke interjections of applause, although it was expected that the public would like the picture, despite a lack of physical manifestation of enthusiasm.

Territory Selling Fast on New Bull's Eye Series

MILTON L. COHEN, president of Bull's Eye Film Corporation, announced that territory is selling rapidly on the series of ten Napoleon and Sally one-reel comedies featuring these Selig monkeys.

Among the exchanges purchasing these rights are the following: Standard Film Service, Cleveland, O.; Fontenelle Feature Film Company, of Omaha; Liberty Film Renting Company, of Pittsburgh, and Capital Film Service Company, of Washington, D. C.

"These little pictures are precisely what I described them to be," said President Cohen. "They are clean, straightforward comedies, in which Napoleon and Sally accomplish almost impossible results in the comedy line. These films have a universal appeal and will make money for the exhibitor."

Production Now at Full Speed in Selznick Studios

PRODUCTION is now going at full blast in the Selznick studios in New York, to which the company recently moved, and the organization is now in smooth running order with the power to turn out plays in rapid fire order. With Eugene O'Brien already well under way on "The Perfect Lover" in which he will make his first appearance as a star, under the direction of Ralph Ince; Elaine Hammerstein ready to start work on "Love or Fame?", her first Selznick starring vehicle, and Olive Thomas about to begin the production of her next picture, Myron Selznick announces that by the end of the week with the three stars and their companies working, the Selznick studio will certainly be among the busiest in the country.

Sets of all sizes and description are already being erected on the floor of the studio and the technical director with a staff of carpenters, property men, painters, decorators and workmen of all kinds are busy on plans for various structures and interiors. A whole foreign street has been built in the studio to satisfy the demand for realism.

The script for "Love or Fame?" has been completed and the production of the story will be started at once. It is a story of the footlights.

Within a day or two Olive Thomas will also begin work on a new production, the title and subject of which has not yet been announced, but which will be known in a few days.

"A Rogue's Romance" Heads Vitagraph's June List

VITAGRAPH will inaugurate its schedule of June releases with "A Rogue's Romance," a breezy play of adventure, starring Earle Williams. The play deals with the final law-breaking escapade of Mons. Picard, a character similar to Arsene Lupin. A delightful romance develops when this cultured society thief finds his automobile has gone "dead" on him, and he is in sore need of a speedy vehicle to replace it in order to escape the secret police of Paris, who are at last hot upon his trail.

Mr. William's leading woman again is Katherine Adams and notable among his support are Brinsley Shaw, Harry Van Meter, Herbert Standing, Maude George and Karl Formes.

"Beauty Proof" is a Curwood Play.

James Oliver Curwood will again be represented on the screen in the coming month, when "Beauty Proof," the Vitagraph production with Harry T. Morey, reaches the screen. "Beauty Proof" has been scheduled for release June 23. It is a story of the Canadian Northwest and combines all the virility and inventiveness which one has come to expect of Mr. Curwood.

Lytle Books the Big Ones.

W. J. Lytle, manager of San Antonio's big three, the Royal, Empire and Princess theatres, has returned from Dallas to map out strong exploitation campaigns on two big Hodkinson releases, "Thunderbolts of Fate," starring House Peters, and Augustus Thomas' absorbing Four Star drama, "As a Man Thinks," starring Leah Baird. Manager Lytle viewed both productions at the Hodkinson Dallas office and immediately booked them for his Empire and Princess theatres.

in New York, and they have to cook up an adultery charge. Drake sends a friend to tell Eleanor that Drake is sick in a hotel room. This man gets her there and locks the door. Drake, with a witness, breaks in.

Eleanor's one-time lover is an employe of the divorce lawyer, and when she comes to protest that she has been "framed," he overhears the conversation, throws up his job, and undertakes to defend Eleanor. Eleanor has told her story to Drake's rich father, who knows his son well enough to believe it. He kicks the villain out of his house.

A scrap of paper has been found that proves that the scheming woman had a part in the conspiracy to besmirch Eleanor's reputation. This serves to scare the hotel clerk into confessing, and this provides more evidence. Little by little, the charge of conspiracy against the lawyer who promised the divorce and all concerned in it, is substantiated. It is kept back till the trial, and in the last act, is slowly produced, to the gradual but complete discomfiture of the rogues.

COMMENTS

Fox Film Company.

VIRTUOUS HUSBANDS (Fox Sunshine Comedy), May 25.—Another hit as a laughmaker. Has an astonishing amount of fresh matter and witty subtitles that add much to the fun. The picture is not describable, but we can say that it is a sure thing as an entertainment.

Pathe.

PISTOLS FOR BREAKFAST (Rolin-Pathe), June 8.—A comic number, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. Two hoboes forcibly exchange clothes with the men, who then ride the bumpers of a freight train to the next station. There are some fairly humorous situations in this, but it is hardly up to the average production by this company.

DANGER AHEAD (Pathe), June 8.—Chapter 8 of "The Tiger's Trail." Jack rescues Belle from the cave filled with water, over which burning oil has been poured. Belle hides a stranger, who is fleeing from the law, but claims to be innocent. In return, the stranger obtains for her the "Pact of Three," in a dramatic manner. The number winds up with the fall of an auto over a cliff. This is full of stirring action.

SWAT THE CROOK (Rolin-Pathe).—A comedy number, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. This is a characteristic knockabout subject. It pictures the adventures of a penniless young man, who finds himself in a house full of crooks. The scenes are amusing.

Universal Film Company.

A LEAP FOR LIFE (Universal), May 12.—This chapter of the "Red Glove," No. 9, repeats the jump made by Billie from the oil derrick to the roof of a nearby house. Billie learns from Mason North that she has inherited a fortune and that her real name is Willa Murdaugh. Before going to claim the fortune she has further exciting tilts with Wiley over the Red Glove and narrowly escapes death from an explosion of T.N.T. on a barge where she had taken refuge. The interest of the serial holds up well.

OUT OF DEATH'S SHADOW (Universal), May 19.—Chapter 10 of "The Red Glove." After the explosion of T.N.T. on the barge Billie swims with her rescuer to safety. She goes to claim her fortune and meets her cousins, the Halsteads, who give her a rather cool reception, since she is dressed in overalls. Later she appears in feminine clothes. Wiley determines to marry Billie, and this brings the enmity of her cousin, Angelica Halstead. The plot developments are interesting. The number closes with an exciting auto plunge from a high cliff into the sea.

LAY OFF! (Star Comedy), March 17.—Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appear in this jangled love affair, with Gertrude Astor and Mildred Moore. There is a jealous wife, and a brother who is alarmed about his sister's reputation. The complications are not extremely laughable, but carry good entertainment for so slight a plot.

THE BLACK HOUSE BANDIT (Western), March 15.—Helen Gibson appears in this two-reel subject as the daughter of a sheriff. Her father is murdered and she successfully undertakes the task of bringing his murderer to justice. The action of this number is good and contains considerable suspense. The cast is also generally appealing and the Western scenic effects are good.

HOME RUN BILL, March 17.—This number shows "Smiling Billy" Mason as a waiter in a boarding house. The meat-eaters and vegetarians meet on the baseball diamond. There are amusing moments, but the plot is very thin and the incidents are scattered.

RIDING WILD (Western), March 23.—A two-reel story of the West, featuring Helen Gibson, Leo Maloney and others. The girl is the daughter of a bandit leader and the hero a secret service man. There is not much suspense in the action, but the number contains some fine riding and a great deal of picturesque scenery. The continuity is too uneven to get the strongest dramatic effects.

THE SMELL OF THE YUKON (Star Comedy), March 24.—An amusing burlesque subject, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Mildred Moore. The principal scenes occur in a dance hall, where Eddie plays the ukelele and Lee appears as a "bad" man. Rivalry over the girls brings on some quite laughable mixups.

HIS BUDDY (Western), March 29—A two-reel Western subject, written by George C. Hall, featuring Pete Morrison, "Hoot" Gibson and Yvette Mitchell. The action centers about the efforts of the elder brother, who is sheriff, to save the younger from a lynching, the latter having been falsely accused of shooting a girl. In this he is successful. There are some good scenic effects in this, and the story, while not extremely dramatic, is very entertaining. It makes a good subject of its kind.

New York City

Gentlemen-

Enclosed please find draft for $7 for which you will please send me the book "Modern Theatre Construction" and also The Motion Picture Handbook.

Trusting that I may receive these two books as soon as possible, with best wishes,

Yours very truly

Henry C. Stearns
Stearns Theatre.

N.B.

I have been using the Moving Picture World since 1908. In that time I have managed from a two hundred and fifty seat "store show" to the splendid Isis Theatre in Houston and now my own five hundred seat house in Kingsville, and I have found your publication to be equally invaluable to the manager of the small house or the large--to the inexperienced or the veteran.

I acknowledge my debt to the Moving Picture World, may she live long and prosper.

A personal word to my Brother Projectionists—

I have been through the mill and know all about the operating room troubles due to uneven and excessive film tension. You know this, too, and now I want you to know that you can cut out all this trouble by using my Even Tension Reel which I have successfully used in my own operating room for nearly two years before offering it to you. Tell the Boss it will pay for itself two or three times a year in the saving in lower sprockets, besides reducing other wear and tear. I give you my word as a Brother Projectionist that this is true. You will be amazed at the light, even tension. Just try a couple. They're guaranteed.

Fraternally yours,
Gove S. Boylan.

United Theatre Equipment Company,
57 Elizabeth St. E.,
Detroit, Mich.

Gentlemen:

Please enter my order for two Powers 6-B Machines for the Alhambra Theatre, as I am anixous to continue to use the Powers Machine exclusively in the various houses which I control.

I have been using Powers Projection Machines since 1905, and although on two or three occasions I changed to machines of other makes, I have always returned to the Powers, as I find it to be the strongest, most economical and best projection machine, as it has ever been my pleasure to use.

Rest assured, that so long as the Powers Machine is as good as it has been for the past fourteen years, I shall continue to use the Powers Projection Machine exclusively at all houses which I control.

Yours very truly,

J. H. Kunsky

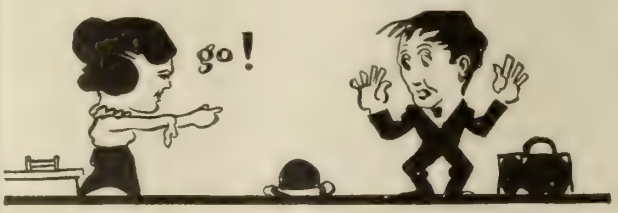
Triangle Special Presentation

I

Said Mrs. Pim, "You're very nice—
But marriage is no paradise.
It dwarfs me like a stunted tree;
I must have freedom, don't you see?"

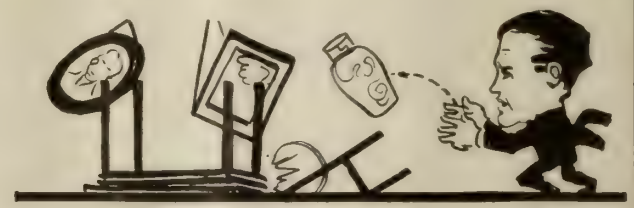


III

Beds and pictures, tables and chairs!
And all the furniture up the stairs,
Pim turned about and inside-out;
Precedents he had to rout.

II

To faithful Pim who loved his wife,
It was the jolt of his young life.
He was completely at a loss
To find a reason for divorce.



IV

But "Blessings brighten in their flight."
As soon as Pim was out of sight
His wife she wished for his return;
Oh! Fickle woman—how she did yearn!

V

Poor hubby; habits had to break. But then his fortune he did make.
He became a chap of great renown.

We Can Help You Lose Money ———and Make You Like It!

¶ Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, managing director of the Rialto theatre, New York City, when asked by a reporter of the New York Morning Telegraph, how the Essanay-Chaplin revivals were going in his theatre, replied: ¶ "ALAS WE HAVE LOST MONEY—BECAUSE THE RIALTO HAS NOT A THOUSAND MORE SEATS." ¶ That has been the experience of exhibitors all over the United States, in large houses and small. ¶ Do you want to lose money in this way? Then book the four Essanay-Chaplin revivals, "A NIGHT IN THE SHOW," "THE BANK," "POLICE" and "SHANGHAIED." ¶ They are the funniest of all the Charlie Chaplin comedies and new prints are now offered for the first time. Try to get them at once at any World Film Exchange.

Here's the Very Note

THE note to play on for "An Innocent Adventuress" is the decided charm of Vivian Martin in appealing stories, stories that do not involve the fate of the League of Nations nor argue about the curse of Bolshevikism.

Just simple heart-interest, human stories of love and adventure.

"An Innocent Adventuress" is one of them. You'll like it and your patrons will too.

Tom Moore tells us—

There are about 331,000 people in Washington, 96,698 paid admissions to the Rialto in 2 weeks' run. That means about 1/3 of all the folks in town saw "Daddy Long Legs" at the first run.

That's a pretty good showing, Tom, say we. Much obliged for the figures.

P. S.—Of course you know Tom—he's the big, Washington, D. C., Exhibitor and owner of the First National franchise for his territory.

Joe Plunkett saved money this way—

When he ran "Daddy Long Legs" at the Strand, N. Y., he cut out some of his singers and a comedy because he knew Mary Pickford's greatest picture was a whole show by itself.

Which goes to show that "Daddy" is a money-maker in more ways than one.

In the selection of the above insignia as my trade-mark I have been governed by a desire to make it mean something more than merely the necessary stamp for commercial protection.

I want this trade-mark to represent the collective signature of myself and organization as affixed to a guarantee. A guarantee that the production so marked has attained or surpassed the standard set by ''Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm'', ''Stella Maris'', ''M'Liss'', ''The Unpardonable Sin'', and ''Daddy Long Legs.''

In the past it has been the custom of producing organizations to carelessly and indiscriminately place their trade-mark on productions whether good, bad or indifferent. Such practice has caused the average trade-mark to mean nothing to the exhibitor or public insofar as quality is concerned. This latter condition is the very thing I want to avoid and in order to establish and conserve the integrity of the above trade-mark it will be my policy not to release any production falling below the aforementioned standard.

A Message About

ADVERTISING

FROM THE

U. S. Department of Labor

IF you are not advertising, then advertise, because it saves money for you and it reduces the price to the consumer.

Advertising prevents profiteering. It insures honest profits and makes them permanent.

The message of the U. S. Department of Labor to merchants and manufacturers and to all progressive American business men is to advertise.

Tell the public about your goods. The consumer has plenty of money. He is willing to spend it, and we want him to spend it on American-made products. The easiest, quickest, and most economical way in which this can be accomplished is by advertising.

Start your campaign right now.

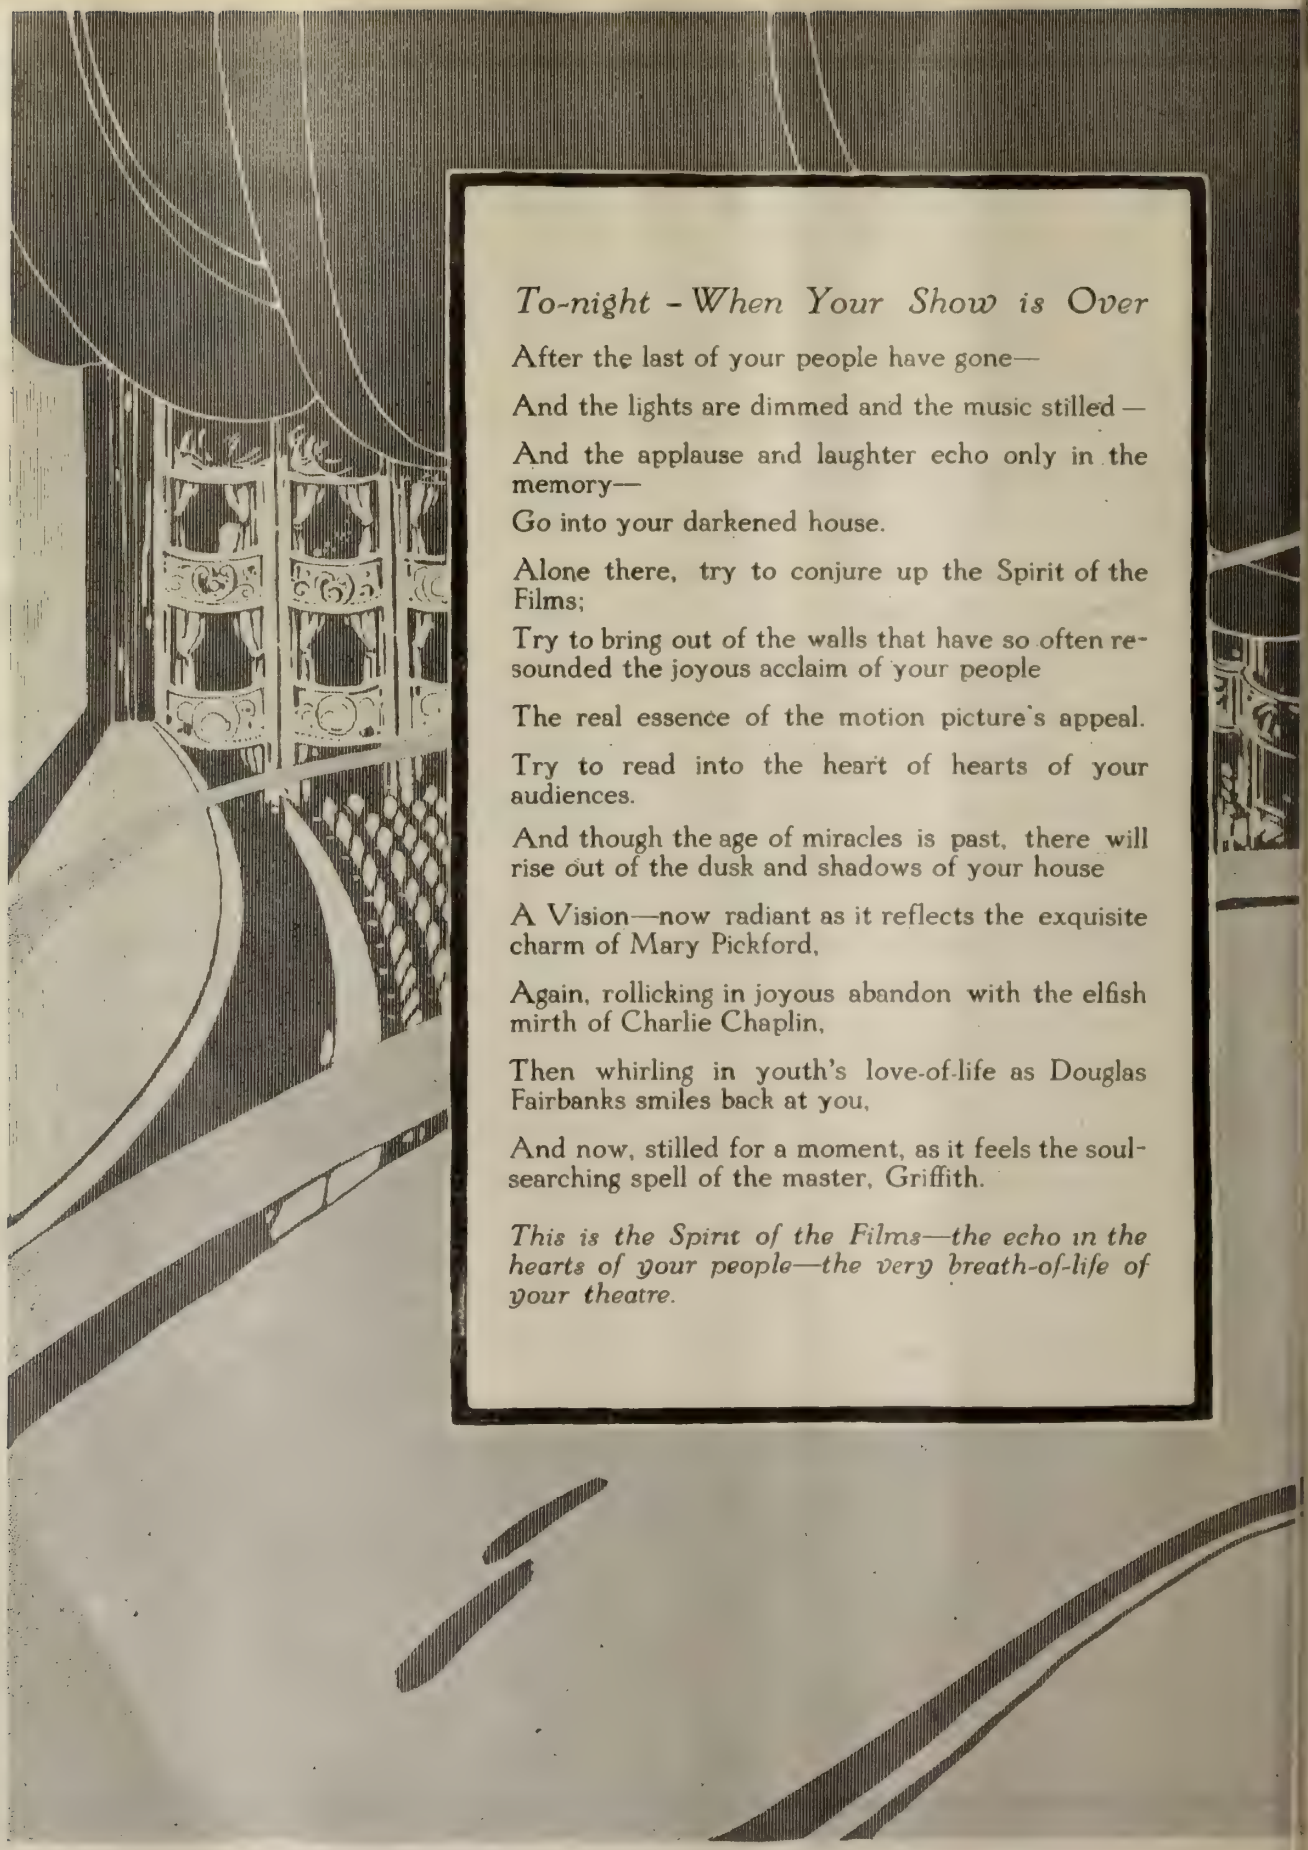
U. S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

ROGER W. BABSON,
Director General

Information and Education Service
W. B. WILSON, Secretary

Right now is the time to keep American-made products to the front. Advertise what you have to sell. Through advertising you extend and strengthen your own business and greatly help to increase American manufacturing. The exhibitor is in constant need of equipment and accessories. He wants to know what the markets present, and reads the trade paper advertisements for this information, because he has learned from experience to buy advertised goods if he wants reliable and good goods.

As a medium for advertising to the moving picture industry, we would like to say for the MOVING PICTURE WORLD it has what every conservative and experienced buyer of advertising space requires of a publication--QUALITY CIRCULATION, plus quantity. The net paid weekly circulation of the WORLD is much larger than the entire edition of any other paper in the moving picture business. When you consider this (and it is true) you will agree that advertising in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the best buy you can make.



To-night - When Your Show is Over

After the last of your people have gone—

And the lights are dimmed and the music stilled —

And the applause and laughter echo only in the memory—

Go into your darkened house.

Alone there, try to conjure up the Spirit of the Films;

Try to bring out of the walls that have so often resounded the joyous acclaim of your people

The real essence of the motion picture's appeal.

Try to read into the heart of hearts of your audiences.

And though the age of miracles is past, there will rise out of the dusk and shadows of your house

A Vision—now radiant as it reflects the exquisite charm of Mary Pickford,

Again, rollicking in joyous abandon with the elfish mirth of Charlie Chaplin,

Then whirling in youth's love-of-life as Douglas Fairbanks smiles back at you,

And now, stilled for a moment, as it feels the soul-searching spell of the master, Griffith.

This is the Spirit of the Films—the echo in the hearts of your people—the very breath-of-life of your theatre.

MEXICO OBJECTS TO FILMS OF SQUALOR

Dissatisfied with Cameramen Who Take Pictures of Poor Conditions Only for Foreign Exhibition

DISPATCHES received in Washington from Mexico City declare that the Mexican Government is dissatisfied with the manner in which motion picture photographs have been made in that country, ostensibly for the purpose of showing, in other countries, the conditions that now exist in Mexico. It is declared that these pictures do not portray average conditions in the country, but that the photographers travel about, seeking the worst conditions they can find, and compose their films entirely of such pictures. Efforts are to be made to stop this practice, it is declared, and the Government will place restrictions about the taking of pictures, if necessary, to make sure that the country is given fair treatment.

Price of Palm Beach Suits Goes Up in Washington

EXHIBITORS of Washington, D. C., who are desirous of having their musicians appear in tuxedos or, in the summer, in palm beach suits, will have to pay $2 a week a man for that extra bit of service. The musicians have recently presented a new wage scale to the managers to sign and this provision is included together with increased rates of pay.

Hereafter the theatres that are open all day will have to pay their men $40 a week, the leader getting $58 a week. Formerly the salaries were $50 for the leader and $35 for the men. The day is one of six hours and the union requires that one-fifth of the actual play time shall be for rest. The night houses are those requiring but four hours of play, subject, of course, to the same provision, of one-fifth of the time for rest. They are to pay $23 a man for a six-day week, and increase of $3 over the old scale, while the leader is to get $34 instead of $28. Where the men are to play on Sundays for six hours, the pay is to be $7 a man additional, giving the men $30 a week and the leader $41. Extra matines of three hours each are to be charged for at the rate of $3 each, instead of $2 in the old schedule.

Building Trades Call on Texas Operators to Quit

THE Dallas moving picture operators' union has been asked to strike by members of the buildings trade craft, who are out 3,000 strong in protest against the Texas Light and Power Company.

The building crafts say that the moving picture operators are using power for their machines, sold by the electric light company against whom they are striking. They therefore demand that the operators walk out. The operators during the coming week will vote on the matter.

The strike is general over North Texas. At Denison the town was put in darkness by the walk-out of electrical workers. All business houses cut out their light meters and used lamps and candles. By special dispensation the picture shows were allowed to use power to operate their machines, since the labor unions said the people could not do without amusement. The electric lights in the picture shows were ordered off, however. In Dallas preparations are being made by some of the showmen to work non-union operators if the walk-out comes. Trouble is expected.

World Was the "Old Bible" Now It's "New Testament"

Had the exhibitors of Texas been content to call the Moving Picture World the "Old Bible," the World would have been indeed satisfied with that splendid tribute to its veracity and high standard.

But the exhibitors of Dallas went a step further. Now they call the World the "New Testament" for reasons shown in this final paragraph from a letter from Leon S. Gohlman, manager of the Rex Theatre, Dallas, Texas, on the subject of open booking, which will be printed in full next week:

"And just one thing more. The Moving Picture World used to be called the Old Bible among us fellows down here. We've changed our term the last few months. With all the snappy ideas and good promotion stories you've been publishing, we call it the New Testament. Keep up the good work. We're for you strong."

It is the Gospel truth: the World moves on.

Stork Sans Bells Jarred; So Stuart Inserted Wedding

TWO horrified old ladies called on Manager Herschel Stuart when "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" was screened at Dallas' Queen Theatre late in May. They objected to the appearance of Old Doctor Stork in the story without the preliminary jingle of wedding bells.

"I'll marry 'em tonight," Herschel Stuart declared.

Hunting up a film with a good old-fashioned wedding scene, Stuart chopped it out and inserted it in the picture. Thus with the film baby given the full benefit of the clergy not even the most prudish could object.

The wedding made no difference to the plot of the story and lots of folks thought it improved it.

St. Louis Expects Crowded Exhibitors' Convention

THE national convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors, to be held in St. Louis, June 25-28, is expected to bring to this city a throng of representatives of the moving picture houses in the United States. Assurance to this effect has been given by Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu, manager of the Congress Theatre, who has also given a written endorsement of the campaign of the St. Louis Convention and Publicity Bureau to increase its annual budget to $100,000 in order to aid in getting more conventions for St. Louis.

"This convention has advertised and will advertise St. Louis more than any other gathering," Mr. Pasmezaglu says. "Motion pictures will be made of the convention and will be shown in theatres throughout the United States, giving this city publicity that will be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars."

"Huckleberry Finn" To Be Screened by Famous Players

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will picturize Mark Twain's "Huckleberry Finn," in the form of a big special production, with a large cast of picked players. Work will be started at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, in about two weeks, under the direction of William D. Taylor, who directed the Paramount picture, "Tom Sawyer" and "Huck and Tom," as well as several productions in which Mary Pickford was starred for Artcraft.

Julia Crawford Ivers, who did so fine a bit of work in the translation of the first two Twain stories to the screen, is writing the scenario of "Huckleberry Finn."

Preparations for the exterior scenes are being made, for the picture is largely an outdoor one.

Since the Buck bill was placed on the calendar for second reading Friday, May 23, no further action on its disposal has been taken in the House at Springfield. FILM MAGNATES TO ATTEND DINNER

Cohen, O'Reilly, and Berman Will Be Honored at Waldorf-Astoria for Services to Exhibitors

THE number of exhibitors who have signified their intention of attending the dinner that is to be tendered to Messrs. Cohen, O'Reilly and Berman on Wednesday evening, June 18, at the Waldorf-Astoria as a testimonial for their efforts in securing proper legislation permitting the exhibition of pictures on Sundays, has reached such numbers as to insure the affair success.

The committee feels that the exhibitors have overlooked the fact that for the first time women will be welcomed to the affair. Tickets for seats at the banquet tables can be procured at the same price as those for the exhibitors. This will entitle them to participate in the dance that is to be given after the dinner without any additional cost. To the women who will occupy box seats and not participate in the banquet a charge of $2.50 for tickets will obtain. All application for seats or tables should be made to Louis F. Blumenthal, 1587 Broadway.

Many Stars to Be Present.

It can be said at this writing that no convention ever held in which the industry was concerned showed such an array of stars as will be in evidence at the Waldorf-Astoria on the evening of June 18. Some of the best known celebrities are coming from California, so it would seem that distance offers no obstacle to making this gathering the most representative ever known. Many prominent producers are already on the list.

Exhibitors from distant states will be here to pay tribute to the men who have done a vital service for the entire industry.

The entertainment committee is hard at work creating new diversions; not one surprise, but a half dozen, will complete the program that is to make this dinner a remembrance for years to come.

New Wage Scale Boosts Washington's Operator Pay

UNDER the new union wage scale that went into effect on May 26, motion picture operators of Washington, D. C., get a substantial increase for they have demanded 80 cents an hour as against 60 cents an hour in the previous schedule. Another requirement is that three journeymen operators must be employed in all houses having a seating capacity in excess of 500, running more than 8 hours a day. Formerly these houses employed two journeymen and two helpers.

The new schedule provides that one operator on any regular evening's run of five hours or less, shall be paid not less than $25 a week, with Sunday matinee included if run. All extra matinees are to be paid for at the rate of 80 cents an hour. On Sunday or on other days where matinees are run, one hour relief must be furnished the operator at the exhibitor's expense. If the exhibitor requires the operator to work because of inability to furnish a relief operator, the former is to receive an extra 80 cents.

All work in houses running eight hours or more per day is to be paid for at the rate of $45 a week. All single performances outside of regular moving picture theatres will hereafter cost not less than $7 if the machine is set up and $10 if the operator has to set the machine up. Two performances in one day will cost $15.

Houses other than regular picture theatres using pictures as part of their programs will have to pay $50 where one operator is employed and $45 a week where two operators are employed. The carrying of films and posters to the exchanges by operators is to be paid for by the theatres at the same rate as operating—80 cents an hour.

All screenings for theatre managers must be paid for at the rate of 50 cents a reel, while exchange managers desiring similar privileges will have to pay 75 cents a reel. One effect of this charge will be to cut down the number of private exhibitions or screenings in advance of play dates.

All work in excess of eight hours must be treated as overtime and paid for at the rate of $1.20 an hour. Operators in open air parks are to be paid not less than $17 a week, with no deductions to be made for rainy days.

Australian Film Man Pays Visit to San Francisco

W. BARRINGTON MILLER, for six years managing director of the Union Theatres of Australia, was in San Francisco recently from Sydney and spoke enthusiastically of the future of the industry in the Antipodes. Mr. Miller has had active control of a large moving picture corporation. For a long time he virtually controlled the exhibiting business in Australia and made many purchases that set the pace for film prices. He bought the Australian rights to "Quo Vadis" for $3,000, considered a high price at the time, and this proved to be one of the greatest of film successes, running for eleven weeks at Melbourne and ten weeks at Sydney, surpassing all records for gross receipts. The rights for such a picture cannot now be had for less than $20,000, illustrating how film figures have changed in the past five years. The most successful picture he ever handled was Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," which ran for fifteen weeks. Another big success in Australia was "Les Miserables."

Mr. Miller states that in Australia, which has a population of about 5,000,000, there are more than one thousand moving picture houses, with the number gradually increasing. Sydney, which has a population, with its suburbs, of about one million, has two hundred theatres, while Melbourne, with a population of almost as much, has one hundred and fifty houses.

The production of moving pictures is commencing there and Mr. Miller is enthusiastic over the possibilities. A studio has been opened by Reginald L. (Snowy) Baker, the athlete, who was in San Francisco a few months ago, and his first production, "The Lure of the Bush," has been completed.

Indiana Mayor Rescinds "Blue Laws"; Pastors Oppose

WITH exhibitors, city officials and others on one side and the ministerial association and its followers on the other, an interesting fight is being waged at Hartford City, Ind., over the mayor's recent action in rescinding the old "blue laws" that had been in effect there for some time.

An affidavit charging F. D. Walters, proprietor of the Orpheum Theatre, with desecrating the Sabbath was filed before the Blackford county prosecutor on Monday, May 19, by the Rev. M. M. Dunbar, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, and the Rev. G. F. Sheldon, pastor of the Presbyterian church, because he operated his theatre on Sunday, May 18.

When the case was called in the city court on May 26, the committee of ministers pushing the prosecution asked Prosecutor Pursley to dismiss the case so that it can be refiled in the Blackford county circuit court. The ministers, it was said, did not like the veniremen that were being summoned in the court and, sensing an unfavorable decision, moved to dismiss.

Opened According to Law.

The opening of the theatre by Walters followed the action of Mayor McAtee in rescinding the so-called blue laws that had been in vogue there for several months. McAtee, acting on what he thought was public sentiment, not only rescinded former orders, but threw down the bars altogether, thus paving the way for concerns of practically every character to operate on Sunday if they so desired.

Walters operated his motion picture show again on Sunday, May 25, and a second affidavit was filed against him, but to date no action has been taken in the case. Sunday shows have been taboo in Hartford City for many years.

LOCAL OPTION BEST BOOKING PLAN

That's the Opinion of Harry Raver, Who Says for the First Time in Years Exhibitor Is Having His Day in Court—Decision Should Rest with Showman

By Harry Raver

IT is interesting to note that important motion picture distributors are striving to outdo each other in establishing final analysis of the open market. For the first time in years the exhibitor is having his day in court.

Every reform movement instituted, every remedy offered, aim at a single target: the man who operates a theatre. The exhibitor, still bearing the scars of recent wounds, looks on good-naturedly, as usual, and follows his own judgment, feeling that when each side has had its say in the debate he will have added to his store of information sufficiently to influence his future operations in a way that will benefit him.

J. D. Williams, erstwhile champion of open market bookings, has suddenly become a convert to star series distribution and now condemns the individual picture, sold on its merits, as an element of danger to the exhibitor. United Artists declare there shall be no bookings of the Big Four product except singly, each production to stand on its merits. Both methods have champions among the exhibitors and both present disadvantages.

Star Series and Its Workings.

Star series bookings involve series contracts with producers who engage their stars accordingly. The customary form of contract between producer and distributor has to do with advance payments, guarantees or outright purchases. In most cases fixed sums are involved.

After contracts are signed, A sets out to make a series of productions for B to distribute and says: "Now I have to make six productions for B, and I get blank dollars advanced to me on each one. I know what my star will cost, what my advertising expense will be and I must make each of my productions to cost not to exceed so much."

Thus A fixes his negative cost, usually before he has purchased his six stories or knows their requirements in the matter of expense. Suppose his predetermined negative cost be $50,000. To exceed this amount would mean breaking a rule established in advance, yet his story might demand an expenditure of $100,000 to do it full justice. He is likely to make the picture for less than $50,000 if he can, but his mind is fixed on six productions and the amount of his advances, and he becomes mechanical. The exhibitor books these pictures "blind" and thinks he is being "protected" from his competitor.

Exhibitor Should Have Option.

On the other hand, the distributor who offers his product on the open market, at either a fixed price or to the highest bidder, or on sharing terms based on the receipts, may, as Mr. Williams truly states, serve a competitive exhibitor with succeeding pictures of the same star, depending upon the price offered.

It would seem, however, that the producer whose pictures are made exclusively for public appreciation, who is willing to bring his story to life without previously counting the cost and who is more concerned in his audience than his distributor, should not commit himself to either star series bookings or individual bookings. The matter is simply one of local option with the exhibitor. If he finds an advantage in long distance contracts, why deprive him of his privileges?

Some Exhibitors Want to See Pictures.

One man, to my knowledge, paid $16,000 in advance rentals for a series of certain star pictures because he saved $2,000 by paying cash. He was a business man, not a showman. There are a great many exhibitors who prefer to be relieved of the annoyance of selecting their programs as they go along, from week to week. They prefer to operate their theatres with as little effort as possible. But there is an increasingly important element representing the showmen of the country which prefers to analyze the picture itself—star or no star—before jeopardizing a theatre clientele, built up through years of effort and expense. These men do not look upon the picture industry as a real estate proposition, which the legitimate theatre has come to be, but believe in satisfying the public by providing the sort of entertainment most desired.

Everybody Has an Axe to Grind.

When Four Star Productions were contracted for by W. W. Hodkinson's Corporation and J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., the producer agreed upon a local option policy of distribution based upon quality. There were no strings tied to the agreement. It has proved eminently satisfactory to all parties concerned.

The exhibitor is about to reap the rewards of long suffering and patient observation. Every man who deals importantly in motion pictures is determined to bring distribution to an equitable basis. The discussion precipitated is at least interesting, since nearly everybody has an axe to grind and from this conflict must evolve many glittering gems of truth.

THE present system of booking films as practised by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Paramount, Metro, and other of the larger film concerns in this country will never be banished. Exhibitors throughout the United States want the series contract as their protection against competitors, and I predict that if they do not secure a contract of that nature they will not book films on the new plan if companies are still serving on the system now in common use.

J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is right. I have read with interest his article in your magazine, and I must state that he should be congratulated upon the stand he has taken. Mr. Williams has taken a peep into the heart of the American exhibitor.

Hitherto the exhibitor has proudly pointed out that he has a contract for Mary Pickford, D. W. Griffith, Constance Talmadge, Norma Talmadge, or Charlie Chaplin productions. It would mean a loss of real money if his competitor possessed that contract. Prestige would also be lost for his house, for films featuring these stars mean pleased patrons —the best advertisement a house can ever secure.

Suppose there were a star known little in this city. One of the larger houses made him a real box office "result getter" in his district by extensive advertising and other costly means. Under the new "single picture" system the competing theatre could snatch his productions from the house that spent so much to gain for him a local reputation.

Will exhibitors stand for this deliberate infringement on their rights? Will we risk every dollar invested in our business without making one of the biggest fights an American industry has ever known? No! We are not fools. More practically we demand he be tied with a good thick rope.

The moving picture industry is aiming to make money, not to lose it. The new "single picture" system, as it has been stated has no contract except for a single picture at a time.

Now apply the iron test to the "single picture" booking system. Do they contract their stars as they ask us to contract our pictures? No. Their stars are contracted on a long time basis.

Then why do they wish us exhibitors to "kill the goose that laid the golden egg?" Because they think it might increase sales and benefit them? Well, it will not, as they will not rent as many films as they have hitherto under the old system.

If the new system be adopted the good feeling between exhibitors would be abolished. Exhibitors' meetings would generally end in fist fights, and exhibitors' leagues would be a farce. We do not wish this to happen. Our league is one which every local showman prides, and our meeting rooms, soon to be built, will be some of the finest in the country. Our rooms will become no prize rings.

This letter was not casually written. It was done deliberately and after consultation with my assistants and several men of local repute.

I have just read what J. D. Williams of First National says in your current issue about the dangers of a "single picture" system for booking the worthwhile stars, and I am certainly not in favor of the single picture policy for my theatre. It may be different for the big first-run theatres, but for the outlying houses like mine, the star series is what counts the most. My people become accustomed to seeing certain stars and go to see their pictures, no matter what they are. If I put out a special feature each time, I would be obliged to advertise more extensively, and go to far more trouble than I do at present. All I need to do is announce a certain star —and my crowd comes.

An article appearing in your journal on the "single picture" policy expressing the views of J. D. Williams, manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit on the subject and his championship of the star series contract, cannot be brought too strongly to the attention of exhibitors. I for one am heartily in favor of the plan as outlined by Mr. Williams and have always been in favor of the star series contract basis in booking attractions. In other words the First National policy of booking suits me.

The "single picture" booking policy, which many of the distributing firms contemplate doing will, in my opinion, destroy what little protection exhibitors have been enjoying in the past. To carry out the plans of these firms will destroy the most vital principle in the industry and leave the exhibitor at the mercy of the producers and distributors.

The First National's plan of booking independent, non-star attractions, such as "Auction of Souls" and "My Four Years in Germany" on the one-at-a-time basis is very attractive to me and should be enlarged on. At least one a month of these kind of attractions would suit me, as in the past they have proven to be money makers at my theatre.

Rupert Hughes Helps in Filming of Own Novel

"THE CUP OF FURY," the novel of American life at the most critical time in its history, which caught nation-wide attention in its recent publication in the Red Book, is to be the first picture to be screened by Eminent Authors' Pictures. "The Cup of Fury" is by Major Rupert Hughes.

This will be the first work of the organization of which Rex Beach is the president and Samuel Goldwyn chairman of the board. In accordance with the producer's policy, which enlists the co-operation of the author from beginning to the end of picture production, Rupert Hughes and the adapter, Anthony Paul Kelly, are now building the continuity for the story.

In "The Cup of Fury," Major Hughes has struck the bell in a theme of power that is intensely American in spirit. It is produced with the author making every possible contribution to its picturization. In enlisting the services of Anthony Paul Kelly, Major Hughes gains the point of view of a playwright whose "Three Faces East" is a striking theatrical success and whose work previous to playwriting was motion pictures.

DOUGHBOY WANTS SCREEN'S BEST

Homer Croy, Humorist and Globe Trotter, in Serious Mood Talks of the Great Mission of the Motion Picture Among Uncle Sam's Soldiers in Foreign Lands

By Homer Croy
Author of "How Motion Pictures Are Made"

THE observations of one just returned from nine months in France engaged in showing motion pictures to the troops may be of interest to those who have the same thing to face on this side!

My experience in France leads me to believe more firmly than ever in a growing future for motion pictures. It was a field of open competition. Everything that human ingenuity could devise in the way of entertainment was offered the boys. France was full of peripatetic actors, variety people, contortionists and hypnotists and Congressmen.

It seemed as if all the public men in America had come over to France—and wanted to speak to the boys. They would come over calling themselves great—and often we had never heard of them. They may have been pillars of public influence in Sabetha, Kansas, but in Paris their arrival was comparatively quiet.

Even Played Against Circuses.

We played against bands, Senators, opera singers and legitimate productions—and we could command our crowd. We even played against circuses—and filled all seats. A circus of soldier talent was organized, and even against that attraction we stood them up. There was only one kind of entertainment that we could not hold out against—and that was the company or division talent theatrical. They could take the crowd from us. The interest was local.

My position in France was one of the managers of the Community Motion Picture Bureau. To our organization was left the distribution of films for the American soldiers in France, England, Italy, Greece, Poland, and Russia. However, my own work was confined to France. Our organization acted as the film distributing arm of the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, the Jewish Welfare Board and the Salvation Army. We came to be the largest film distributing agency in the world, and in achieving this end we learned much about what the public wants and what it does not want.

One Cheap Reel Endangers Program.

I think the thing that struck me most forcibly was the comparative value of films. The men were so eager for entertainment when I went over that it seemed to me that any bit of film would do to stem the tide in the dike. Our trouble was in getting enough film, and as a result my feeling was to give them poor film rather than none. Fortunately I was overruled by others who stood higher in the organization than I did. We soon found that it was better to give no show at all than a poor one. That was the one great lesson of our exhibiting experience.

The boys would stay the performance through, but they would leave in a critical frame of mind. Again we found that one cheap reel would endanger a program, it made no difference how strong the feature was. We came to look at a program as a unit. If there was one weak link in it the whole program was weak. With that we began to eliminate inferior reels and put on fewer shows with only outstanding features.

Doughboy Wants Only the Best.

This we discovered about the American doughboy. He not only wants the best but expects the best. What was left over we gave to the French. A reel that our boys would walk out on we would give to the French and they would call for more. We also found a growing appreciation among the British, Canadian, Australian and New Zealanders to whom we showed.

A thing that we learned was that a good film never grows old any more than Tom Sawyer or Huckleberry Finn grows old. If the boys had not seen it, an early Griffith production had just as much appeal as a later and more widely advertised film. We found that quality rather than age counts.

Homer Croy
Says he has really more hair than this—"in a clear southern light."

A cheap and tawdry production could be spotted at once by the American doughboy. An inexpensive set does not mean a cheap production. It was interesting to note how quickly they could differentiate. They expected a higher standard in motion pictures than they did in legitimate plays.

Plays to an Audience of Four.

Our audiences differed widely in numbers. I think we had the smallest audience in the world—and sometimes the largest. I remember once we played to an audience of four—in a gun carriage! In Longwy, France, in an open plaza before the Hotel de Ville we had an audience of 7,000.

When I left we were putting on 4,600 showings a week in a startling variety of theatres. Some were in palaces and in chateaus and some in open lots and stables, but we found that if we had the right kind of a program that we could hold our audiences. If our seating capacity was 450 and if we didn't have 550 present we considered the show a failure. I remember one boy I watched fascinated throughout an evening. During that time he hung by his arms from a beam—a feat which I thought a worthy testimonial to the appeal of motion pictures.

At some length I take up exhibiting conditions in an article in the Saturday Evening Post for May 24 under the title of "The Movie on the Rhine," if anyone wishes to know what we faced in getting our pictures on.

Wholesome Love Story the Thing.

The picture that pulled most strongly for us was the wholesome love story. If ever, one would think, the suggestive story would have its appeal. The boys were far from home and had not seen an American girl in months, but the story they wanted was not one of the vampire type, but of the girl they were coming home to. They would rather have a girl in a cooking apron with a dab of flour on her nose than a vampire in a green creation with diamonds in her ears.

Outdoor pictures with athletics and feats of physical prowess went over with the boys who are now coming back to sit in judgment in theatres on this side. Swimming, riding, and contests appealed to them. Always popular was the cowboy picture. I had thought until I went to France that the vogue of the cowboy film was waning, but I no longer think so. But one thing that fell flat with us was the war picture. If it had fighting in it it was so far from the real thing that it was merely a source of amusement.

Motion picture stimulated the interest of the boys over there as nothing else before had. They were the one touch they had with America. They began to want to know more about them. This was particularly pleasing to me as the man in charge showed me the order sheet for two hundred copies of my own book, "How Motion Pictures Are Made," that had been placed to satisfy the craving of the boys to know more about motion pictures.

Our greatest favorite was Mary Pickford, but Charlie Chaplin would have led if we had had more of his productions. The boys wanted to laugh and this gave them ample opportunity. Hart stood next, with Fairbanks fourth. Fast coming into popularity were Dorothy Gish and Charles Ray. Among these we had only to mention that we had a Pickford or a Hart film and no more questions would be asked. The house would be crowded.

The boys who have seen service in France have learned to depend on pictures more than ever and are coming back to see pictures oftener than ever, and their demand will be for the best!

MOVIE BALL HELD IN PHILADELPHIA

Seventh Annual Affair Delights Thousands of Screen Fans Who Meet Players of Silent Drama

THE seventh annual motion picture ball, held Wednesday May 28, and given under the auspices of the allied motion picture industry at Turners Hall, Philadelphia, was a happy diversion for the local and out-of-town exhibitors, and the thousands of movie fans who attended and saw their idols of the screen appear in person.

When the screen stars arrived they were given a wonderful ovation. From an elevated stage, Judge J. O'Donnel, introduced to those present, Ruth Roland, June Caprice and Creighton Hale, of Pathe; Taylor Holmes, of Triangle; Evelyn Greely, of the World; Gladys Leslie, of the Vitagraph; and Herbert Rawlinson, of the Independent Sales Corporation. A rousing reception was given to each player during the introductions.

Holmes Hit of the Evening.

Taylor Holmes, who was the hit of the evening, was appointed to act as judge for a few dancing contests and awarded silver cups to the winners. Ted Hardcastle, manager of the George Kline exchange, gave some good impersonations of Broncho Billy during the latter part of the evening. Among the prominent exhibitors present were: Frank W. Buhler, general managing director, and A. L. Einstein, the publicity director of the Stanley Company; Columbus Stamper, of Nixon Nirdlinger and Freidhofer enterprises; John Cook, general manager of the Carr and Shad enterprises; A. Altman and S. Green, J. Hayes, Joseph Murphy, of the Alexander R. Boyd enterprises; Jack Rosenthal, G. Evans and W. Jacobs.

The members of the ball committee were: Chairman, David Barrist; Executive, Abe L. Einstein, Max Milder, Judge J. O'Donnel, Ben Shindler, H. Givin, and Sam Blatt. Reception Committee: John Clark, George Ames, Bob Lynch, Joseph Hebrew, R. V. Garrick, George Denbow, William Humphries, I. Milder, and K. Givin. Floor Committee: Jack Rosenthal, Columbus Stamper, Al Brown, Ted Hardcastle, Jack Delmar, Jack Greenberg, Lew Goldstein, Albert Fisher, Sr., and Charles Rapoport. George R. Meeker, of the World home office, was one of those present, accompanied by Jay Emanuel and Miss Greely. A. Osso, vice president, and Harry Cahane, treasurer, of the Cappellini Productions, came direct from Richmond, Va., with the Pathe stars.

Previous to the ball, B. Tolmas, of the Independent Sales Corporation, presented Herbert Rawlinson to the patrons of the Rivoli Theatre in West Philadelphia. William Humphries, manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, presented Taylor Holmes to the patrons of the Nixon vaudeville house, where he received a big ovation.

A dinner, which was attended by leading dramatic critics, at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel, was given earlier in the evening by William Humphries, of the Triangle, in honor of Taylor Holmes. Those present were: A. L. Tubbs, of the Bulletin; Charles Garde, of the Inquirer; Herman Deik, of the Record; A. Bonti, of the Morning Ledger; Alvyon Plough, of the Evening Public Ledger; C. F. Gourlay, of the Press; F. V. Armato and N. Bregstein, of the Moving Picture World; Mrs. I. Solomon, of the Trades Review; J. F. Ruggles and J. Green, of the Triangle; Jack Rosenthal, J. Hustler, Norman Phillips and Laighton Morris.

Immediately after the dinner Mr. Holmes made his appearance at the Nixon, where his production, "A Regular Fellow," had been playing since the preceding Monday.

TAXES FACE SAN FRANCISCO SHOWMEN

To Replace Liquor Revenue, City May Impose Sweeping Tolls on Theatres and Exchanges

THE San Francisco Bureau of Governmental research has prepared four ordinances completely revising the municipal license laws, greatly increasing their scope and providing more rigid regulation, which have been presented to the Board of Supervisors for consideration. The need of revenue to take the place of income to be lost from liquor licenses is back of the movement for a revision of the license laws, and it is proposed to tax many lines of business that have formally paid no license fees. The moving picture industry seems to have been especially singled out for attention, and no branch of it has escaped.

Heavy Taxes Proposed.

It is planned to impose a license tax of $100 a year on film exchanges, dramatic schools and moving picture studios, none of which are now in the list of businesses which must pay licenses. Moving picture operators are to pay a license of $1 a year, and theatres and moving picture houses are to pay twenty-five cents per chair a year. Theatres are also in the list which must pay a fee for inspection, being subject to inspection by the police department. In addition, theatres having oil filling standpipes imbedded in the sidewalk area would be called upon to pay $5 a year, while licenses would have to be secured for conducting peanut or popcorn stands.

Opposition to Measure Promised.

There are no indications that these measures will be adopted in their entirety by the Board of Supervisors, but the local amusement industry is preparing to make a firm stand against any change from the present regulations, claiming that the city government is already getting enough from the theatres in the form of taxes. A very careful watch is being made on the progress of these by the San Francisco Film Exchange Board of Trade and the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California.

Catholic Alumni Discuss Motion Picture Censorship

THE question of moving picture censorship was considered at the morning session of the meeting of the International Federation of Catholic Alumni, which was held at Hotel Statler, St. Louis.

Two different views of the question were expressed in addresses made at the session. Mrs. James Hacket of Milwaukee, in her address, urged that a lack of uniformity in censorship be done away with. She denounced motion pictures having as their theme sex and vice problems.

Mrs. Margaret Bassett, of Rochester, N. Y., read the address of Mrs. M. J. Malloy, of San Francisco, who was unable to be present. Mrs. Malloy stated that she was not in favor of rigid censorship and said that the best kind of censorship would be for people to patronize only the theatres showing wholesome pictures.

Settle Selznick and Garson C. K. Y. Suit

HARRY I. GARSON and Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select, have settled their differences over the pictures made by Clara Kimball Young. As a result of conferences held on June 4, "The Better Wife," in which Miss Young is featured, will be released by Select. The picture is now running at the Kinema in Los Angeles. All litigation between the two parties comes to an end.

Miss Young will make four pictures a year, Mr. Garson announced Thursday. The releasing arrangements have not yet been determined.

Dallas Sees Rothapfel Unit.

A thousand representative Dallas citizens were invited to the pre-showing of the Rothapfel Unit Program at the Old Mill Theatre May 31. It was the first time this program has been seen here and it made a distinct impression. The Old Mill will feature the Unit Programs as they are released. James Kelly, of the Rothapfel Corporation, and W. L. Merrill, of Film Clearing House, arranged for the private showing.

RUTH ROLAND IS THE "ONE" GIRL

Dancing Is Her One Dissipation—"Laddering" Her One Superstition—The Best Serial Ever Her One Hobby—And Her One Pun—Read This and Find "It"

By William J. Reilly

YES, we had the introduction to this story all worked out before the interview had actually taken place. It was something like this: "Ruth Roland, premiere villain dodger, bullet eluder, wreck foiler, and mystery baffler of Pathe serials, tossed aside the latest model automatic rifle with which she had been experimenting, swept the mass of aeroplane blue prints into an orderly pile, sent a batch of athletic paraphernalia whizzing into the corner, and arose to greet the representative of the Moving Picture World."

But Miss Roland, true to the "baffling" instincts developed in the thrilling episodes of her serials, foiled said representative with more ease than she had ever shown in frustrating the designing efforts of the arch-villain. She was engaged in none of the strenuous pursuits mentioned above. Instead, she presented a fresh vision of loveli—but we never were cut out for fashion reporting anyhow, so—still, the dress she wore was blue, and it was mightily becom—but what's the use?

Ruth Favors "Chasers" After July 1.

Seated behind the desk owned and operated at other moments by Charles Pathe himself, Miss Roland took on a businesslike air appropriate for a young woman who has just formed her own producing company and who is soon to start in the teeming engagement of making pictures under the banner of the Ruth Roland Serials, Inc.

That is why Ruth Roland, although strictly and muchly prohibition in her views, will do her level best to encourage "chasers" after July 1.

"Oh, ho," said Miss Roland, with a knowing little wag of her forefinger, "I do not mean the kind of chasers that are liquid and which follow after other liquids. I mean the chasers, the pursuers, the villains of the serials, who follow after the lovely heroine. It's a case where reeling in one sense has nothing to do with reeling in another."

"You see," she went on, turning serious and dropping her voice until it was almost a confidential whisper, "I am starting work on my new serial on July 1. And what could I do without six or seven chasers dashing madly in pursuit of me?"

A Triple Role—Author, Star, Producer.

And not only will Miss Roland be the star and the producer of this coming thriller which will be the first of a series of two a year she will make for Pathe, but she will also be the inspiring origin of the story. When this new serial is given its premier and the enthusiastic spectators shout for "Star," then "Producer," and finally "Author," Miss Roland will astound the crowd by making her appearance each time.

Ruth's experience in serials should give her some splendid ideas as to startling places in which to leave the heroine dangling at the end of the episode and also some original items for the disposal of the brutish powers of darkness and villainy when the chase becomes too hot and the capture of the lovely one seems imminent. The serials she has already done include "The Red Circle," "Hands Up" and "The Tiger's Trail."

"The Song of Roland," the great French epic, will pale and grow dim in the light of what is going to happen in this amazing new serial featuring another Roland who has the name of Ruth to the fore. Instead of dashing around in armor and leading armies on a caparisoned charger, as Roland did of yore, Ruth will lead a whole army of wicked wanters of "the papers" on her hundred-miles-an-hour motorcycle. In fact, she is thinking of modernizing "The Song of Roland," supplying a heroine instead of a hero, and rescuing folks from influenza quarantine instead of saving beautiful maidens from castle towers where dominating lords have confined them.

Here's the "Only" Girl Herself.
Ruth Roland, the only girl who breaks speed laws and gets away by snapping the officer's picture.

And speaking of her hundred-miles-an-hour motorcycle on which she is seen in the accompanying picture, Miss Roland recalled with a smile a near-arrest it brought her.

Getting By "On High."

"I was racing through San Francisco," she said, "utterly oblivious of what I was doing. In fact, I am so used to slipping into 'high' for the pictures that when I get out by myself, I use 'high' and much gas unconsciously. The first thing I knew, a motorcycle policeman raced up alongside and ordered me to slow down.

"'You've been breaking all of San Francisco's speed laws, and the laws of Nature, besides,' the officer said, when we both stopped. Usually, when I am caught like that, I pay my fine like a little angel. But this time I thought I'd try a wee bit of diplomacy.

"'Really, officer,' I said, 'I had no idea I was exceeding the speed limit. You see, I am so used to being chased by villains in the movies that I just naturally put on speed and didn't know it.' And being a very good officer, he let me proceed on my way."

Ruth Believes in Oneness.

Ruth Roland is really an unusual movie star. Most movie stars have time for at least half a dozen hobbies, such as training seals, raising Siberian spaghetti, or teaching goldfish to walk. Ruth has only one hobby, and, strange to say, it is the movies.

"I haven't time for anything else," she said, "I am wrapped up in pictures. I am simply filled with them. And my hobby isn't just 'pictures.' It is 'good pictures.' In fact, I could go farther and say it is 'the best pictures.' I am going to make my next serial the best serial ever made. I am going to make what might be termed a Feature Serial, with all the attention paid to detail that is done in the making of the feature picture, and still retaining the thrills which delight the serial lovers."

Miss Roland's ideas seem to run in "one" lines, other than in the line of the "one" best picture. She has only one dissipation, and that is dancing; and one superstition, and that is a hesitancy about going under a ladder.

"I know that ladders are made to climb with, and that a ladder is significant of the road to success," said Ruth, "but ladders have a back door and a front door, and the front door is the one to use in entering. Anyhow, there is so much more room in front of a ladder than behind it, that it is really the sensible thing to go in front of it."

Hard on the Small Towns.

Miss Roland is unusual in still another way. Instead of picking out some little hamlet in Missouri or North Dakota to honor as her birthplace, as most movie celebrities do, Ruth selected San Francisco, thus giving California the double honor of housing the most celebrated weather and the classiest serial star in the weather and star business.

During the past week Miss Roland has been busy taking folks to tea, buying beautiful clothes, dancing, arranging the details of the formation of Ruth Roland Serials, Inc., showing Senators and Representatives in Washington how to make a speech, and wearing out her good right arm signing dance programs for admirers at the Philadelphia Exhibitors' Ball.

Asked if she had purchased an aeroplane while shopping in New York, Miss Roland confessed that she had not for the reason that she could not find the kind she liked.

Taking a "Fall" Out of the Press.

"What is your favorite machine," she was asked.

"Well, I like the kind that stays up," answered Ruth, "and I wasn't able to locate that particular sort."

"Then you don't like things which do not succeed—in other words, things that fall?"

"Oh, yes," said Ruth with much calm, poise, and absolute equanimity, "I like the rainfall."

Feeling that he could not survive a second fall, the interviewer, when he picked himself up, thrust out his hand in farewell and had it wrung in a grip that would make the village smithy feel like an aproned waiting maid in a tearoom with charlotte russe as its piece de resistance.

Seeing the face of the press representative writhe in blissful torture at her grip, Ruth put on her sweetest consoling countenance, used at the studio just after she has bitten the villain in the struggle, and said:

"You see, I'm from the West."

We wish she'd stay in the East awhile.

CONTINUITY WRITERS THE GREAT NEED

So Declares Marshall Neilan, Who Adds They Should Equal Novelists in Mental Equipment

THIS continued cry among producers that authors refuse to get the motion picture angle," says Marshall Neilan, "strikes me as a waste of much vocal and mental energy. It certainly follows that as soon as the great authors of today start to get the motion picture angle their work is bound to become mechanical. What the author should do is write as he is inspired and then let the continuity writers get the motion picture angle on his idea. What we need now is not better stories, but better continuity writers.

"The men who adapt the stories to the screen should be equal in intelligence, educational equipment, imagination and experience with the man who wrote the original story. You could count the number of really capable continuity writers on the fingers of the hand of Mordecai Brown. The trouble is that they are styled as continuity writers when really they are playwrights. Continuity has become to be considered as some sort of mechanical work. The average scenario writer receives a weekly wage of $100 a week, while his contemporary on the legitimate stage, if successful, has an income ten times as much.

"Men like Jules Eckert Goodman, Aaron Hoffman, Samuel Shipman, Roi Cooper Megrue, and Winchell Smith are possessors of very swollen incomes. No one can question that in the field of dramaturgy they are equally as brilliant as the men whose stories they adapt are in the field of literature. I don't want to become personal, but I ask any company at random to take their continuity writers and compare them with Rupert Hughes, Robert W. Chambers, Montague Glass, Booth Tarkington, Owen Johnson and Rex Beach. What we have to do in the picture business is to attract men of unusual ability and intelligence and develop them as continuity writers.

"An author is usually a good author because he has lived a full life. He has had experiences during his career which serve him as the basis of his plots. That is why newspaper men are usually successful authors. They have lived in a world which is veritably full of drama."

Community Picture Bureau Files Incorporation Papers

Albany, June 2.

DURING the past week, the Community Motion Picture Bureau of Massachusetts filed in Albany the necessary papers permitting it to do business in New York State, designating as its agent Hortense G. Nazimova Signs a Metro Contract for Two Years

BEFORE leaving for the Pacific Coast Wednesday, Mme. Nazimova renewed her contract with Metro Pictures Corporation, thus setting at rest many rumors which have been prevalent in the business for the last six months as to the future activities of the great star. President Richard A. Rowland had affixed his signature to the contract on behalf of the Metro Pictures Corporation prior to his sailing for Europe, and only the matter of Mme. Nazimova's signature was necessary to complete an arrangement by which Metro is assured of Nazimova's services for two more years.

General Manager William E. Atkinson announced that the Nazimova productions will be even more pretentious than those which have brought her international fame within a period less than two years.

Bribery Charge Against Fire Bureau Chief Falls

JUSTICE ROSALSKY, in General Sessions, Manhattan, acquitted Dr. William F. Doyle, of Brooklyn, Chief of the Bureau of Fire Prevention, of the charge laid against him in the "filmless exchange" case that got into the news a few weeks ago. Dr. Doyle was discharged in Justice Rosalsky's court for want of sufficient evidence to place him on trial. The case against Captain Frank McGinnis, of the Bureau of Public Assemblies, and Frank McGoey, who were indicted on charges of conspiracy at the same time Dr. Doyle was held, will go to trial.

Bloxbe Films to Make Two-Reelers.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Bloxbe Film Corporation, of 1547 Broadway, M. E. Schwalbe, presiding, it was decided that the company will begin its campaign with a series of two-reel pictures, releasing bi-monthly. In addition to the two-reel releases, it will also produce four big pictures a year, having come to the conclusion that four big pictures a year are a large enough output for a new organization.

GETTING MR. KARGER ON THE RUN

Director-General of the Metro Forces Is an Advocate for Improving the Moving Picture by the Practical Way of Giving the Producers More Time for the Work

By Edward Weitzel

Maxwell Karger believes in the longer run.

"One of the industry's greatest handicaps," he said in reply to almost the first question put to him, "is the absurdly short life of even the finest pictures. This forces the producer to turn out something to take the place of the discarded pictures at a rate of speed that does not give him time enough to meet the cry for a uniformly better grade of photoplays. The first step in that direction is the securing of the best grade of stories to be obtained. The major part of such stories must come from the foremost writers of fiction, and we cannot afford to pay them a sufficient amount to induce them to do original work for the screen until the pictures made from their stories can be given longer runs.

Maxwell Karger.
Who puts in some timely remarks on the whole question of time.

"Payment to the author on a royalty basis is the only solution, and this will be feasible when he is assured of having his picture run for two or three years in place of six months—the average life of the program picture. We have many writers of scenarios who devote themselves to this work and who enjoy generous incomes as a consequence; but we need the other class of writers also, men and women whose names are an asset and who can be relied upon to do something big—when they find it worth their while to master screen technic and are fortunate enough to hit upon a subject adapted to the photoplay."

Better Pictures Mean Greater Expense.

"Do you advocate the stopping of program production?" the Metro director-general was asked by our correspondent.

"When it means overproduction—yes," he replied. "The advantage of being able to furnish customers with a picture a week does not offset the want of time needed to bring each release as near perfection as possible. But the fault is not the producer's. He cannot afford to spend more money upon the making of his photoplays until the exhibitor is in a position to increase the earning power of the pictures by giving them longer runs. We never try to deceive ourselves about the quality of Metro pictures and we know that each one cannot be a world-beater. But we do try to make each one as good as possible. As soon as the exhibitor is ready to pay for a better article, the makers of pictures will be ready to spend the time and money required to produce it. To show that Metro has faith in the near approach of this condition I have only to point to 'The Red Lantern' and the houses it drew at the Rivoli during its first Broadway engagement. A return date within four weeks is a new record for a Times Square picture house."

Quotes Stage Business Methods.

While the cigars were being passed Karger was asked what he thought of the stage plays now running on Broadway. After admitting he had seen several pieces that he had thoroughly enjoyed, most of them being made according to a well-tried method of handling old and always reliable material, and paying his respects to the superior air assumed by the adherents of the stage who can see no good in the moving picture, and also pointing out that the average of stage attractions in artistic merit and entertaining qualities was below that of the screen, the Metro director illustrated the advisability of taking a lesson from the business methods of the stage showman:

"We are forced to admit that the stage producer has it on us in more ways than one when it comes to guarding against financial loss. In the first place," explained the director, "he can make three productions, have the first two absolute failures and clean up enough money out of the last attraction to put him a long way ahead of the game. Then, his method of producing plays and a number of natural conditions belonging to his business give him a margin of safety far beyond that enjoyed by his screen rival!

"If the play is a failure he returns it to the author, who frequently concludes it will make a good movie and ships it to a scenario editor—and, on rare occasions, the author is right.

"Once the stage producer knows he has a success he also has the pleasing certainty of playing his piece until he has gathered in every possible dollar. Until we are in a position to do the same thing by means of the longer run and the corresponding longer time for production the advancement of the moving picture as a whole will be seriously impeded."

SPEAKING of Maxwell Karger, an official of Metro remarked: "We release on an average a picture a week, so we are obliged to have a director general like Karger who can get them out on time. How he manages to do it and keep the standard of production where he does is known only to himself."

A slight insight into the Karger method was obtained during a luncheon at which the Metro director was the host, and his four guests included the writer and a representative of another trade publication. An experienced interviewer knows that, as a rule, the worst place in the world for an interview is around a dinner table, but Maxwell Karker reversed the rule. He was there for a double purpose, and when the meal was finished he had satisfied his own appetite for food and the two scribes had a full supply of copy. He talked with the utmost frankness on any phase of picture making suggested, knew exactly what he wanted to say and was as practical in his views as if he had no connection with the artistic side of moving picture production. And this is the man who supervised the production of "Out of the Fog," "Revelation," and "The Red Lantern."

A many-sided person evidently. Long years of business training would account for his ability to deliver the goods as per schedule, but the rhythm of movement and sense of harmony apparent in all the Karger supervised pictures—where did these esthetic qualities come from? The director gave no hint during the meal. But a recent article in Photoplay lets the cat out of the bag.

Karger an Accomplished Violinist.

Maxwell Karger devoted his earlier years to music and succeeded so well that he became first violin in the orchestra at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. Growing dissatisfied with his profession, he cut loose from music entirely and went after the commercial experience which is so essential to a director if the company he is employed by is to make money as well as produce artistically sound pictures.

So, here we have it! Form, rhythm, harmony working consciously or subconsciously during all the seeming confusion of a studio running on a production schedule; moving pictures supervised by a man who is always under the influence of an art that can be and is of the greatest assistance to the youngest of the arts. A moving picture supervised by a man who knows every shade of tone and tempo and fits the action of the story to the law of harmony is going to keep pace in artistic merit no matter how much its making is speeded up mechanically.

Strong for the Longer Run.

Like every intelligent person connected with the moving picture industry,

LEAGUE OBJECTS TO C. O. D. SYSTEM

Miami Valley Exhibitors Want Credit Introduced Into Film Renting Deals—Refuse to Pay Music Tax

A MOST enthusiastic meeting of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League was held June 2 in the League rooms at Dayton, Ohio. There were several questions of importance to be taken up by the league, chief among these being a new set of rules which the exchange managers' association of Cincinnati want to make effective June 15.

Their chief complaint is that exchanges demand that payment must be in the office previous to the time that film is shipped, otherwise the show will not go out. Those who spoke on this subject were firm in insisting that present day exhibitors in Dayton and surrounding territory were modern business men and represented enough capital to demand credit if it were necessary. The men think that payments should be made on time and even before shipment is made, but, in case an exhibitor fails through some way or other to send payment they do not think it fair that such an antiquated method as a C. O. D. should be used as a means for reprisal.

The exchangemen say that they do not have trouble with many of the Ohio exhibtors, but that there are many in West Virginia and Kentucky who are delinquent. Officers of the Miami League do not think they should be made to suffer for the wrongs of others.

Committee to Call on Exchangemen.

A committee of five has been appointed to call on the exchangemen to rearrange the rulings. It is likely that an agreement will be reached. Recognition is also expected for the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, which has members in Dayton, Springfield, Middletown, Miamisburg, Lima and surrounding towns to the number of 116.

Music Tax Discussed.

Another point brought up at the meeting was the report on the music tax that is to be collected by the Music Publishers' Association, which is seeking to assess the film men for royalties. President John Seifert told the meeting that he had called upon all the largest music houses handling roll music (used in the smaller houses), and said that all of these firms, in addition to eliminating the music that is taxable from their rolls, agreed to make contributions with which to fight the tax. Within the next week the league will have a large quantity of non-taxable music rolls on hand. President Seifert also heard statements from those present to the effect that none of the members of the league were using taxable music in their theatres. It is said that the royalties heretofore paid by the firms making music rolls will not be paid the composers, owing to the exhibitors' refusal to use such music, thus eliminating this source of revenue.

Summer Headquarters for Members.

A motion was made and passed at the meeting providing for a summer headquarters for the league which the members could visit during the summer months or take their families for an occasional outing. As there is quite a large balance in the treasury, appropriations will be made for the building of several cottages along a nearby waterfront for summer use. One of the first rules made after the passing of the so-called "health amendment" was that "shop talk" was to be eliminated entirely at this summer resort.

Tax for Use of League Rooms.

Inasmuch as the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League will take over a suite of new rooms in the Lindsey building soon, it was decided to allow representatives of the different exchanges at Cincinnati to have the use and privileges of the rooms providing they paid a small fee. Five dollars was decided upon as a yearly membership fee. Already about ten "knights of the road" have paid their dues. A stenographer will be at the headquarters at all times. Salesmen and managers can avail themselves of her services upon the payment of a small fee.

Treasurer Reports Good Balance.

Bert Fiala, treasurer of the league, read a report at the meeting which gave evidence of a goodly supply of money on hand. He also said that applications were coming in unsolicited every day for membership, and that a trust fund would have to be established soon to take care of the accumulated funds. This was approved by those present.

George D. Baker to Make Independent Productions

GEORGE D. BAKER has severed his connection with Metro Pictures Corporation and embarked upon a career as a "free lance" director. Mr. Baker leaves Metro with the best wishes of Richard A. Rowland, the company's president, who dined with the director the day before Mr. Rowland sailed for Europe. Mr. Rowland expressed his deep regret at losing Mr. Baker, realizing that he had been one of the most valuable members of his producing organization.

Mr. Baker made his decision to quit Metro after coming on to New York from Hollywood, Cal., recently. Some of the largest producers sought to engage him. He finally affixed his signature to a contract to direct two internationally famous stars of the stage and screen in a series of big picture productions. He will start work on these productions in the early fall.

The Lees Make a Hit in Richmond.

Jane and Katherine were among the film stars who recently went to Richmond to assist on a reception committee greeting the doughboys from overseas, and they made such a favorable impression with the soldiers, adults and juveniles that Miss Millicent Hughes, a Virginia belle, conceived the idea of engaging, in advance, the little Lees for the next reception following the next war.

Recently, while making a "personal" appearance at Medford, Mass., Jane and Katherine were presented with the key of the city by Mayor Walter H. Creamer. The key is two feet long, a foot wide.

Things Are So Tipsy-Turvy in This Taylor Holmes Triangle We Don't Wonder It Is Called "Upside Down." Taylor didn't use up all his speed in "Taxi," for he has a lot of it left in the "morning-after" scene at the left, in which he appears as fresh as the well-known daisy.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Thunder and Lightning and Rain Open Tale of Hart's Strange Bird and Houdini's Vanishing Act

By Giebler

IT has been a busy week, filled with doings of various kinds, and Thunder and Lightning—sure, right here in California. True, it was not very brisk lightning nor very robust thunder, not the loud and terrifying crashes of heaven's artillery that sends the inhabitants of the East and other storm-ridden sections scurrying to their feather beds for safety; but thunder, just the same, and loud enough to scare our Native Sons, who are not used to the weather making noises when it functions.

And rain—rain in May—an unheard of thing for this part of the West Coast.

William Keefe Returns.

The week has been filled with goings and comings—smiling with the arriving and weeping with the departing guest.

I had scarcely got through wringing the hand of William Keefe, just come back from Europe, when I had to wring the tears from the office towel anent the news that Dave Morrissey was leaving for foreign shores. I was very glad to see Bill Keefe, and I was sorry to tell Dave goodbye. Dave's a good scout, and while I envy him his opportunity to see the world I hope that William Fox sends him back to Los Angeles some day, and that the day may not be so very far away.

Karger Joins Boosters.

Maxwell Karger, Metro's chief, came back from Broadway, and no dyed-in-the-wool coast defender ever pulled the deadly parallel with more force or fervor in speaking of the respective meteorological merits of the East and the West. Mr. Karger says that his fourteen days in New York were two weeks of chills and goose bumps.

Isadore Bernstein also arrived from the East, full of good words and promises of big news of big things of a National character soon to break.

W. H. Russell, known to the local film colony as the originator of a studio data chart, without which no edfice is complete, has packed his trunk and emigrated to Santa Barbara, where he will be known as publicity manager for the American studios.

"Mitch" Lewis pulled out for Oregon for timber locations.

Fred Stone Unpacks New Rope.

Fred Stone and his manager, Andrew J. Callaghan, came in on Monday. We didn't meet Fred at the station, but Frank Borzage and Sydney Ainsworth did, and Fred unpacked a new rope he bought from a cowboy at Cheyenne and gave a demonstration of plain and fancy twirling, of which act Fred gave me a picture.

Fred says he is glad to get back to the colony, and the colony is glad to see Fred again, because he made a lot of friends when he was here last summer.

One day I went out to see Jesse D. Hampton's players perform, but was unlucky in picking a day that both the H. B. Warner and the Bill Desmond company had picked for location work.

Digging Up Ancient Grudges.

Mr. Hampton was at home, but was not looking very "peart," as we say back in Missouri, because he had been having a siege with a cold.

I also had the pleasure of meeting George Elwood Jenks, who is head scenario writer for the Hampton company. Mr. Jenks used to be connected in an editorial capacity with Munsey's and other magazines, and I have a sneaking suspicion that he is the bird that kept a certain tall trade paper correspondent from thrilling the world with some remarkably clever stories a few years ago.

The T. P. correspondent does not hold this against Mr. Jenks, however, although at one time he did decide to shoot every editor that rejected his stuff, and only changed his mind when he realized that this course of action would leave practically every magazine in the country without a guiding hand.

Mr. Jenks is a fine fellow in spite of his past.

Hart Uncovers New Fangled Bird.

From Hampton's I called on Bill Hart, who has just returned from the Mojave desert, where he made location stuff for his new feature, "Wagon Tracks," a pioneer story of 1850.

Ann Little, who is playing opposite Bill, was along on the trip, and she and Bill brought back a fine specimen of a young Equus Asinus, or Sweet Songster of the southwest, one of the few birds of the desert country that has long ears. Miss Little says she is going to make a pet of the cute little creature.

It seemed to be my week for animal pets, for the very next day I stopped off at the Ince plant at Culver City and found Enid Bennett with what she called a "tigerette," that a sailor admirer who had been to South America on a battleship had sent her.

It was a cunning little thing, and although Miss Bennett said it hadn't scratched yet, it's dollars to doughnuts that it will not be as nice a pet when it gets older as Miss Little's mountain canary.

Houdini Going Strong.

When Harry Houdini first came out to the coast, he promised that I could come out to the studio and see him in action.

"Only don't come too soon," he said, "it takes me about a week or ten days to get warmed up and going good."

I waited too long. When I got out to the Lasky lot Houdini was going so good and so fast that I could not catch up with him. The great escape artist escaped me at every turn.

First I dropped in the publicity department and asked for Adam Hull Shirk.

"Adam," I said, "I've come out to see Houdini."

Adam looked at me with a speculative eye.

"Do you know what you're up against?" he asked.

"Not anything hard, I hope. Houdini is not a difficult chap to see, is he? He didn't strike me as being up stage or anything like that when I met him a short time ago."

Magician Upsetting Everything.

"Oh, nothing like that. Houdini's a regular fellow. But you know that not being where he's supposed to be is the way he makes his living, and he's always practising it. It comes natural to him; it's the best thing he does. And besides, he a magician; he's upsetting the whole place. Look at this."

"That's the kind of stuff he does, comes along and raises people up on the air. We're afraid he'll do that to some of us some time and then go away and forget us. Wouldn't it be terrible, now, if Miss Hawley had been left in this position? Of course, the air is nice and soft—"

"Do you think you can put anything like that over on me?" I said, severely, "You forget that I once followed the ancient and dishonorable profession of publicity—"

When Shirk Backed Up.

"Oh, all right," said Adam, hastily putting the picture away. "I just wanted to show it to you. Go out on the lot and look for Houdini, and if you find him, come back and tell me about it."

I searched all over the studio, and asked actors, carpenters, extras, everybody that could answer questions, if they had seen Houdini.

"Sure!" They had all seen him just a few minutes ago. He was going this way—that way—over yonder—to the right—to the left.

I went across Argyle street to that vast wilderness of palaces, huts, hovels, churches, saloons, dance halls, Mexican haciendas, known as "the lot," and combed it from stem to stern. I saw James Cruze making a street scene with a lot of extras, but no Houdini.

Once I saw his hat going around a corner, but when I caught up with the hat it was ornamenting the head of a property man, who has all he can do to look after his props without bothering with every nut that comes along talking about his hat looking like somebody else's hat.

Handcuffs Lead to a Wedding.

A watchman said he had just seen a guy with a pair of handcuffs in his hands going "over that way." This looked like a good tip, but it led me into a set where Donald Crisp was making a wedding scene with Bryant Washburn, Lois Wilson and Frank Elliott and Theodore Roberts and two beautiful little girls with baskets of flowers, but nobody that looked anything like a handcuff king.

"He was around here a few minutes ago," said Donald. "Here comes Tully Marshall. He's in the Houdini cast. He'll know."

"Yes, he's over on stage 4." said Tully.

I hurried over to stage 4. Irving Willat was making a scene for the Houdini film.

"Where's Houdini?" I demanded.

"Why," said Willat, looking in every direction, "he was here just a minute ago. Stick around, he'll be back."

"No," I said, "He's escaped me. I give up." And I went back to Shirk's office.

"Adam," I said, "give me that levitation picture of Houdini and Miss Hawley. I'm going to run it in Rubbernecking. I'm almost ready to believe anything anybody tells me about that chap Houdini, after what I've gone through."

OLD BOWERY THEATRE REJUVENATED

Atlantic Garden, of Booth, Lawrence, and Elder Sothern Fame, Opens as Modern Cinema House

THE opening on June 28, with a gala week celebration, of the New Atlantic Garden Theatre at 50 Bowery, New York, marks another progressive step in the exhibition of motion pictures in America.

It means the renaissance of the new world's most famous old-time amusement center—the bringing back to lower Manhattan Island of the great men and women stars of tragedy and comedy, the motion picture taking the place of the spoken drama. Thus is theatrical history made.

The Atlantic Garden stands a few steps south of Canal street and next door to the old Bowery Theatre, in which Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, the elder Sothern and all the great players of another generation made their chief bids for public favor. The Atlantic Garden itself was opened by William Kramer to meet the standards of the great European amusement palaces and was successfully conducted by him and his sons for more than fifty years. All New York flocked there for its music and variety.

In Thickly Populated District.

Then the Bowery and its neighboring streets fell upon changed days, and new theatres, gardens and halls with high admission prices were opened uptown. But lower Manhattan ever remained a thickly populated district—and now the motion picture has brought it into its own again. It is said to be a fact that this district has furnished more actors and actresses to the motion picture screen than any other in the country.

Always one of the largest auditoriums in the city, the New Atlantic Garden, under the management of Albert S. Goldberg and his associates, has been entirely made over and every appliance of the newest and best motion picture theatre installed. Artists and designers from Broadway have vied with the music and picture-loving artists of the district in making the new theatre worthy of its famous name and location.

Elaborate Opening Planned.

With the aid of the Players Club, founded by Edwin Booth, and other theatrical organizations, many of whose older members have appeared at the Atlantic Garden, and of some drama stars of today, the opening of the theatre in the most thickly populated district of the United States will be made a memorable event.

Marmont Signs Contract as Support to Alice Joyce

PERCY MARMONT, who has recently announced his intention of devoting himself exclusively to the screen, is now engaged in the concluding exteriors for a Vitagraph production in which he is leading man for Alice Joyce. This is Marmont's first appearance in a Vitagraph picture, although he has already been seen on the screen as leading man to Elsie Ferguson, Alice Brady, Geraldine Farrar and Marguerite Clark. He scored a distinct personal success in the recent stage production of "The Invisible Foe."

Vitagraph officials tendered a contract, which he has just signed, to be Miss Joyce's leading man in succeeding pictures that will follow the production on which he is at present occupied with this star. The tentative title of this first picture is "Vengeance."

THE RETURN OF "THE RED LANTERN"

For the Second Time Within a Month, the Metro Feature, Given Force by the Electric Acting of Nazimova, the Screen's Foremost Tragic Star, Illuminates Broadway

By Edward Weitzel

LIGHT has long been used as a symbol of hope and promise. The return of "The Red Lantern" to the Rivoli within a month of its previous engagement at this theatre gives promise that the longer run for the better picture will soon be a universal condition. The Metro super-feature, electrified by the splendid acting of Nazimova, again illuminates Broadway, the street of light, and brings hope that the old order of things has gone out forever and that the life of a photoplay will depend upon its ability to "keep them coming" and not upon the law of the one week booking. "The Red Lantern" won its repeat engagement on the only practical test: the box office record. The good report of the large bodies of spectators that crowded the theatre for seven days should circulate the best kind of word of mouth advertising: and the result of the experiment in a Broadway week-run house will be watched with interest by the entire industry.

In offering "The Red Lantern" to the public, Metro was aided by a most skillfully devised advertising campaign—a campaign that is still going on with cleverly sustained vigor. The picture also had the help that comes with the inborn strength of a thing that is right from its inception and its merit is sensed before it is seen.

The success of certain plays, certain books and certain photodramas are "in the air" almost from their first announcement. They strike the public fancy the first time their names are seen in print, and each new piece of information increases favorable anticipation. Joined with the value of the past reputation of the producer, the director and the star is the interest created when title and subject carry that indefinable something which foreshadows the coming of a masterpiece.

Nazimova in a dual role: as a half-caste—a Eurasian, part Chinese and part English—and as the girl's English sister; it fills the imagination with visions of new and fascinating evidence of her skill in character acting and tragic expression. The story outlined against the never-to-be-forgotten Boxer uprising in China when the American soldier displayed the stuff he was made of in his usual cheerful and off-hand habit built up a following for the picture before the first reel was completed. Then came the reports from the showing at the Coast, the New York opening and the triumph of "The Red Lantern."

The Plot Recalled.

A brief sketching of the plot of "The Red Lantern," which is based upon Edith Wherry's story of the same name, will recall the strength of its theme and the profusion of strange Oriental scenes.

Mahlee, the half-caste, is the daughter of Sir Peter Sackville. Brought up by her Chinese grandmother, Mme. Ling, the girl is told by the aged woman that unless she (Mahlee) cuts off her feet her grandparent cannot die in peace, the English blood in Mahlee having cursed her with large feet. Bent on easing Madame Ling's exit from the world, Mahlee seizes a sword and hacks herself so severely that she faints from loss of blood and is taken to the home of some English missionaries. Here she is instructed in the Christian faith and is happy and contented teaching the mission children until she finds she is in love with Andrew Templeton, the son of the Rev. Alexander Templeton and head of the mission. The arrival of her father with her half-sister Blanche, puts an end to her romance. Andrew has been drawn toward Mahlee but the more delicate charm of the young English woman decides his choice in her favor.

"The Goddess of the Red Lantern."

Mad with jealousy Mahlee renounces her newly found faith and accepts an offer to help the Boxers in their uprising against the Christians. She is aided in her course by Sam Wang, also a half-caste, who had belonged to the mission and who retains the worst qualities of both races in his veins.

Sam Wang is a leader among the Boxers. Convinced his power is waining and also the cause for which he is striving unless he can perform some act to inspire his comrades with new zeal, he gives out the information that "The Goddess of the Red Lantern" is about to return to life and will be ready to receive the homage of the faithful at one of their temples. Robed in a gorgeous costume Mahlee is conveyed to the designated place on a massive throne by crowds of devout Buddhists.

Along the streets the procession winds until it reaches the temple. Here the ceremonies begin before the great doors and are carried on inside the lofty room where the gigantic form of Buddha reposes. Everything is conducted on such a lavish scale and the scenes are so finely acted that this portion of the story has remarkable entertaining qualities. The picture ends with the failure of the uprising and Mahlee's despair and death.

As the Eurasian girl Nazimova reveals a new phase of her histrionic power. The character does not permit the many changes of feeling that were allowed her in "Revelation" and in "Out of the Fog," but it puts her abilities to a harder test. In these two pictures and also in "Eye for Eye" it was comparatively easy for her to keep the interest focused upon herself. Her surroundings were often impressive in themselves but they were such that even a slightly inferior actress could have succeeded in holding the centre of the scenes.

In "The Red Lantern" such could never have been the case. Only a personality and an art as dominant as Nazimova's could rise above the mass of pageantry and the vast backgrounds of moving crowds under the flickering lights of a thousand lanterns. At no time is she outweighed by the spectacular nature of any of the scenes. The ease with which she holds her place in the forefront of the most elaborate ensemble and makes herself mistress of every situation is the unique feature of her performance.

Wang, the Boxer Leader, Tries to Extend His Dominion Over Mahlee.
Nazimova, garbed as the Goddess of the Red Lantern, resents the intrusion in "The Red Lantern."

Picturing a Busy Day in The Life of Our Publicists.

Here we show one view of life as indicated by a close-up of work in the publicity office of Famous Players-Lasky's organization. Each according to his natural bent is reading what he likes best.

For instance. There's Morris Ryskind, nearest the window. He's reading the New York Call, a paper printed for such sterling socialists as Leon Trotzky, John D. Rockefeller, Pete Smith, Pete Milne and Fritzie Tidden.

Sam Palmer is playing an old trick he learned at the Ogdensburg Academy. Sam owns the biggest part of the Ogdensburg Journal and he is reading his own property camouflaged behind a copy of the late Mr. Bennett's Herald.

Dope is necessary in the publicity game; so J. Creelman is getting a couple-a snuffs out of the racing charts. James Macfarland is the nice looking chap so well hidden behind his own feet and there is a direct and reflected vision of C. Gartner, who is busy reading the justly celebrated Moving Picture World.

That's Pete Smith (as you all have guessed) poised in the act of batting out some "Please Play Up" and back of that—or him—stands Charles Kenmore Ulrich, the man who made card games famous on the Mississippi River packets.

When Arthur Leslie Gets Mad Ink on the Old "Mimeo" Boils.

IT'S not often Arthur Leslie gets riled—but when he does! Whew! Look-a this evidence we found, mute testimony to his excitableness when something really riles him. Seems as how somebody "panned" a screen-queen from who Arthu was, at the time, personally publicizing.

And Arthur burned the wires as follows: "Let me strip from your cankerous soul the cloak of mendacity and leave you exposed a naked liar.

"Only a coward, a batrachomyomachio and a dog thrice accurst would defame the fair repute of woman, whose good name is the immediate jewel of her soul.

"You self anointed scourge of heaven, whose tongue outvenoms all the vipers, the gall of your fell detraction shall not go unchallenged! What shriveled soul spews such spleen?"

Pennsylvania Board Again Overruled

AGAIN the Pennsylvania Board of Censors has been overruled by one of the courts in the Keystone State. It is not exactly a new experience for the board. It is not exactly a new experience for any censor board. Judge Patterson, of the Common Pleas Court, did not view "Auction of Souls" from the same viewpoint as productions are viewed by censors. He looked upon the picture as a whole. In that light he decided the picture was educational in character. He also declared it a portrayal of conditions as they existed in Armenia a few months ago.

Erasing the Scarlet Letter

IT was not so long ago that Jesse Lasky complained of those exhibitors who cut from films either large or small chunks as the exigencies of their programs might seem to dictate. He reprobated the practice and made out a good case against it and against the men who take liberties with the work of authors and producers. We wonder what he will have to say of the action of Manager Herschel Stuart, of the Queen Theatre of Dallas, in inserting in "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" a scene from another production. So far as known this is the first instance where a manager has added to the length of the subject as furnished by the exchange.

It seems in the picture in question a stork appears without having taken the preliminary trouble of being introduced by the jingle of wedding bells. Two female Texans, properly horrified and no longer young, entered complaint. Our usually careful Dallas correspondent neglects to inform us as to how much knowledge, if any, the particular pair of ancient persons may have of the aforesaid bells. But Stuart was quick to act.

"I'll marry 'em tonight," said the manager. And he hunted up a wedding scene, chopped it out and put it in the picture. As our correspondent points out, this gave the baby the benefit of clergy, the voices of the objectors were stilled, and so far as heard from everybody was happy. What Mr. De Mille will say can only be conjectured, but it is probable he will do about the same thing every one else is likely to do on reading the story—just smile.

Harden Keeps Right After William

MAXIMILIAN HARDEN has entered the ranks of the "film composers," according to a special cable dispatch to the New York Times from Berlin. Harden is to have portrayed on the screen scenes from the life of the former Kaiser. The name of the subject will be "Kaiser William's Reign and End." It is promised the subject will be sensational and realistic.

Harden for years has been a thorn in the side of William. The fighting newspaper man was responsible for the change in the entourage of the then Kaiser, as a result of the controversy over Count Eulenberg and his unspeakable associates. It is promised that these particular events will be alluded to in the picture.

If it is intended to make the film with the idea of world exploitation there will be no occasion to dig into the mire for material. Enough is known of William's career, of matters that may be discussed in any gathering, to provide abundant stuff for a picture based on some of the things he has done. It is said one of Germany's famous screen actors will play the chief role.

If Harden can conceive of an end that even approximately will fit the crimes William has committed or sanctioned he will add to a fame that long has been international.

A Bit of News from the Coast

A MANAGING EDITOR of the New York Sun thus answered a question of a young reporter as to what constituted news: "If you see a dog with a tin can tied to his tail running down Broadway it is not worth a line. If you see a dog with a tin can tied to his tail walking down Broadway it is worth a column."

If Chester S. Lord should hear of a storm in Southern California wherein there were the accompanying factors of thunder and lightning very likely he would look upon the statement as parallelling in importance a tale of a dog conveying a tin can walking down Broadway. Surely he would if he possessed the Southern California viewpoint. In the Southern coast country it is one of the several boasts that are made in the presence of tourists that thunder and lightning are unknown, the while commiseration is extended to benighted easterners who in their home surroundings are subjected to such terrifying forms of Nature's activities.

The Californians will call attention in this instance to the statement that the manifestation was not very brisk lightning nor very robust thunder. Probably to alarm the transformed natives it needed to be no more than these. And also to the eastern picturefolk it must have served as an aggravation—as a reminder of what a real thunderstorm may be.

Don't Forget the Dinner June 18

THE committee in charge of the arrangements for the dinner to be given on June 18 to Messrs. Cohen, O'Reilly and Berman report the receipt of assurances of attendance from practically all producers and exhibitors in the neighborhood of New York. A large number of stars also will by their presence do honor to the men who helped to make possible the showing of pictures in the Empire State on Sundays.

One point in connection with the dinner should not be overlooked. That is the eligibility of the women to sit in with the men and enjoy the festivities. Complaints have been made in the past that the gentler sex were neglected when the film men were preparing for a large occasion; there even have been intimations that there was discoverable a disposition to be selfish—all of you men have heard something like this. This time the matter is squarely up to the women themselves to see that they get a square deal and incidentally, too, a square meal. We shall see what happens.

A Story for Exhibitors to Read

NO exhibitor engaged in battling for an opening of picture theatres on Sunday should fail to read the reports from police chiefs in New York municipalities outlining the result of the new local option law in the Empire State. They are uniform in character, and indicate that the peace authorities are on the side of the Sunday picture.

This is non-partisan, unbiased testimony. The data will be compiled and issued in a report for the benefit of authorities in other cities—and incidentally it should be available for picture men in those communities where the light as yet has not prevailed.

As to the Commercializing of Sunday

WHEREVER a lawmaking body discusses the matter of Sunday opening the commercializing side of the subject presents the greatest and most varied difficulty. With the exception of a few extremists who would have no pictures at all on Sundays—even in churches—the majority of opponents declare that their opposition is mainly against what they call "the moneymaking" side of the question; to them the great sin is the commercial one. Strange to say, however, there is an ever prevailing idea that when authority is given to open on Sundays there must go with such permission increase of licenses, additional fees, or a percentage charge of ridiculous proportions.

Thus it appears that while criticising the theatres for any moneymaking idea the authorities immediately seize the opportunity to become greater moneymakers than ever. They seem to say, if we let you sin we are determined to become greater sinners ourselves; or, if this is an opportunity to make a little money for yourselves it shall also be an opportunity for us to make more. In this respect it is worth while noticing that opponents of Sunday opening have never criticised the commercializing attitude of the authorities. If, therefore, it is wrong for the theatres to endeavor to make a legitimate profit on Sunday, it also is wrong for the authorities to do so, and, if it is not wrong for the authorities, it cannot be wrong for the theatres. A strange inconsistency this action of local authorities seems to uncover.

One Poor Picture Endangers Show

THERE is an abundance of interest in the story told in this week's issue by Homer Croy, author of "How Motion Pictures Are Made." Mr. Croy was in France for nine months as one of the managers of the Community Motion Picture Bureau. He gained experience as a showman on a large scale. He learned much as to what most is sought in the way of film entertainment by masses of men, men away from home and doing long stretches of most arduous work. One of the things he discovered is that it is better to give no performance than to give a bad one. He learned that one bad subject will neutralize a whole show, that "one cheap reel would endanger a program, it made no difference how strong the feature was," to quote Mr. Croy.

The writer and humorist found that the American doughboy wants only the best and expects it. "A reel that our boys would walk out on we would give to the French and they would call for more," he says. He discovered that a good film never grows old, that quality rather than age is what counts. He tells of one sight that held him fascinated for an entire evening—the spectacle of a boy hanging from a beam, his only hold on anything tangible being that of his hands. That boy surely qualified for the position of Fan No. A1.

The theme that pulled the most was the wholesome love story, Mr. Croy reports. The soldiers would rather see portrayed a girl in a cooking apron than a bediamonded vampire. Outdoor pictures went strong. Always popular was the cowboy picture. The war subject was flat. If in it there was fighting it was a source of mirth.

Pictures constituted the one touch with home. Mr. Croy's conclusion is worth noting: "The boys who have seen service in France have learned to depend on pictures more than ever and are coming back to see pictures oftener than ever, and their demand will be for the best!"

A Deficit? Tack It on the Pictures!

SAN FRANCISCO is another one of the cities preparing to recoup a threatened deficit in the municipal treasury due to the coming of prohibition. There will be increased licenses imposed upon various industries. Our correspondent tells how the motion picture business has been singled out for special attention and how no branch of it has escaped.

One of the proposed items is that theatres shall pay a tax of 25 cents a chair a year. This means a 2,000-seat house will contribute an additional $500 to the city. Another impost—imposition is a better word—is the levying of $100 annually on film exchanges, now exempt from direct taxation.

It is gratifying to learn that the amusement men of the Bay City are preparing to combat these proposed additions to the expense of doing business. We wish success to the San Francisco Film Exchange Board of Trade and the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California in their efforts.

Personal and Otherwise

GEORGE BALSDON, SR., on Tuesday, June 3, started for Syracuse, N. Y., to inspect conditions in the territory adjacent to that city. For the past six months, Mr. Balsdon has been visiting the different Vitagraph exchanges, making a survey of the country to better line up the commercial aspect of sales possibilities. At the same time it enables him to come in direct touch with the exhibitors and make known the many features of the service department of the Vitagraph distributing organization.

Rand Made Los Angeles Sales Head of "Big Four"

WALTER S. RAND, who has long been identified with the film rental business, particularly west of the Mississippi, has just been appointed sales manager of the Los Angeles distributing depot of United Artists Corporation by Hiram Abrams, general manager of the company.

Mr. Rand's connection with the motion picture business goes back even further than his exchange experience, for he is one of the pioneer exhibitors of the West.

His appointment to the Los Angeles office of United Artists Corporation is a particularly happy selection, for Mr. Rand, since 1913, has been over a wide western territory for some of the largest distributing companies in the business.

METRO ANNOUNCES CHANGE IN POLICY

Open Booking to Take the Place of Program System—Change Effective in August—To Make Big Pictures

METRO'S new production policy, which includes fewer and better pictures, open booking and especial attention to the big theatres, was announced Saturday, May 31, at the home offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation by President Richard A. Rowland.

"Ending with August 17 next there will be no more program pictures for Metro," said Mr. Rowland, "as our new plans, which have been in preparation since January, will then become effective. These call for fewer and better pictures, which will be made with four stars, and in the coming year there will be thirty-six of these productions. In addition there will be several specials with all-star casts, made from big material which already has been arranged for and such other popular books, plays and stories as will lend themselves to the manufacture of big productions. We will use only big material.

To Make Pictures for Long Runs.

"We are going after the big theatre business, making pictures for week runs and longer, and only material of absolute box office value will be made use of. There also will be some extra big productions, even bigger than 'The Red Lantern,' but the whole idea of our new policy, or I should say our developed policy, will be better productions regardless of length. The first of the new productions will be 'The Brat,' in which Nazimova is starred. This will be released September 1, and it will be accompanied by an exceptional publicity campaign along lines that we believe will appeal tremendously, first to the big theatres and later to the smaller houses.

Advocated Open Plan Two Years Ago.

"We have secured a number of well-known plays which, when they are announced, will please the exhibitors generally because they are already well advertised attractions and demonstrated successes. Each of these pictures will be sold on its individual merits, following out the open policy which we advocated in our advertising more than two years ago. While we do not set ourselves up as the discoverers of open booking policy, we do wish to call attention to the fact that we advocated it in a series of striking advertisements some twenty-four months ago. At that time, although the open booking policy was sound and reasonable, the exhibitors were not quite ready for it. There were not so many big theatres as now, nor so many fine theatres. Present conditions make it bad business for the owner of a big house to burden himself with a blanket contract for an entire year when his public will be calling for the big attractions and his competitor will be in shape to provide them.

Rowland Sails for Europe.

"Our production organization has been brought to a high pitch of efficiency, and we made certain of this condition before launching out along these better lines in production. An announcement will shortly be made of the stars who will be used and of the productions in which they will appear.

Mr. Rowland left for Europe on Monday, June 2, for a two months' trip through England, France and Italy. During his stay in Europe Mr. Rowland will go over the film situation and the foreign markets and will determine a number of important matters which have a definite bearing on Metro's activities during the coming season.

Garrett Buys European Rights to Nazimova Films

AS a result of a transaction, said to be one of the largest in point of capital involved that has occurred in the foreign market for some time past, which was closed last week by Sidney Garrett, president of the J. Frank Brockliss Company, as American representative for the Mundus Film Company, of Paris, that organization has acquired the rights to all of the Nazimova pictures for practically all of Continental Europe.

These productions will be handled by Madame Schuepbach, the presiding genius of the Mundus Film Company in France, Holland, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, Italy and the Balkans. The rights for the other countries are controlled by the Export & Import Film Company, of New York City.

In addition to the foregoing purchase, Mr. Garrett, in behalf of the J. Frank Brockliss Company last week concluded several other important transactions. These included the sale of the special Frohman production, "Once to Every Man" for Scandinavia, and the sale of the Harry Raver picture, "As a Man Thinks," for the Strait Settlements, India, Africa and Java.

Irving to Direct Olive Thomas.

Myron Selznick makes the announcement that he has engaged George Irving to direct Olive Thomas in her third Selznick production. Mr. Irving already has the script for the play and is at the Selznick studio getting things under way. Production of the film will begin immediately. The title or subject of the story has not yet been announced, but it is said to be something entirely different from what Miss Thomas has ever done before.

Writing to the Little Sister.
Evelyn Nesbit has many correspondence obligations in her Fox, "My Little Sister."

Julius and Abe Stern to Make Rainbow Comedies

JULIUS and ABE STERN, producers of Century comedies, released through Universal, have announced a brand of comedies, the first of which will be issued in August and which, according to the producers, will be among the best comedies of their kind on the market today. The L-Ko comedies have been discontinued, and the last will be released some time in July. The new comedies will go under the brand name of Rainbow Comedies.

The new policy of the Rainbow and Century comedies covers a wider field than the past year. In the coming year the two comedies will be advertised more extensively and will be produced on a larger and better scale. Many new stars have been added to the Century and Rainbow players casts.

Messrs. Stern are now in California at their studio and will remain there for some time, probably throughout the summer season. While there they will supervise the productions of the new Rainbow brand and the Century productions.

The Century and Rainbow comedies will be released once a week, alternately, under the new plan. Twelve of the Century animal comedies are to be released in the year beginning in July. Twenty-six comedies are to be released and in the majority of the remaining fourteen comedies Edith Roberts and Jimmie Adams will be featured.

Messrs. Stern have added a number of comedy directors to assist in the production of their comedies. Prominent among them are Fred Fishback and Billie Watson.

Dot Farley will continue as one of the Century stars. Mr. and Mrs. Dan Russell, who have been in vaudeville for a number of seasons, have been signed to act in Century comedies. Another new Rainbow star is Clara Miller. Louise Escobar, who has been featured in L-Ko comedies, will be one of the Rainbow stars.

Eminent Authors Draw Up Plans for Eastern Studios

COINCIDENT with the announcement that the Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc., of which Rex Beach is president and Samuel Goldwyn chairman of the board, comes the information that plans for a studio to be situated in the East for the production of pictures by the corporation have already been drawn and action only waits on the selection of the site for the studios. They will probably be somewhere in the vicinity of New York—in New Jersey or Long Island, perhaps.

Meanwhile the scope of work which has been outlined for the recently purchased Triangle studios by Goldwyn have necessitated the increasing of various portions of the extensive outfit already in use. Additional stages and new ones to take the place of the old are being built.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

Goldwyn Buys Triangle Studios Outright

ACCORDING to an announcement from the Goldwyn studio in Culver City, the present quarters of that manufacturing concern have been bought outright by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation as a permanent home for Goldwyn productions. The plant, formerly known as the Triangle studios, covers thirty acres of ground and is one of the most modern and completely equipped studios on the west coast. Nearly 400 persons are employed about the studios, in the various technical, construction and editorial departments, besides the players who take part in the productions. The distributing unit of the Goldwyn organization will remain in New York.

The opening episodes were made partly in Arizona at a big cattle round-up, and partly on Catalina Island.

Died on Location.

Lamar Johnstone, while on location at Palm Springs with the William Farnum company, died very suddenly on May 21, of heart disease. Johnstone had been with the Farnum company during all the time they were at Palm Springs, which was several weeks, and was apparently in good health when he retired on the night of his death. The next morning he was found dead in his bed. Johnstone was born in Brooklyn thirty-four years ago, and is survived by his widow, who lives in Hollywood. The body was laid at rest in Calvary cemetery.

To Deliver Films Via Airplane.

William Alexander, western division manager of the United Picture Theatres, Inc., who has his headquarters in San Francisco, announces that a case of films is to be delivered by airplane from the office in San Francisco to a theatre in Los Angeles. After stopping here the airplane will deliver films to San Diego, and then fly to Phoenix, Ariz. Lieutenant Veizine, formerly of the British flying corps, will pilot the air freighter. If the trip is successful it is planned to establish a regular air service between the United Picture Theatres in the west.

Morrissey Leaves for London.

D. A. Morrissey, western publicity representative of the Fox Film Company, left Los Angeles on May 28 for New York, from whence he will soon sail for London to take up his new duties as special confidential executive and foreign director of publicity for the William Fox company.

Dexter Too Ill to Work.

Stone Is Here.

Fred Stone, of "Jack O' Lantern" fame, arrived in Los Angeles on May 26, and will begin the production of his first picture, which will be an adaptation of Jackson Gregory's story, "Billie Jim," within a few days at the Brunton studio. Stone's family did not accompany him this time.

"The Thirteenth Chair" People Off to Europe

JOHN P. McGOWAN, director; Eddie Polo, Peggy Dare and Miss Hope Loring came into Chicago from Los Angeles Wednesday, May 28, on their way to New York, where the second episode of the new Polo serial, "The Thirteenth Chair," will be filmed by Universal.

The company will embark for Europe, June 7, the first stop being made in London, in which city and Nice, headquarters will be made. It is expected the company will be absent six or eight months, and in that time the remaining 16 episodes of the serial will be made, in just as many different countries.

It is understood that Mr. Laemmle has given Director McGowan carte blanche in the matter of expenditures on his serial, in which Peggy Dare is the co-star with Eddie Polo. Miss Hope Loring, formerly of Triangle's script force, will go along to assist Director McGowan in investing the serial with the thrills and interest which the expensive production must possess.

Laemmle Visits Old Home Town.

Carl Laemmle, accompanied by Hal Reid, the well-known playwright, arrived in the city from New York, Thursday, May 29. They left the same day for Oshkosh, Wis., the little burgh where Mr. Laemmle held his first job and where he dreamed of the greater things in the future.

"I am just going up to visit the old familiar spots in the old home town," said Mr. Laemmle to the writer.

"I may take for private use moving pictures of these familiar spots and of old friends and of their children, also of the old clothing store in which I dreamed of being a merchant," Mr. Laemmle said smilingly.

He returned to the city Sunday, June 1, and left by the evening train for Los Angeles.

Cordner, of Chicago, Back from Italy and France

E. Q. CORDNER, who was the first to introduce the modern method of moving picture presentation at Orchestra Hall several years ago, has just returned to his home city after a stay of two years in Italy and France. He went over with the American Field Service and was assigned to ambulance work with the Italian army on the Piave. That was after the great drive of the Austrian army, which thrust the Italian forces many miles back. The second section of the army, to which Mr. Cordner was assigned, was in the heat of the battle most of the time and engaged in many hard fought actions.

After serving his enlistment period at the front Mr. Cordner went to Rome, where he was given charge of moving picture propaganda work by the U. S. Committee on Public Information. He held the position for 11 months and travelled all over Italy, with headquarters at Rome. He received his discharge early in April last, and returned home by Paris and Havre, arriving in Chicago Sunday, May 25.

During his visits to Paris, while abroad, Mr. Cordner was greatly impressed by the magnificence of the Gaumont Palace and the crowds that thronged it to view photodramas and comedies of American make. He always found it packed to the doors—though it seats 5,000 persons—at admissions of 60, 70 and 80 cents of American money.

Mr. Cordner will have something of interest to announce in the near future regarding pictures made under his supervision while in Italy. The oldest director in Italy was employed in their production and they were made specially to meet a demand which has not yet been filled in America.

"The Third Degree" at Ziegfeld.

"The Third Degree," with Alice Joyce, was a strong attraction at the Ziegfeld during the week of Sunday, May 25, and the critics of the Chicago daily press vied with each other in writing favorable notices.

Hearst News Special Shows Parade of Prairie Heroes

A CHICAGO special of the Hearst News was issued in record-breaking time, Tuesday, May 27, in commemoration of the parade of the famous Illinois Thirty-third Division, on Michigan avenue and through the Loop district, every man of whom is either a Chicagoan or a son of the state.

The International cameramen were on hand at every important event during the stay of the heroes in the city, from the time the men detrained at the end of the trip from New York until entraining for Camp Grant, where demobilization took place.

By the time the cameramen were busy taking pictures of the rear end of the two-and-a-half-mile line of march, the negatives of the front section were being developed at the laboratories of the American Film Company's plant, out on Broadway, where Superintendent Silverberg offered every facility, so as to have positives of all important features of the historic parade in readiness for exhibitors at six o'clock in the evening.

Pictures Shown Same Evening.

Theatre managers rushed the prints from the American plant in their own automobiles, and all the leading theatres showed them on the screen between seven and eight o'clock. Among the first theatres to show the remarkable film were Orchestra Hall, McVickers, Rialto, Alcazar, Casino, Riviera, Woodlawn, Pantheon, Twentieth Century, Harper, Chateau, Central Park, Covent Garden, Paramount, Metropolitan, Oakland Square, Calo and Vista.

These pictures appear both in Hearst News and Current Events and will doubtless create enthusiasm wherever shown throughout the country. The International Film Service has scored heavily in making the film with such unprecedented speed. The film length is 300 feet.

Demand for American Product Grows.

C. A. Stimson, special traveling representative of the American Film Company, Inc., returned to the home office, Sunday, May 25, after a trip of three weeks through Eastern territory, where he found that the American product is in stronger demand than it has ever been. This is due, Mr. Stimson says, to better productions, including stories, direction and acting. Mr. Stimson left Tuesday, May 27, on a tour of Southwestern territory and expects to visit St. Louis, Kansas City, Mo., Oklahoma City, Dallas and probably New Orleans in the next three or four weeks.

"Yankee Doodle in Berlin" to Have Long Chicago Run

SOL LESSER, owner of the United States rights to "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," has four companies of Max Sennett bathing girls working at present with as many road shows of the picture in cities east of the Mississippi.

E. M. Asher, personal representative of Mack Sennett, informed me that one of these road organizations recently showed to $11,500 in Indianapolis during a week's run and to $11,000 in Cincinnati the following week. Another of these shows opened in Detroit, Sunday May 25, at the Adams, for a week, and another Monday, June 2, in Philadelphia.

About June 21 one of the companies will begin an extended run in Chicago. The house has not yet been decided upon, Mr. Asher stated.

Mr. Asher, accompanied by his wife arrived in Chicago, Tuesday, May 27, from Los Angeles on his way to New York, where he will remain for some time, attending to business for Mr. Sennett. He will afterward probably make an extended tour of the country visiting all the principal cities and calling on exhibitors so as to get into close touch with the public demand at the present time.

Mr. Asher mentioned incidentally that Mr. Sennett is now engaged in the production of a burlesque on "Uncle Tom's Cabin," in which Ben Turpin is being featured.

The Sennett studios are being enlarged and now have an area of twenty-seven acres. Four companies are working continuously.

Managers and Salesmen of Fox Hold Meet in Chicago

C. W. ECKHARDT, district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, reports that branch managers and salesmen of that organization from Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake, Denver, Kansas City, Dallas, Omaha and Minneapolis met in Chicago Saturday morning, May 31, on their way to attend the annual convention of the Fox organization, which will be held at the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York, from June 2 to 8, inclusive. They began to arrive in the city Thursday evening and left on a special car Saturday morning for New York.

During their visit business in the Chicago office was carried on with difficulty, but Mr. Eckhardt, with his customary insistence, saw that it was carried on. Mr. Eckhardt joined the crowd for New York and the business of the office during his absence will be conducted by a member of the Chicago force.

The Fox Chicago office is putting out a second edition of Sunshine comedies, June 1, known as the "Lucky 13," the number of comedies in the series. Chicago exhibitors have been urgently requesting the reissue of these comedies for some time past and numerous bookings have already been made, before the compaign opens.

These comedies are two reels in length and have been selected from all the comedies in the series, of which they are the cream.

Miss Goldie Koppel, who for the past three years has filled the position of secretary in the Chicago Fox office to several managers, recently resigned to become a June bride.

Smith Made Manager of Moir Circuit.

Sidney Smith, an old time moving picture theatre manager known to everybody in film circles here, was recently appointed general manager for Harry Moir's circuit of picture theatres, succeeding Harry C. Mr. Smith will follow the policy already established in the Moir houses by offering the best programs, which will include many first runs. Mr. Smith's headquarters are at the Alcazar Theatre.

"Broken Blossoms" Opens Griffith's Run at Illinois

BROKEN BLOSSOMS," the first of the Griffith repertroy announced for the summer here, was given its opening presentation at the Illinois Theatre, Friday evening, May 29. The spacious theatre was crowded and Mr. Griffith was given an ovation as the final scene faded out.

Ashton Stevens, in the Herald-Examiner, pronounced "Broken Blossoms" Griffith's most artistic picture. "Griffith has overlapped the art of the storyteller with the art of the painter," he wrote. "Indeed, I think that he has here come nearer than before to giving the drama of the screen its individuality as a work of art. He has done bigger, bolder things, but nothing finer, nothing so completely artistic. 'Broken Blossoms' is heartbreakingly a thing of beauty, of art."

Brett Made Manager of Film Clearing House, Cincinnati

THE recently appointed manager of the Cincinnati office of the Film Clearing House, Incorporated, J. F. Brett, took charge Monday, June 2. Mr. Brett is a native Chicagoan and received his education here. He is a graduate of the old Bryant Stratton Business College.

Says Soldiers Want Comedies.

"The Soldier boys at Park View Hospital, Pittsburgh, don't want war pictures," said F. J. McGinnis, who has charge of the moving pictures shown at the institution. "Instead of the harrowing scenes of conflict they want comedies, Western stuff with lots of action, and dramas, especially love stories. There is one exception, however, a number of the boys have asked for pictures of the returning soldiers, taken in Pittsburgh several weeks ago and I intend to get this for them."

Crowds Storm Minneapolis Theatre To See Garson Film

EVERY rope in the theatre was broken, the ticket collector was slightly injured and part of the specially built lobby was destroyed.

This is the summary in part of the premier showing in the Northwest of the film version of Rupert Hughes' story, "The Unpardonable Sin," the Harry Garson film, at the Minneapolis New Lyric Theatre.

That is only part of the story, however, for it drew one of the greatest crowds ever lured to a Minneapolis theatre and checked in with total receipts of $11,385.15 at the end of one week.

And this in a theatre with only 1,100 seats.

The receipts for the first day's showing amounted to $2,092.75. That was on Sunday, a very warm day. There were nearly 200 persons standing in line as early as 10 a. m. The performance opened at 11.30 a. m. When the box office opened one could hardly pass down Hennepin avenue in front of the theatre. Such crowds had seldom stormed a theatre in that manner before.

Before noon, Benjamin Friedman, president of the firm which controls the picture in this territory, found it necessary to employ ten extra persons in addition to the regular theatre staff to handle the situation. It has been estimated that not more than one sixth of those who sought admittance on Sunday got seats. Some stood in line for hours, and it was found necessary to continue the showing until nearly 1 a. m., to give those who had purchased tickets an opportunity to see the show. The closing time had been set for 11.15 p. m.

Six shows daily were screened beginning at 11.15 a. m., with a new show every two hours thereafter. Prices ranged from 25 cents to $1.

The receipts on Monday were $1,774.60; Tuesday, $1,688.35; Wednesday, $1,601.70; Thursday, $1,539.60; Friday, $1,211.20; Saturday, $1,476.95.

"Man Who Turned White" Opens at Broadway Theatre

WITH the thermometer recording the warmest June 1, in many years, "The Man Who Turned White," starring H. B. Warner, and released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual, had its New York premiere at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre last Sunday. Despite the unfavorable weather, the Jesse D. Hampton production proved its merit by exceeding the expected box office returns.

Leon Langfeldt, house manager of the Broadway, gave a beautiful presentation of the production. No attempt was made at elaborate stage effects, but the music which accompanied the Warner picture was perfect.

Not a single New York daily adversely criticized the feature, but all commented on the sterling characterization of the bandit chieftain, and the cashiered army officer given by Mr. Warner.

Although only five enlargements of scenes from the production are used in the lobby, they are unusually attractive and attract many passing the theatre. The enlargements were made by Kassell, and the art work on them is highly meritorious.

KEYSTONE CENSORS AGAIN REVERSED

This Time Judge Patterson Overturns Action of Board Members Barring "Auction of Souls"

DECLARING that the motion picture, "Ravished Armenia," better known under the title of "Auction of Souls," is a film of an educational character, Judge Patterson, of Common Pleas Court of Philadelphia, has handed down a decision overruling the action of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, who condemned the picture and forbid its showing in the State of Pennsylvania. The appeal from the decision of the Board of Censors was made by the producers, the Selif Enterprises Company, for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, official distributors of the picture. In Philadelphia and vicinity the picture will be handled by the Peerless Feature Film Exchange, of which William Heenan is the manager.

After viewing the picture himself, Judge Patterson, said: "The court finds it a fact and a question of law that there is nothing in the scenes which make them sacriligious, obscene, indecent or immoral, or of such nature as to tend to debase or corupt morals. Viewing the picture as a whole, the court finds as a fact that it is educational in character. It is not only a vivid portrayal of the story entitled 'Ravished Armenia,' but it is also a picture of conditions as they existed in Armenia a few months ago."

Time and again during the hearing, J. J. McDevitt, representing the producers, was on his feet to interrogate the witnesses for the censors and try to secure from them something that would back up the charges of the board, but in this he was unsuccessful, for they never had enough evidence to make it plain to the court that the picture was of an objectionable nature.

After all the evidence had been submitted, Judge Patterson decided to review the picture himself and his decision in favor of it is the outcome.

"Ravished Armenia" will now be shown in Pennsylvania, but under the title of "Auction of Souls."

"Star Over Night" to Have Advance Men with Samples

UNIVERSAL announces that three of its men will tour the United States and Canada, visiting practically every large city in the country, to introduce the Stage Women's War Relief series. Two of these men will be William Howard and W. R. Wilkerson. The third man has not yet been selected. Each of the three men selected will carry a "stunt" reel to be exhibited to the exhibitors. Every star of the entire series will be shown in some part of the picture he or she has appeared in, so that exhibitors will have a chance of seeing the work of the artists in the entire series. The first picture of the series, "A Star Over Night," is now ready for release.

Universal also is preparing an extensive campaign and press book on the entire series. This will be completed within the coming month.

Each of the exhibitors booking the Stage Women's War Relief pictures will be given a beautiful folio of photographs of the twenty-four largest and best known stars of the series. These are mounted on heavy paper and have been made up at considerable cost. The photographs will be given to the exhibitor for lobby display services.

Schlesinger Closes Deal for Black Diamond Comedies

AMERICAN comedy is supreme all over the world," said Leon Schlesinger, of the Oriental Trading Company, in closing for the Black Diamond comedies for the Dutch East Indies and the Straits Settlements.

Mr. Schlesinger, who was for many years connected with the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, is the sole American buying representative of the Oriental Trading Company, main office at Soerabaya, Java.

He has opened permanent offices on the fifth floor of the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, and states that he is always willing to inspect pictures that are likely to be suitable to his market.

Mrs. Spurr Visits New York; Closes Deals for Road Shows

MRS. HOWARD SPURR, of Marion, Ind., has been in town the past week, looking over the theatrical bookings for the Indiana, one of the three houses in Marion owned and conducted by Miss Dolly Spurr, perhaps the best known and certainly one of the most successful women exhibitors in the country. All of the Spurrs participate in the success of the houses under the guidance of the feminine head of the house, and they have practically sewn up the town.

Mrs. Spurr has been closing deals with the Shuberts and Klaw & Erlanger for road attractions, played an average of one big touring company a week, and by getting in early she has landed a list which assures Marion of a glimpse of most of the New York successes next season.

She has not been around to the film companies, for both she and Miss Dolly are fed up on film men in the home town. She gets all of that she wants at home without having to waste precious hours in New York listening to fairy stories.

Mrs. Spurr is as genial and as good looking as her sister-in-law, and that is saying a lot.

If the Star Gets a Good Fit—?

There are two kinds of reviewers: One sort tells the exhibitor what a picture is; the other sort tells him what it isn't. The latter sort doesn't help things much. Their reviews remind one of a man who is shown a pair of ex-President Taft's trousers and gravely passes out the information that he does not admire the garments because they will not fit any one else.

Negative information of this description isn't of the slightest assistance to the exhibitor. Such and such a release may not be suited to any other star, but who gives a rap if it isn't——so long as it is a good fit for the star it was intended for? Photoplays are not like stage dramas. They have not as yet been written with the understanding that a long line of prominent screen actors are to appear in the chief character. Each screen comedian tries to make his work highly specialized, and requires scenarios that are exclusively for him and his method of acting. If a picture of his draws full houses it is a good picture, even if he is the one man on the screen who could ever do any business with it.

Douglas Fairbanks in "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" will follow up his engagement last week at the Rivoli Theatre on Broadway with a week at the Rialto, commencing June 8.

Eugene Walter's "Wolf" Goes on Screen in Fall

THE WOLF," Eugene Walter's stage hit, is to be presented to photofans this fall. Vitagraph is to picturize this production, with Earle Williams in the leading role.

It was "The Wolf," following Eugene Walter's first stage success, "Paid in Full," the year before, which clinched his position as a vigorous American playwright. Hardly had the season opened on "The Wolf" before three companies were on tour.

Supporting Mr. Williams in his role will be Jane Novak.

James Young will direct the picture on the West Coast. Vitagraph has not as yet announced a definite date of release for the production.

Christie Signs Alice Lake.

In line with the previously announced policy of using special casts in each of the Christie Specials which were launched a short time ago, Alice Lake has been engaged by the Christies to head the cast for the next Special Comedy which Al E. Christie will produce. Miss Lake has had much experience in comedy as well as dramatic pictures and will be remembered as leading woman with Roscoe Arbuckle in several of his most successful pictures.

Lincoln Signs with Great Western.

Word comes from the West that Elmo Lincoln has signed a contract with the Great Western Producing Company to appear in special pictures for a period of two years.

Mr. Lincoln recently completed the serial, "Elmo the Mighty," made by the Great Western Company and which is being released through Universal. The first episode will be released the third week of this month.

E. K. Lincon Denies Rumors.

To set aside rumors that he is to make his own productions and release them through a certain corporation, E. K. Lincoln denies that any such deal has been consummated.

Mr. Lincoln has received several motion picture propositions, which he has under consideration, and which may take him back to California, where he has just finished making Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

POLICE REPORT ON SUNDAY PICTURES

Buffalo Chief Tells Mayor's Conference There Is Less Trouble When the Theatres Are Open

IN my opinion the operation of the moving picture shows on Sunday has a tendency to make less work for the police than if they were closed on that day," declares James Higgins, chief of police of Buffalo.

This is a sample of the replies which W. P. Capes, secretary of the New York State Mayors' Conference, is receiving these days from the chiefs of police of this state, to whom Mr. Capes recently wrote, asking them to tell him without fear or favor just what effect, if any, the Sunday motion picture theatre was having on the communities where the houses had been open for the past year or more, sufficient time so that the chiefs of police could rightly judge as to the part which the motion picture was playing in either raising or lowering the moral standard.

The State Mayors' Conference is rather a unique organization, the first of its kind in the entire United States, although since its inception some three or four years ago, other states, such as California, have fallen in line and formed similar organizations. Practically every city in the state is a member of the organization. When one city wants to know what other cities are doing in the way of licensing their moving picture theatres, or a thousand and one other things, they simply write to the headquarters in Albany and the information is forthcoming, for the organization is a connecting link between the cities on every subject under the sun.

Conference Wants the Facts.

Before formulating an ordinance which might serve any city in this state which cared to open its motion picture houses on Sunday, if its governing body saw fit, the State Mayors' Conference, keen to the situation, and anxious to learn whether or not Sunday shows were really detrimental to a city, as was asserted at one of several hearings held at the State Capitol, decided to get in touch with the chiefs of police and learn exactly what the situation was and furthermore what might be expected as soon as other cities, deprived of Sunday shows, availed themselves of the local option measure, which became a law a few weeks ago.

And this is what the State Conference of Mayors has learned, the following extracts being from letters thus far received from the chiefs of police themselves:

It seems to me that if they are run right there will be absolutely on trouble.—J. F. Ryan, Chief of Police, North Tonawanda.

My experience has proved that moving pictures are a wonderful help to the police department. It keeps people off the streets, furnishes amusement for the young who might otherwise be in mischief, and in general is a betterment to the community. We have had moving picture theatres in operation on Sunday in this city for some time, and the number of arrests in our city does not compare with many cities of its size which do not allow motion picture shows on Sunday.—F. G. Jenkins, Chief of Police, Glens Falls.

Since Sunday motion picture shows have been open in our city we have had scarcely any trouble with corner loafers, or with the younger class of boys getting in trouble by not having any place to pass the afternoon and evening. I think they are a good thing for any city if run properly and in a moral way.—W. J. Fellows, Chief of Police, Salamanca.

In ten years, there has not been a single instance in this city where either complaint or arrest has been due to this amusement on Sunday. In my opinion, the picture play on Sunday is uplifting to any community, as it takes the young people off the streets and preoccupies their minds in proper channels.—R. R. Gilson, Chief of Police, Lackawanna.

There has never been a single arrest in this city on account of Sunday motion picture shows. I am very much in favor of having the movies open on Sunday.—Arthur Ellicott, Chief of Police, Tonawanda.

The effect of Sunday shows is for the good of the community. It tends to keep children off the streets during the busy afternoon and evenings. Many of the young fellows who had been giving the department trouble from time to time interested themselves in picture shows and have become regular attendants, instead of engaging in occupations and pastimes which were leading them to a moral and criminal downfall.—Fred W. Quandt, Chief of Police, Dunkirk.

Data Available for All States.

Chief of Police R. J. Barrows, of Jamestown, replying to Mr. Capes' questionnaire, stated that the moving picture houses in his city have always been conducted in a most orderly way, but whether or not they had influenced the moral standard of the community one way or the other he was unprepared to say.

The interesting data, gathered from the chiefs of police of the cities of this state in which Sunday motion picture theatres have been running, will be combined in a report which will be issued and become available for other states in the Union in which the question of Sunday movies is under consideration.

WILLIAMSON CULTIVATES THE OCTOPUS

Buys South Sea Island for Training Station of the Little Dears for His Submarine Thrillers

J. E. WILLIAMSON, who has just returned from the West Indies, where the Williamson Deep Sea Photograph Apparatus is operated, talked interestingly about his recent flying trip there to get local color for several new stories and to start production of a new sub-sea thriller.

"One of the most ambitious things I did while there," said Mr. Williamson, "was to purchase a wonderful little island. It is named 'Sandy Cay,' and it rises up out of the ocean like a bouquet of cocoanut trees ten miles out to sea away from the main group of Islands."

Asked if he was going to get married and take his bride there on the honeymoon, Mr. Williamson said:

"Well, now, that's a great idea and one, my neighbor, McCutcheon, the cartoonist, carried through when he bought 'Treasure Island,' which is situated within sight of mine. No—I'll tell you of my plan and immediate need of a private island. I am carrying out my scheme to breed and train octopuses for work in my sub-sea movies.

Story Calls for Undersea Battles.

"I have some scenes in mind for a new story which call for a terrific battle under the sea between the diver, in regular diving costume, and a great octopus, and, later, a battle to the death between this giant octopus and a shark.

"An octopus is very intelligent and cunning and anxious to fight any enemy within reach. The hard problem I have been trying to solve is how to make the octopus stop when he once gets started.

"My little island, 'Sandy Cay,' is a great place for this work. The reefy side of my island is a fine home for octopuses. I have a great big one which seems to be getting quite friendly, but I am not sure yet. Then there are plenty of sharks near by, though there is nothing friendly about them. Their cold, china eyes tell that. So I watch out and expect the worst at all times.

"It is hard to know the limit of size these monsters attain in the great depths of the sea, but as far as the record shows, I might quote from the Smithsonian Report, 1916—Bartsch: 'Pennant states that in those Seas the eight-armed cuttle-fish has been found of such size as to measure 12 feet in breadth across the central part, while each arm was 54 feet in length; thus making it extend, from point to point, about 120 feet'."

BUILDING UP A "KIDDIE CLIENTELE"

How a Rochester Theatre Increased Receipts by Use of Feminine Idea Pleasing to Children

CAN a big downtown moving picture theatre make a go of it catering to the film fancies of the kiddies? Miss Florence Fennyvessey, "Managress" of the Strand Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., once asked herself that question and decided to find out for herself. She says the box office receipts are the most convincing answer that it can be done, especially when the receipts are considerably greater than what they averaged before she adopted a policy of building up a juvenile clientele.

Before the war her brother Paul managed the Strand quite successfully. When he donned khaki, and her father, Albert A. Fennyvessey, president of the Theatres Operating Company, was looking about for a new manager, Miss Fennyvessey suggested that she was just as capable of managing a theatre as her several brothers. Her father did not pooh-pooh the idea at all, but knowing her to be a practical miss, said that he would not be a bit surprised if she was right. So she got the chance she always secretly longed for and went to it with a will.

Woman's Influence Soon Noted.

Before long little touches of the dainty feminine began to be noticed about the Strand, which is located across St. Paul street from the Chamber of Commerce, within thirty seconds of the busiest spot on Main street. The patrons did not object to the many innovations she instituted, but on the contrary, the 1,800 odd seats began to be occupied to capacity more frequently than before.

Then Miss Fennyvessey decided to try a new stunt, something that had never been done in Rochester before. Why not give a show especially for the children? The idea sounded good to her and she became quite enthusiastic about it. After carefully scrutinizing a lot of films, she finally selected what she thought was an ideal program and invited the children of Rochester to come and see how well she knew what they wanted. The excellence of the program brought so much favorable comment that Miss Fennyvessey decided to go further.

Toys Given to Children.

After careful preparation she announced that a "Kiddies' Day" would be the red letter event at the Strand each week. To get the kids on the run and to convince them that her heart was in the right place, all who came to the second children's program received a gift from her, such as a toy or a fairy book. So many came to this show that her supply of toys ran low, but she only laughed. Calling a taxicab, she sent a couple of ushers around to a five and ten cent store to buy out the toy counter.

Thus launched, the juvenile features at the Strand attracted many school teachers with their classes, social welfare workers and others interested in the proper sort of films for children. Miss Fennyvessey has become locally famous, and, incidentally, the Strand has secured columns of publicity that money could not buy. "Kiddies' Day" does not come only once a week now, but several times.

Program Pleases Elders.

It is noticeable that many grown-ups take in these events. The programs are arranged especially and exclusively for the edification of the youngsters, but many older people seem to enjoy them as much as their juniors. Sunday-schools, classes and delegations from playgrounds make regular trips to the Strand, usually under the chaperonage of their teachers, ministers or others interested.

Kiddies in Rochester are delighted with the Strand policy; educational and welfare workers encourage it, while it is openly boosted from the pulpit. And Papa Fennyvessey is not a bit "peeved" with the merry jingle of coin which flows into the box office with consistent regularity.

FILMS VALUED AT $30,000 DESTROYED

Philadelphia Branch of World Films Loses Stock When Sparks from Rewinder Ignite Celluloid

FIRE which completely burned up the entire supply of films and damaged the building of the World Film Corporation at 1317 Vine street, Philadelphia, and caused a loss of nearly $30,000, Saturday morning, threatened for a time to engulf the entire film exchange district. The fire also damaged the United Picture Exchange of America, and the George Kline Exchange, both located in the same building.

Friction sparks from the rewinding wheel were the cause of the fire, which started on the second floor of the building, where fourteen girls were working at the time.

Frank Gill, thirty-five years old, the shipping clerk employed by the World Film, got the women safely out of the building and was slightly burned about the face and neck. Flames from the explosion reached other reels of films hanging on racks and these flared up. In a few moments the entire upper floor of the building was a mass of fire. Five minutes after the first explosion the main vault containing films exploded and shot a streak of flames through the roof of the building.

Six companies responded to the alarm. James Emanuel, booker of the World Film, rescued the exchange's books.

New headquarters already have been secured at the Electric Theatre Supply Company, Thirteenth and Vine streets, where business will be resumed, it is announced, as usual. Exchanges from Washington, Baltimore and Pittsburgh also co-operated in maintaining the regular schedule of bookings recorded at the Philadelphia exchange. Plans are already being prepared to rebuild and establish a World Film Building here as soon as possible.

Alterations Announced for Fay's Theatre, Rochester

THE curtain was rung down and the lights turned out at Fay's Theatre, Rochester, N. Y. on Saturday night, May 31, closing one of the most prosperous seasons that house has ever known. The policy of the house had been announced to include vaudeville and pictures, but it has been apparent that the acts have been completely dwarfed by the films. The screen program has run to big features and to these is due the credit for most of the theatre's prosperity.

It had been announced that Fay's would close at this time in order to permit of extensive alterations, which amounted to practically the rebuilding of the house, with the exception of the four walls. A new front and foyer, elimination of the two balconies and the substitution of one, tearing out of the boxes and a general rearrangement of the seating were among the plans. The plans have been ready for over a year, but owing to the difficulty in securing the necessary material and prompt shipment, no guarantee could be given that the house would be ready for reopening in the fall. For this reason, the rebuilding will be postponed until spring, when it is expected that everything will be on hand and ready for the contractors to begin operations.

Fred J. Sarr, who has successfully managed the house this season, will be back on the job in the fall. Fay's is a big house, seating about 2,800 and business has continued good up to the closing. Mr. Fay decided, however, that it was best to adhere to the usual summer closing and to shut up shop before the lure of the lake resorts put a crimp in business and spoiled the almost unbroken record of big audiences.

MINNEAPOLIS WANTS MAIL SERVICE

Exhibitors Could Save Fifty Per Cent by Using Parcel Post for Return or Reshipment of Films

THE shipment of films by parcel post instead of by express in order to cut down transportation expenses, is now being agitated for in Minneapolis film circles.

Discussion of this subject with a view to establishing a systematic method of handling films through the medium of parcel post was started by Messrs. Hay & Nicholas, proprietors of the Strand Theatre at Fairmont, Minn., who told of saving nearly 50 per cent. on transportation charges by using the parcel post.

"We are shipping our shows in by express and out by parcel post," said Mr. Hay, "and in checking over the transportation expense for the past two weeks we discovered that the incoming express amounted to $13.80 and the postage for the return of the same packages was but $7.08, a saving of $6.72, or nearly 50 per cent.

Drawback Pointed Out.

"The only drawback to the parcel post shipments at this time is that they have no regular wagon for picking up these shipments, but postmaster E. A. Purdy, of Minneapolis, offers to put on an additional wagon especially to handle these shipments if he is guaranteed a certain amount of shipments a day.

"This is an item that is well worth while saving."

Messrs. Hay and Nicholas are attempting to persuade enough film men, who are willing to save half of their transportation bills, to get together so that they may have all their films shipped by mail as soon as necessary arrangements can be completed.

The suggestion has been eagerly seized upon and it now looks as though some definite plan would be adopted.

Mail Official Favors Scheme.

Postmaster Purdy announced some time ago that he would gladly furnish space in the basement of the postoffice where films could be rewound, inspected to a slight degree and reshipped. It is pointed out that this would mean a great saving of time—eliminating to some extent the missing of transportation connections, as many shipments could be remade at the post office and in that way shorten the time during which shipments are in transit between the depots and exchanges.

Some of the exchangemen, however, point out that there are several obstacles to the parcel post system, the chief being pickups from exchanges and restrictions on weight beyond a certain zone.

Many others, however, say that these disadvantages could be overcome, especially in view of the offer of Postmaster Purdy to provide special service for pickups if a certain amount of business could be guaranteed.

The Minneapolis postmaster has frequently assured exchange managers and exhibitors of his willingness to do all he could to improve conditions for parcel post delivery of films and accessories.

The fact that practically every film distributing center is now using the parcel post system extensively is emphasized by the exhibitors and distributors who are anxious to have that method used to a more general extent than at present in this territory.

Elsie Bartlett to Appear in Series of Feature Films

ELSIE BARTLETT, known to motion picture followers as the "Paramount-Flagg Girl" by virtue of her splendid work in the James Montgomery Flagg comedies, will shortly forsake the "legitimate" stage in order to resume her motion picture career. Miss Bartlett, whose last screen appearance was in the leading role in James Montgomery Flagg's comedy, "Con and Economy," is now negotiating with a prominent producer with a view to starring in a series of feature productions.

Miss Bartlett is now playing an important role in support of Ernest Truex in "Please Get Married," a current Broadway success. As a model for Montgomery Flagg, Miss Bartlett attracted the attention of Florenz Ziegfeld who pronounced her one of the most beautiful girls in the country and signed her to appear in a current edition of the Follies. Five months after she made her stage debut in the Follies, Miss Bartlett saw her name go up in electric lights as the featured member of the cast of the musical comedy "Oh, Oh, Delphine!"

After an unbroken line of successful appearances in musical comedy Miss Bartlett made her bow in a serious role, playing opposite Lou Tellegen as his leading lady in "Blind Youth." At the conclusion of her engagement in that production, Miss Bartlett turned her attention to the screen, making her first appearance as leading woman in a series of pictures produced by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information. Miss Bartlett's success in pictures was instantaneous and resulted in her being engaged by Mr. Flagg to play the leading female role in his series "Girls You Know" comedies.

GOLDWYN TALKS OF WRITERS' PLANS

Chairman of Board of Eminent Authors Pictures Says Company Was an Outgrowth of Experiments

THE production plans of the new picture corporation organized by Samuel Goldwyn and Rex Beach to give exclusive production and presentation to the works of a selected group of famous writers, afford Mr. Goldwyn the opportunity to put into practice an idea which he has long cherished.

Sometime ago, at a banquet of motion picture men, Mr. Goldwyn startled his hearers by announcing that the Goldwyn Company would no longer spend its energy on rapid-fire production. He said that the time had come for picture manufacturers to consider the quality of what they were doing and let the quantity take care of itself. Mr. Goldwyn makes this statement apropos of the plans of the Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc., for which he is chairman of the Board of Directors:

"In this new venture we have all the parts which ought to go into the composition of imaginative and powerful motion pictures. For years producers have been vacillating between the author who jotted off the scenario as if he were chopping wood and that other author who sold the picture rights to his play or book with no idea of any value to him in the production except what money he could get out of it. The new corporation which Mr. Beach and myself have formed has done away with that. We are not unique, I suppose, in turning at last to the authentic works of writers who have been able to gain a widespread audience, but what separates us from every producer who uses the work of a writer already well-known is that we have recognized, after long experience, that the only way to get the thing we are paying for to the screen that we aim at, is to let the author himself have a vital and significant part in production. It would be foolish to assert that we are arriving at that point easily. For myself, I can say frankly that the idea was firmly established in my mind only after a great deal of experimenting. It was the experience of Mr. Beach himself and of the Goldwyn Company in handling the Beach pictures that finally convinced us that the author's own authority of his pictures was the final magic word to produce a motion picture that would have literary quality and creative genius."

INTERNATIONAL ALLIANCE ELECTS SHAY

Installed for Ninth Time at Ottawa Convention Where Bolshevism and Prohibition Are Denounced

CHARLES E. SHAY, of New York, was re-elected International President of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators at the session of the annual convention of the alliance held on Thursday, May 29, in the Horticultural Hall at Lansdowne Park, Ottawa, Ontario. Shay was elected to the post for the ninth successive year by the unanimous choice of the convention. Other officers selected include:

First vice-president, William F. Canavan, of St. Louis; second vice-president, Richard Green, Chicago; third vice-president, Steven B. Newman, Salt Lake City; fourth vice-president, Fred J. Dempsey, of Boston; fifth vice-president, William Covert, business agent of the Toronto Moving Picture Operators' local; secretary-treasurer, Frank G. Lemaster, Denver; delegates to American Federation of Labor, Charles E. Shay, New York; L. G. Dolliver, San Francisco; John J. Barry, Boston, and P. J. Ryan, Montreal.

On the motion of Joseph Leahy, of Chicago, seconded by Charles O'Donnell, of Toronto, the convention went on record as being opposed to the prohibition of any malt or spirituous liquor and the delegates of the alliance to the American Federation of Labor and the Dominion Trades Congress, be instructed to vote against prohibition if the question arises.

East and West Will Co-operate.

Delegates from Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Saskatoon and Winnipeg went on record as affirming their loyalty to the alliance "in view of the present labor conditions in Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia." This means that there is solidarity between the East and West insofar as the alliance is concerned at least.

The report of the general secretary-treasurer showed that total receipts during the past year were $292,669, of which $190,642 was raised by per capita tax. On salaries, $42,368, was expended; publicity propaganda took $29,337 and the magazine of the alliance absorbed $24,277. There is a balance on hand of $6,817.

Declares Against Collective Bargaining.

In welcoming the delegates, of whom there were 300 from all parts of the United States and Canada, P. M. Draper, of Ottawa, secretary of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress declared that he was opposed to the idea of the "one big union" and against any movement which tended to depart from the ideals of honest labor.

In his opening address, President Shay also scored the radicals and declared that he had "no use for anybody who has any red in his flag unless the white and blue are with it." He complained that some of the operators' locals were inclined to play major league sport with a nickel ball.

Greetings were brought from the Federation of Musicians by Joseph Webber, president of the Federation. A telegram of confidence and sympathy was sent to Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, who was recently injured by an automobile.

Want Eight-Hour Day.

A lengthy discussion arose over the question of the eight-hour day. All delegates favored the subject and confidence was expressed that it must soon prevail.

One khaki-clad delegate was present at the convention, this being Lieutenant Frank V. Gilson, of Brooklyn. Ottawa, Ontario, delegates to the convention included R. Marcil and Joseph Thibeault. Local union officials in charge of the reception, accommodation and entertainment were: E. Gorman, Steve Waggoner, F. Gooden, G. Graham and W. Lane, the latter being the secretary of the Ottawa Moving Picture Operators.

The delegates attended local theatres, went for an outing to Aylmer Park at Lake Deschenes, Quebec, took a motor drive around the city under the auspices of the Rotary Club and enjoyed other diversions in the Canadian Capital.

Ontario Province Rules Showmen Must Be British

SEVERAL important changes have been made by special order-in-council in the laws of the Province of Ontario affecting the operation of moving picture theatres. One amendment to the Theatres and Cinematographs' act provides that applicants for licenses to operate a theatre of moving picture exchange in the province must first furnish the Provincial Treasurer, T. W. McGarry, with affidavits to show that the man seeking the license is a British subject by birth or naturalization. If this order is not complied with no license will be issued.

If a false affidavit is produced the theatre or exchange license will be canceled. Applicants for licenses as projection machine operators or apprentices must also furnish similar evidence before a card will be issued. This does not affect the usual examination which is given to applicants for an operator's license with regard to technical knowledge and experience.

The Provincial Government has also decided to raise the fee for an appeal from the decision of the Ontario Board of Censors on any film from $1 to $5. This must be paid before an appeal will be considered by the board of appeal. There is also a small reduction in the cost of theatre licenses for houses in small towns and villages throughout the Province.

The step to require all exhibitors or exchange managers in Ontario to be British subjects has been under consideration by the Ontario Government for a considerable time.

Quick Work by Kinograms.

Wednesday night, May 28, at 11.30 the Destroyer Bell anchored in the North River, New York, after a quick passage from Ponta Delgada, Azores, carrying pictures showing the arrival there of the NC-4 and also pictures of the crippled NC-3. Al Wetzel, the Kinograms' photographer, was on the spot and made these shots. At 12 noon, Thursday, May 29, the subscribers of Kinograms in New York City were able to show the pictures of this event to the patrons of their theatres. Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and other spots within seven hours radius of New York City, were able to present on the same day this achievement. Sixty prints left the Kinograms laboratory within twelve hours of the arrival of the vessel that brought the pictures from Ponta Delgada.

J. Stuart Blackton has signed Eddie Dunn and Gus Alexander each on a year's contract. Eddie Dunn is a former Vitagrapher. Gus Alexander is the diminutive comedian who "walked away with the show" in Commodore Blackton's labor picture, "Life's Greatest Problem."

ANOTHER THEATRE FOR WASHINGTON

Latest Link in Crandall Chain at Capital Will Be the Elaborately Constructed York

THE latest addition to the Crandall chain of theatres in Washington is the York Theatre. The announcement on May 22, that ground had that day been broken at the corner of Georgia avenue and Quebec street proved a surprise, not only to the public, but to the members of the trade. Mr. Crandall had adhered to his policy of withholding information until the deal had been consummated and operations started.

The York will have a frontage of 135 feet on Georgia avenue and 72 feet on Quebec street. It is located in the heart of a thriving residential section and on a car line. It is near enough to Walter Reed Hospital to attract attendance from that place, as well as from Takoma Park, a large residential section lying partly over the line in Maryland.

Called a "Gilt Edged" House.

The plans have been drawn by Reginald W. Geare, who superintended the building of the Metropolitan and Knickerbocker theatres for Mr. Crandall, and he has incorporated in them many improvements that have suggested themselves out of the experience obtained with these other houses. There will be many innovations, according to Mr. Geare, who calls it a "gilt edge" house. It will really be a glittering proposition, as the World correspondent sees it, for the exterior is to be of brick approaching a gold color. All of the interior decorations are to be in gold, silver and black and will be very striking.

As may be judged from the above description, this house is to be different from anything yet attempted in the District of Columbia. The Georgia avenue elevation is to have nine arches, each containing a self-illuminated three-sheet. The light is to be hidden from sight. The lobby will run twenty feet on Georgia avenue and sixty feet on Quebec street. There will be five entrances and a ticket booth of a type similar to that at the Metropolitan. The lobby will be done in Italian marble with gilt ornaments and fixtures.

The lobby is to have built-in easels, each capable of holding a one sheet poster. These are to be similar to the easels designed by Mr. Geare for the Metropolitan. They might be described as elaborate show cases built into a marble wall in a sort of frame, for the display of placards and photographs to the extent of a one-sheet in size.

Good Ventilation Promised.

The stage is to have three proscenium arches with curtains and draperies and beneath it will be an orchestra pit of a size large enough to comfortably seat ten musicians. The heating and ventilating systems are to be quite elaborate and executed along plans suggested by the experience had with similar systems at the other theatres. In winter heated air is to be carried to the space above the ceiling and forced into the theatre and exhausted under the stage. It will be possible to change the air in the new theatre every half minute.

The operators' booth is to be 25 feet wide and 12 feet deep. It is to be fitted with the most modern equipment and arranged with a view to granting comfort to the men while working. On either side of the booth will be special boxes for the private use of those connected with the house.

It is estimated that the house will cost $87,000, but the big guess is that it will run over $100,000 before being completed the latter part of October. The house will not have a balcony but will seat about 900 people on the one floor.

Will Rogers Leaves for Goldwyn's Coast Studios

WILL ROGERS, of Follies fame, will leave New York this week for Culver City, Cal., where he will begin work for Goldwyn on a series of characterful pictures. The screen vehicle chosen for his first work is an adaptation of the first of the Billy Fortune stories which appeared in The Saturday Evening Post under the title of "Doubled Stakes." W. R. Lighton is the author.

Rogers has expressed a desire to portray Billy Fortune on the screen and he will be given an opportunity as well to collaborate on the framing of the titles which are to go with the picture. Rogers' gift for bright phrases has made his reputation on the "legitimate" stage and it is believed that his inimitable humor will put across any picture that bears his name.

Metro Enlarges Studios.

With the purchase by Metro Pictures Corporation of the five-acre square across Cahuenga avenue to the east of the main lot in Hollywood, the studios now cover twelve acres. The addition will be used for street scenes and outdoor sets. Space is being cleared on the main lot for new buildings for indoor, scenario offices and property department.

Treasury Department Now Takes Uncertified Checks

NEW regulations just adopted by the Treasury Department should result in relieving exhibitors from the necessity of paying admission and other taxes by means of certified checks, as has hitherto been the case. The new revenue law authorizes collectors of internal revenue, at their discretion, to accept uncertified checks and the new regulations provide for a different manner of routing these checks than that heretofore followed, which will relieve the collectors of responsibility for the money represented in any bad checks they may accept.

The revenue law provides that collectors may accept uncertified checks in payment of taxes, provided such checks are collectible at par, without any deduction for exchange or other charges. If the bank on which an uncertified check is drawn should refuse to pay it at par, the check should be returned and treated as a bad check. All bad checks must at once be made good by the taxpayer, together with all expenses incident to the attempt to collect it and its return, and if the maker of any such check fails to make it good, the collector is authorized to proceed at once with the collection of the tax as though no check had been given.

Under the old procedure of handling checks, they were all turned in to the Treasury Department at Washington, and collected from that point. Any bad checks were charged to the collector accepting them, and he was made responsible for the amount thereof. This, naturally, tended to make collectors reluctant to accept uncertified checks and, in view of the great number of taxes payable monthly under the new law, the department has changed the procedure so as to relieve collectors of much of this responsibility.

Engage Kellette to Direct Paramount-Briggs Comedies

TO further the big production and exploitation plans which Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is said to be making for the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, Alex Yokel, vice-president and general manager of Briggs Pictures, Inc., producers of the pictures, has engaged John William Kellette to direct the comedies.

Mr. Kellette has been with Fox for the last five years, during which time he was scenario writer, assistant director and director of a number of well-known plays, including the Annette Kellerman spectacle, "A Daughter of the Gods." He also staged a number of the Lee children's pictures and productions starring Evelyn Nesbit.

Carl Schultz, who also has been with Fox for a number of years as technical expert and studio manager, has been engaged by Mr. Yokel as studio and technical manager for the Paramount-Briggs Comedies.

PLANCK PLANKS DOWN REAL SERVICE

Head of Famous Players-Lasky Detroit Publicity Branch Shows Keen Analysis of Local Conditions

C. E. CADY, owner of the Family Theatre, Detroit, one of the most successful and best known exhibitors in that territory, had been told time and time again that the fetish, shrine, god, or whatever you will of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was "Service to its exhibitors." Hearing it often enough he soon got to believe it and from time to time, as the necessity arose, he availed himself of the counsel of the Publicity and Service Department of the Detroit branch of Famous Players-Lasky, presided over by Thaddeus J. Planck.

But the prize problem of all the problems that Exhibitor Cady had ever put up to Planck to solve came up recently and Planck solved it. The trouble was this: Cady told Planck that although the Family Theatre was clean, comfortable, and up-to-date in every respect, that his house manager was a gentleman in every sense and action, and that he was showing Paramount-Artcraft pictures he could not induce the better class of people to patronize him. He had analyzed the problem, but had failed to trace the trouble to its lair.

Letter Gives "Inside" Facts.

Planck asked questions. He found out then that Cady was using sufficient newspaper space and posters in a proper manner, and that the people whom he desired for patrons did not patronize his competitor, neither were they patronizing the picture theatres in Grand Rapids, the nearest large city, thirty-five miles away. Therefore, argued Planck, it was either a case of these people not being "educated" to seeing motion pictures or else a case of plain disgust, engendered in the pioneer days and still remaining. Planck had Cady send him a list of 250 names of people who, Cady believed, did not care for motion pictures. To these 250, all women by the way, Planck sent a rattling fine letter, giving a few "inside" facts about the motion picture, its production, and exploitation, which he felt had an appeal. Just one letter. And this one letter had such an effect that shortly afterwards, Cady reported, he noticed in his audiences, many of the people whom he desired for patrons. And having seen a Paramount-Artcraft picture once (the attraction was Cecil B. DeMille's "The Squaw Man") they became regular and consistent patrons.

Cady Again Goes to Planck.

Having satisfied himself that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation meant everything it had said in regard to "Service." Exhibitor Cady went after Planck again and had him draw up a letter on "The False Faces," and "Don't Change Your Husband," both Paramount-Artcraft pictures, which he mailed to the same list of 250 women, and he noticed thereafter that those who had come in answer to the first letter came again and that there were new faces among them.

Herb L. Weil, of the Family Theatre, Port Huron, Mich., hearing what fine success Planck was having as a letter writer went after him for a letter on Benjamin Chapin's "The Son of Democracy," which he mailed to 157 school teachers, ministers, etc., and the results were beyond all expectation; and all this service without a cent of cost to the exhibitor.

Looking over the sales records of his office, Planck decided the exhibitors weren't using as much lithograph displays as they should. The question in his mind was how to make this fact known to them. Experience had taught him that the average exhibitor was not prone to read a letter. Therefore some other method had to be devised. And this is what Planck did:

Sent Check to Letter Readers.

He drew up a four-page letter in his usual snappy, gingery style, presenting unassailable arguments in favor of more posters. With each letter he enclosed a check for eleven cents, payable to the exhibitor, explaining it in his letter as follows: "Having found that the average motion picture exhibitor's earnings are $12 a day and that it take five and one-half minutes to read this communication I have figured that if you read it through I'll owe you eleven cents. Therefore, in view of the fact that your business is conducted strictly on a cash basis, I am enclosing check for the amount mentioned above."

The morning after the letters were mailed, eight-tenths of the exhibitors came to Planck in person to tell him that they had read his letter and that he was right. And they proved that they meant what they said by increasing their paper orders. Incidentally, Planck offered to cash the checks, but the exhibitors refused, saying they would rather keep them as remembrances of a clever sales idea.

New Airdome Opened in Charleston.

Charleston's latest picture theatre is the Shamrock Terrace Airdrome. It is established on the site of what was once an ultra-fashionable hotel and stands at the entrance of the finest residential district in the South Carolina city. The airdome was built by Commander Mark St. Clair Ellis, U. S. N., Commandant at the naval training station of the Charleston Navy Yard. The management is in the hands of W. D. Powell.

The open-air house opened May 28, with Bessie Barriscale in "All of a Sudden Norma." The proceeds of the first night's performance were given to the Navy Relief.

Famous Players to Watch Projection of Its Films

WITH a view to assisting exhibitors to obtain the best projection possible and reducing the damage of film to a minimum the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has introduced an innovation in its department of distribution.

This innovation is in the form of an entirely new department which will handle the varied projection problem which confront exhibitors, at the same time eliminating so far as possible the causes which contribute to the damaging of prints and consequent inadequate projection.

Creates New Department.

In charge of the new department. the headquarters of which will be at the home office in New York, is Earl J. Dennison, whose duties will take him at more or less regular intervals to every Famous Players-Lasky exchange in the United States. Besides establishing a standard system of film inspection in the various branches, he will personally examine and report upon all film in stock, look into complaints from exhibitors and examine damage cards which are now being distributed in standardized form to all exchanges, to be kept as a detailed record and check upon every print in circulation. In this way the blame for damage can be placed exactly where it belongs, whether it may lie with the manufacturer, the exchange or the exhibitor's operator.

Doris Kenyon to Appear on Stage and on Screen

BY an agreement entered into between Theodore C. Deitrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., and A. H. Woods, the theatrical producer, Doris Kenyon, star of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., will appear next season in a new play by Avery Hopwood to be produced by Mr. Woods.

Miss Kenyon's appearance on the stage will in no way affect her screen work, which will be continued under the management of Mr. Deitrich. The contract with Mr. Woods provides for Miss Kenyon's appearance in New York City only, with the exception of one week during which the stage production will be tried out on the road. The New York City engagement is expected to open about the middle of August.

Miss Kenyon expects to make one more picture before starting rehearsals on the Woods play, and will continue her screen work throughout the coming winter in conjunction with her stage appearance.

It is understood that after the first production in which Miss Kenyon returns to the footlights, Mr. Deitrich will be associated with Mr. Woods in all future stage productions in which Miss Kenyon appears.

PICKFORD FILM PLEASES REAL ORPHANS

Inmates of Public Institution Help Joe Gorman Make "Daddy Long Legs" Town Talk in Lincoln

JOE GORMAN, of the Rialto Theatre, Lincoln, Neb., is not the showman to pass up an opportunity, and Joseph last week did what hundreds of exhibitors throughout the country may do if they will only pay attention. That is all they will have to pay for this idea—just attention.

Joe, as all Nebraska knows, was the first one, years ago, to put an electric calliope inside of a wagon covered with big signs, and go tooting about the streets. Joe, you will remember, frequently employs a vocalist to come from Chicago to Lincoln just to sing for one of the pictures running at the Rialto. Joe has one of the most promising looking bank accounts among the prosperous exhibitors of the Middle West, and here's how he does it.

Recently he was showing "Daddy Long Legs." Even the Rialto in Lincoln counts four days a good, long run, but Mary Pickford commanded a week. The Rialto has been coining money at 15 cents admission, but the Mary Pickford picture brought the prices up to 25—and, sh-h-h-h! they may not come down again.

Uses All the Billboards.

Five or ten twenty-four sheets, and a corresponding amount of smaller paper is a customary Lincoln order, but Joe bought all the boards and put up thirty twenty-four sheets; forty three-sheets; twenty six-sheets, 500 window cards and 10,000 heralds for the latest Pickford gold mine. A quarter page is usually the limit, but "Daddy Long Legs" was played up in half pages.

But that is not the big idea. Anybody could do that; but only a real showman could pull the Joe Gorman stunt. Near Lincoln, just like most towns, there is an orphanage.

Motherless and fatherless girls and boys play about, wearing durable aprons and overalls. Everybody is interested in an orphan, and everybody likes to see an orphan treated considerately.

One morning Joe, bright and smiling, trundled up to the orphanage in his big automobile. The kids saw him coming. Joe strode to the matron's office and introduced himself.

"Would the children like to see a moving picture show?" he asked

The matron beamed. "Yes, indeed," she said.

"Mary Pickford?" asked Joe.

The matron was unable to express her absolute delight.

"I could make it on Saturday, so they wouldn't miss school," said Joseph. The matron said it would be the easiest thing in the world.

Joe Uses the Wire Again.

Joe for the fifty-eleventh time called up Manager C. E. Holah, of the A. H. Blank Enterprises in Omaha.

"Dear Friend Holah," he said, "can you get me a print of 'Daddy Long Legs' here by next Saturday morning? I understand the picture isn't released until next Sunday. I start showing it Monday for an entire week, you know."

"Joseph, old top, I'd walk all the way to Lincoln with it if there was no other way getting it to you," said C. E. And now for the climax.

The papers, of course, played up the way those kiddies enjoyed seeing Mary Pickford in an orphanage play. Everybody in town thought that was just too nice, the way Mr. Gorman treated those children to a free show. But Joseph wasn't through.

"I understand," he said to the matron in his most winning way, "that some of the children show considerable talent as juvenile actors and actresses. Isn't that so!"

The matron told all about some of the pageants they had staged, some of the playlets they had given, and the juvenile Chaplins and Pickfords in her flock.

Rialto Packed at All Shows.

"I wonder if your class studying such things wouldn't enjoy putting on a little prologue for the picture?" said the winning Joe.

The matron thought the idea was just too splendid for anything, and—well, the story's over, except——

Every show, matinee and night, saw the Rialto packed, jammed and crowded to capacity. Real orphans, in real checkered dresses acted out a simple little prologue for the Mary Pickford picture, and the newspapers are still bubbling about it.

It was an easy matter, also, for the largest department store in Lincoln to arrange a big window display of gingham dresses and overalls for children's summer wear. The store was counting on such a window, anyway, as that was the time for it, and some pretty cut-outs of Mary Pickford in the window only added to its attractiveness.

Capellani Engages Helen Lowell.

The most recent stage favorite to capitulate to the lure of the silent drama is Helen Lowell, who has been engaged by Albert Capellani to play an important role in support of Dolores Cassinelli in her first subject as a star for the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., temporarily titled "The Gutter." Although Miss Lowell has held a place of prominence on the "legitimate" stage for over twenty-five years, her appearance in the new Capellani subject marks her first venture into motion picture work.

Miss Lowell is rated as one of the most versatile artistes on the "legitimate" stage, she having played important roles in a wide variety of productions ranging from Gilbert & Sullivan's "Iolanthe" to J. M. Barrie's "Quality Street," in which she supported Maude Adams. She has just concluded a successful Broadway engagement in support of William Courteney and Thomas Wise in "Cappy Ricks."

Films Club Holds Dance.

The Film Social Club, the membership of which is made up of the operating forces of the various film exchanges, gave its first dance and vaudeville entertainment at Unity Hall, 341 West Forty-seventh street, New York, on Thursday evening, May 29.

DON'T TREAT THE ROAD MEN ROUGHLY

Plea of "Smiling Jimmie" Kelly, in Opening His Series of Articles Treating on General Topics

By James B. Kelly, P. O. Box 1204, Dallas, Tex.

WE will take up the cause of the poor downtrodden "film peddler" who looms into a burg bright and early in the morning all full of "pep" and "ambish," to find that the one and only exhibitor is off on a fishing trip and won't return until late in the afternoon; also that there is only one train a day and the D. F. P. has the beautiful prospect of sitting around all day in a "tank" hotel writing letters; or, he can go out in the yard and throw pebbles at the sparrows.

About four in the p. m. he "hops" himself up to the fact that the exhibitor is an old friend of his, who was once a "D. F. P." himself and it's a cinch that being an old friend of his he'll land him for a series of pictures. But poor benighted boob! He little realizes that nine-tenths of those who become exhibitors "over night" immediately assume a "hard boiled" air and look upon a "D. F. P." in the same light that a baseball fan looks upon an umpire.

Therefore, after hanging around all day he doesn't even secure a pleasant smile from his former friend and brother sufferer and leaves the town that night at 1 a. m. with an empty order book, heavy heart and vowing vengeance on said exhibitor.

Leave an Open Date for Him.

Now I realize that Mr. Exhibitor only has six days a week in which to show his programs and he can only show from five to seven reels a day, and therefore he can't use all of the films that have been offered him. But if he is a wise exhibitor he won't tie himself up with a program for every day in the week, but will leave at least one day open in each week for "open" and "spot" booking. Then if our friend D. F. P. has something real good he can place it very nicely even if it be a month hence.

There is absolutely no excuse for an exhibitor to be "hard boiled" toward an exchange representative because the road could always secure a much better deal from a traveling representative than I could by going into the branch office and taking up the valuable time of the manager. When you give a traveling representative an order, he is going to make it his special business to see that your order is filled properly, as you are his "Own Special Customer."

His interest is with you, whereas on the other hand you may cause him to be sore on you and it will hurt you in the long run. Who knows that some day that same D. F. P. may be manager of your favorite exchange and he will never forget the treatment received at your hands on that "fatal" visit.

Treat 'Em as Nicely as You Can.

I want to call attention to another matter that may come up and will cause Mr. Exhibitor not only loss of sleep, but will also cause him to lose many sheckels. Did you ever realize that when you do not treat a traveling representative civilly you are "flirting with opposition"? It's the traveling representative who digs up "locations" for other exhibitors, and the minute you start to treat him "rough," he sets about making it his business to see that some other exhibitor gets into your town.

I know of many exhibitors who have the only show in their town, although the town could really pay two, simply because they "stand in" with all the D. F. P.'s and nobody "sicks" anyone on that town. On the other hand I know of some poor boob exhibitor in a much smaller town who is simply pestered to death with opposition, tent shows, etc., all on account of the fact that once upon a time he extended the "icy mitt" to some innocent looking film peddler, little realizing that some day he would get it in the neck, through his "hard boiled" treatment of this same "D. F. P."

Moral to All Exhibitors.

If it is absolutely impossible for you to give a film peddler business when he visits you, at least treat him civilly and let him show you what he has; for remember he fully believes that he is handling the very best films in the world. When you give him the "Double O" and tell him that you are busy and haven't time to talk to him or look at his wares, you insult his intelligence. Bear in mind that no matter how lowly he may seem, some day you will need his friendship and advice and when you do it will be not.

Stall him along with a little camouflage and smiles, and if it is absolutely impossible to give him anything, at least send him off thinking that you are the best fellow in the world. Make a friend out of him and it will mean many dollars in your pocket. Above all, try and book at least one picture from him.

Starts Work on "Widow by Proxy."

Following a week's rest at Palm Springs, Cal., Marguerite Clark has returned to the Morosco studio at Hollywood and has started work on her new Paramount picture, "Widow by Proxy," adapted from Catherine Chisholm Cushing's play, which served as a successful starring vehicle for May Irwin several seasons ago. Julia Crawford Ivers wrote the scenario and Walter Edwards is directing.

Miss Clark's leading man will be Nigel Barrie, who recently returned from service in the Canadian Army. He will be remembered as Miss Clark's leading man in "Bab's Burglar" and others of the "Bab" series produced in New York for Paramount release.

PASTOR ADVOCATES SUNDAY AMUSEMENT

Yates Minister Says the Lord Is Glad to See His Children Enjoy Proper Recreation on the Sabbath

CLERGYMEN who are opposing Sunday moving picture shows on the ground that the Lord's Day should not be commercialized would do well to take heed of the action of the Rev. Browning Dunne, of Yates, N. Y. This minister believes that the Lord should be worshipped on Sunday, but also that the Lord is glad to see his children who toil on six days of the week enjoy proper recreation on Sunday.

At a hearing on the Sunday question, Lawrence Smith, representing interests in favor of Sunday baseball, quoted: "Six days did the Lord labor, but on the seventh he rested." The fact that this quotation was not rhetorically correct brought out a number of good-natured comments, but all present admitted that it was correct in fact, and Charles O'Brien, of the Victory Theatre, even admitted that it was no exaggeration to include a picture show in a day's restful recreation.

For Recreation on Sunday.

Mr. Dunne told those present that it was true the Good Book says that the Lord rested on the seventh day, but owing to the fact that at the time the book was written there were no movies, there was a reasonable excuse for them not being mentioned. Pointing out that times have changed and that the world is entering a new era, he said that he knew of no reason why recreation might not be indulged in on Sundays. He even thought that properly regulated it might be of great good to all concerned.

Anyway, down in that peaceful region, where perhaps amusements are more appreciated because they are not as plentiful or as varied as in some other communities, they have fixed up an ideal Sunday program for the summer months. In the morning the Rev. Mr. Dunne wants everyone to come to his church; in the afternoon, Mr. Smith says, weather permitting, he will guarantee a corking good ball game, while Mr. O'Brien is going to give a good picture show in the evening.

And So All Are Happy.

Thusly, it may be seen that with a little reason and a little more horse sense the Sunday question may be settled to the satisfaction of all concerned. The baseball fans are going to church in the morning and the minister is rooting for the Sunday-school team in the afternoon. The movie fans likewise feel more like dropping some change in the plate because they have the satisfaction of knowing that their minister is not stubbornly opposing their wish to see a show on their only day of rest.

Dolgeville Gets Sunday Pictures.

The Board of Trustees of Dolgeville, N. Y., have adopted a resolution permitting Sunday picture shows between 2 and 6 p. m. and after 8.30 p. m. There was no opposition.

Will Boycott Sunday Show.

All Binghamton and Broome County picture houses which open on Sundays will be boycotted by the members of the Barca Philathea Union of Broome County. The boycotting resolution was adopted at the meeting of the union last week. The union also launched a movement for a new picture house or at least a new management for one which will agree to keep dark on Sundays. Such a theatre will only be patronized by members of the union in the future.

Utica Puts Off Sunday Shows.

The Common Council of Utica at their last meeting, for the second time, put over the Sunday motion picture question. Several protests were received at the meeting, but no definite action was taken. There is now in the Hippodrome Theatre office enough signed petition sheets to reach the length of five city blocks, but strange as it may seem the local managers have not yet presented these petitions, deciding to wait until opportunity is given for a public hearing.

Geneva to Decide Sunday Shows.

The Common Council of Geneva at its meeting on June 4 will undoubtedly decide the Sunday show proposition in that city, following a public hearing. Both the pros and antis were represented at the last session of the council. Michael F. Tracey, secretary of the Geneva Federation of Labor, presented a petition of 1,000 names all in favor of Sunday shows.

Pastors Condemn Action of Authorities.

Clergymen of nearly every denomination in Syracuse devoted Sunday, May 23, to roasting the motion picture interests, the Syracuse authorities, and others, for turning the day into a holiday. Fire and brimstone seethed from the sermons and the clergymen warned that they would be found entering politics to fight those who have given Syracuse a "Continental Holiday." William H. Anderson, of the Anti-Saloon League, was in Syracuse to help the local ministers. However, the sermons did not have the least effect in attendance at either the picture or vaudeville theatres.

Oswego Has Sunday Shows.

Oswego had its first Sunday movies on Sunday, May 25, and drew capacity crowds. The entire net receipts of every house were given to the Home Welcome Committee to help pay the expenses of the big welcome home celebration to be held the latter part of June.

SCHENECTADY MANAGERS INDIFFERENT

City's Larger Theatres Insist They Cannot Afford to Pay License Demanded for Sundays

PROPRIETORS of motion picture theatres in Schenectady, instead of being discouraged over the action on the part of Mayor Simon, in vetoing the action on the part of the common council in permitting the operation of Sunday shows, are taking the opposite stand owing to the fact that certain prohibitive restrictions would have been required of them. The larger theatres, according to Charles C. McDonald, manager of the Van Curler Opera House, could not afford to pay the license required for a first class Sunday picture show and meet the day's expenses. Furthermore, there was no reason, say the managers, for the city charging one rate in one zone and a higher rate in another.

Mayor Simon, in vetoing the council's action, said:

"To encourage attendance at Sunday shows would not operate either for the moral or physical benefit of the people, whose weekly holiday can be more profitably spent in the home or the open."

Politicians intimate that the action on the part of the Mayor will have a far-reaching effect and that the veto will become a political issue next fall. There is no doubt but there is a wide demand for Sunday pictures in Schenectady, and it is now said the refusal of the mayor to approve the action of the aldermen will affect the mayor's candidacy if he decides to seek a renomination.

An Issue in Watertown Election.

In Watertown, after the mayor had vetoed the action on the part of the council, the aldermen got busy for a second time and passed the ordinance over the mayor's veto and as a result the northern city will have Sunday shows in the near future. As in Schenectady, however, the question of Sunday movies now threatens to become a decidedly live issue at the municipal election next fall, and every candidate for a place on the city ticket will be asked to state definitely his stand on Sunday movies. Those opposed to Sunday motion picture shows declare that they will seek to elect aldermen who will repeal the ordinance permitting Sunday movies.

A rather unusual situation has cropped out in Watertown. Employes of the picture houses demand one day a week to themselves and as a result it is quite possible the theatres there will be dark on Tuesdays, the Papayanokos Brothers controlling all but one of the houses in the city. This arrangement would not only provide the employes with a day of rest but also would do away with the necessity of securing a feature picture for a single day as pictures in Watertown are now used for two-day periods. GRANT.

Daily Starts Movie Bureau.

An information bureau, where theatregoers and exhibitors may secure information regarding any detail of the industry, has been inaugurated by the Washington Times, Washington, D. C., and will be under the management of Bob Lee.

As part of the new service a motion picture directory is printed in the paper daily, in which are shown the programs of the Washington houses.

At the same time the Exhibitors' Aid is opened—a bureau that will be devoted to supplying information to men in the industry in this city. The bureau expects to be able to answer all queries about the production, distribution and exhibition of moving pictures, stars, apparatus, bookings, and releases.

NEW CIRCUIT FOR EASTERN CANADA

Pantages Announces Extension of His Theatre Field to Provinces of Quebec and Ontario

THE official announcement regarding the invasion of Eastern Canada by Alexander Pantages, the Western theatrical magnate, and the plans for the building of a circuit of theatres in Eastern Canada shows that an entirely new development is under way in moving picture and vaudeville circles of Ontario and Quebec. The company to control the new circuit has been incorporated as Eastern Theatres, Limited, headquarters at Toronto, with a capitalization of $1,800,000. The company proposes to own and operate a circuit of Pantages moving picture and vaudeville theatres similar to the Pantages theatres in the United States.

Prominent Men in Directorate.

The personnel of the directorate indicates that the company will be closely associated with Regal Films, Limited, Regent Theatres, Limited, and Paramount Theatres, Limited. The directors include a number of wealthy Canadians such as W. J. Sheppard, Waubashene, Ontario, president of the Georgian Bay Lumber Company, Alfred Rogers, Toronto, president of Elias Rogers Coal Company; D. L. White, of Playfair & White, Midland, Ontario; J. B. Tudhope, president of Carriage Factories, Limited; J. P. Bickell, Toronto, president of Regent Theatres, Limited, and Regal Films, Limited, and F. E. Maulson Toronto, of Irish & Maulson. The managing director is N. L. Nathanson, of Toronto, who is also managing director of Regent Theatres, Limited, Paramount Theatres, Limited, and Regal Films, Limited.

The company holds a long term franchise for Pantages' vaudeville bookings and shows will be arranged by the Pantages Booking Circuit of New York and Chicago. The new theatres in Eastern Canada will be managed in conjunction with the Pantages Theatres in the United States and Canada. It is stated that Mr. Pantages owns outright or controls over sixty theatres in the two countries already.

Now Building First Theatre.

What is known as the "parent theatre" of the new circuit in Eastern Canada is already being constructed on Yonge and Victoria streets in the centre of the retail business district of Toronto, the main entrance being on Yonge street, the main thoroughfare. This will have a seating capacity of 3,500.

Announcement is made that the Eastern Theatres, Limited, will sell booking rights to other theatres "intended to be erected in several cities of Eastern Canada." The "parent theatre" at Toronto is to be ready by January 1, 1920. Plans for this house have been drawn by T. W. Lamb, architect.

ONTARIO HAS MOVING PICTURE LIBRARY

Pioneer Institution Distributes Educational Programs with Seasoning of Comedy Features

THE Ontario Government has made considerable progress with its department of moving picture films. The Province of Ontario claims to be a pioneer in the establishment of a moving picture exchange for official purposes as a "library" of films was opened about three years ago. More than 200 different subjects, with several prints of each subject, are now to be found in the official exchange and the preparation of thirty more films is under way.

The Provincial Department of Agriculture has probably made more use of moving pictures for educational purposes than any other department of the government. The forty-seven district representatives of the Department of Agriculture are provided with portable projection outfits including a storage battery for the generation of current when a local service is not available. Picture shows are held in many small rural communities where there are no theatres. The program for these shows usually consists of an agricultural feature and several "fillers," the latter including selected comedies, travelogues, scenics and general educationals, all of which are supplied from the Government's bureau. Chaplin's "A Night at the Show" is one of the standard comedies which is to be released by the Government exchange.

Pictures Have Large Circulation.

It is estimated that fully 700,000 citizens of Ontario have seen Government pictures during the past two years and arrangements have just been made for the release of a considerable number of the official prints throughout all Canada through Regal Films, Limited, at the rate of two per month. These will be supplied to about 400 theatres of Canada.

The official Ontario films are loaned free of charge to all responsible applicants, the latter being required to pay the transportation charges. A number of the Ontario prints have been presented in the United States under official auspices and some have been loaned to the Community Motion Picture Bureau of New York. Five portable projection machines are being used at the Canadian Khaki University at London, England, for the presentation of twenty-eight different pictures which belong to the Ontario Government.

Provides Diversity of Subjects.

Natural resources of Ontario, important industries, farm life in Ontario, vocational training, ad ice to mothers on nursing, bread-making, use of farm implements, advantages of good roads, the building of good roads and other educational features are included among the many subjects which are included in the Government films. It is announced that these and other Government releases have been shown to over 200 organizations and at fall fairs, conventions and other gatherings during the past two years.

No picture is released for presentation unless it is technically perfect and its details are fully approved by Government authorities.

Bin Moore Joins Fox.

Hampton Del Ruth, editor and supervising director of William Fox Sunshine Comedies, has added Bin Moore to his directorial staff. This makes four directors now working under Del Ruth in his process of building up the finest comedy organization on the West Coast.

Stanley Company of America Formed with Capital of $15,000,000—Headed by Jules E. Mastbaum

CONSOLIDATION of many of the biggest financial, theatrical and motion picture interests in the East, including men who are known far and wide as financiers and purveyors of amusements, into a corporation with a capital stock of $15,000,000, has been announced by Jules E. The Capital Theatre at 724 Market street, now nearing completion, will be opened in the early autumn, and will be devoted entirely to motion pictures.

TEASER CAMPAIGN HERALDS "SALOME"

Publicity Director for Saenger Amusement Company Gives Details of Newspaper Drive for Fox Feature

WE have been favored by the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation with advance copy of an excellent article on newspaper advertising that will appear in a forthcoming issue of Fox's Exhibitor's Bulletin. L. H. Grandjean, director of publicity for the Saenger Amusement Company, with headquarters in New Orleans, wrote the story that tells in detail how he conducted a two-weeks' "teaser" campaign in various towns ranging in population from 15,000 upward.

To those who receive and read the Exhibitors' Bulletin this article will not come as news, but it is to be assumed that hundreds of subscribers to Moving Picture World will not get the Bulletin; if they do they may not read the Grandjean article—and, for these reasons, we incorporate the story in this issue where our exhibitor-subscribers may all see it and be able thus to avail themselves of the showmanship and experience of an expert advertising and publicity man of the character and standing of Mr. Grandjean.

Here Is Mr. Grandjean's Article.

I wish to make it clear at the outset that while this discussion concerns the exploitation of an individual production, it covers points applicable to many productions. I have taken "Salome" as an illustration because I wish to direct attention to a particular campaign, believing that the general style of this campaign may frequently be adapted to other pictures.

It is my opinion that two weeks' newspaper exploitation of a picture is not too great for the average small city, and this article deals with advertising which was done in our circuit towns where the range of population is from 15,000 upwards. In the case of "Salome" we used teaser copy.

For starting the campaign we select the dates as the points to be emphasized, coupling this up with the theatre name-plate and announcing: "Something's Going to Happen Here April 18 and 19." A single column space, one and one-half inches, is used and the first publication is twelve days in advance of the showing.

Stringing the Teaser Along.

On the following day the copy is changed to read: "One Word Tells the Whole Story. What Is It? We'll Tell You Before April 18 and 19." Again we use one and one-half inches, single, and feature the dates and the theatre name-plate. Gradually the size is increased and the scope of the text broadened.

Thus, on the fourth day, we say: "The Suspense Is Awful. Why Can't We Tell You? Is It a He? A She? Or It? What's to be at the Rapides April 18 and 19?" This advertisement runs two inches, single.

The following day we announce: "Ah! It's a SHE Coming April 18 and 19—Tomorrow We'll Print HER Picture." On the sixth day we use seven inches, single, with a cut of Theda Bara, as Salome, her face being masked by routing out her eyes and forehead. Over the cut we announce: "Here She Is!" Below It: "And Now the Question Is, WHO IS SHE?" followed by name-plate and dates.

It is Saturday and as no Sunday newspaper is printed in the town where this campaign was first run—Alexandria, La.—we have given our patrons some food for thought over Sunday. On Monday Salome still wears her mask in the illustration of a seven and one-half inch, single, and the legend above the cut states: "Now We'll Tell You: She's a Wild Woman." Below the cut are additional details: "Yep, a Wild Woman—and the Most Noted Dancer You or I Ever Heard of. You'll See April 18 and 19," and then the name-plate.

Teaser Used First Day of Campaign.

Theda Bara Is Unmasked.

On the eighth day, we have the same Salome illustration used previously, except that the features of Theda Bara are visible, and our caption is: "Oh, Look! Her Mask Is Off!—So Now We'll Tell You Her Name. And the Sewing Circle Will Have a Live Topic to Discuss. For She Is (the cut here) Salome, the Python of Palestine." Then follows more copy, the name-plate and the dates.

This advertisement is ten inches, single. And on this day, for the first time since the inauguration of the campaign, we use a press notice and a two-column scene cut in the amusement columns.

The Sixth Day Teaser.
Stock cut was used, the eyes and forehead being routed out.

The cut is selected to fit the story; we always take care that cuts tally with the stories.

Our campaign now is in full blossom and eight inches, double, are used for our next advertisement. A three-column scene cut illustrates the advertisement and another one of similar size is used in a story in the amusement column. Stress still is laid on the dates—three different mentions, one of them, "The Day After Tomorrow and Saturday," driving home the time.

Patrons Finish the Campaign.

Eleven inches, across three, is devoted to the advertisement the day preceding the showing. We use a different illustration and the sort of copy we would have used if we hadn't breathed a line about the shown in previous advertisements. Seven inches, two columns, are used on the first day of the showing—all type, no illustrations. And on the last day we come back with four and one-half inches, two columns, all type.

With our biggest advertisement we run in the news columns our largest scene cut, showing massive settings and hundreds of people, and a story to suit. On the day of the showing we place a two-column scene cut, but the last day we have none—we are expecting our pleased patrons to do most of our advertising on the second day.

All Out of the Press Book.

This is a flexible campaign. We tested that when the shipment of cuts from one town to another of our circuit delayed the start of the Hattiesburg campaign. It was shrunk from twelve units to seven, and was comprehensive at that.

It is significant that every cut and every word in the advertisements, and in the advance notices, was supplied by the exchange and the William Fox press book, with the exception of the "teaser" copy, which we wrote. All the necessary material is there. Some of the arrangements of the advertisements might be varied, and you might pick a line from one advertisement and a line from another in the press book.

But that is largely a matter of taste. The Fox Film Corporation has given everything—even the right for you to use your own discretion! If you're in doubt on a "Salome" campaign, use the advertisements and stories just as they are in the press book.

Pacinis Acquire Two More Houses.

The Charles Pacini Amusements has secured a 99-year lease on the Hotel Maywood corner at Wisconsin and Main, Kenosha, Wis., and will build a modern moving picture theatre on the site with a seating capacity of 1,800. The new theatre will cost about $175,000 and Charles Pacini, president and general manager, intends to build another house on the West Side of the city with a capacity of 1,200 at an outlay of $80,000.

This will give the company four houses in Kenosha, the Majestic and Butterfly, now operating, and the two new houses, which will be built this year.

The company has also taken over the Majestic Theatre, of Harvard, Ill., a cozy 325-seat house, and will feature Paramount and other well-known films.

W. J. O'Brien has been appointed manager and he will be assisted by his brother, A. J. O'Brien, who has just returned from California.

BACH TELLS PLANS FOR DOOLEY FILMS

Company to Make Twelve Two-Reel Comedies a Year Featuring Johnny Dooley—First Three Finished

THAT the elements essential to success with screen comedies and up-to-date musical comedies are identical is the belief of C. L. Bach, president of the Johnny Dooley Film Comedies, Inc.

"Experience has shown that a lot of pep, a good comedian and a number of beautiful women are necessary with musical shows," says Mr. Bach, who should be in a position to know, as he is a successful theatrical producer, being at the present time interested in "Listen, Lester," one of the biggest successes of the season in New York.

"Working on this basis," continued Mr. Bach, "I secured the services of Johnny Dooley, who has an international reputation as a comedian and whose unique method of 'putting over' his comedy has won favor not only in this country but in Europe. The 'pep' is supplied in the form of bright, clever stories based on Bide Dudley's 'Office Boy' stories, published in the New York Evening World and last, but not least, the other important element has been supplied by surrounding the comedian with twenty beauties who comprise the Johnny Dooley Beauty Brigade. All of these girls appear nightly in successful Broadway shows.

To Make Twelve Pictures a Year.

The schedule for the Dooley comedies calls for twelve a year. The first three have been completed and the cast is now being selected for the fourth. The general title will be "The Office Force," with Johnny Dooley as the "freckle-faced office boy." Various leading women will be used, being selected from a standpoint of beauty as well as suitability to type. Martha Mansfield, of the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic, and Lillian Hall and Alice Mann, known for their work before the camera, appeared in the first three productions.

"The Dooley comedies will all be high-class, free from slap-stick or horse-play," continued Mr. Bach. "However, Johnny will make use of his acrobatic ability and introduce a number of thrilling stunts. A feature of his work is his absolute fearlessness. In one of the films he made a running dive across the studio, landing seated in a chair after executing a complete somersault in the air. He has also planned to use a full-rigged ship in a later film so that he may have the opportunity of running all over the rigging without using his hands."

Johnny Dooley has had an interesting career. Running away from home he joined a circus and as an acrobat learned many falls, leaps and dives which he will use in his pictures. He later toured Europe in pantomime and for six years has been a vaudeville headliner in this country. For several months he appeared in the leading comedy role in "Listen Lester," but recently resigned as this was interfering with his film work. At present he is working in the studio by day and in the evenings is appearing in the Ziegfeld Frolic. His work is said to be on the continental style and to differ from the broad type of humor adopted by a number of American screen comedians. Next year he expects to devote his time entirely to films. He possesses a high degree of intelligence and interpolates many clever stunts and bits of business into his own work.

Distribution Plans Not Settled.

No arrangement has as yet been made regarding distribution, although many offers have been received from both program and state rights concerns. Mr. Bach is convinced that the Johnny Dooley comedies will prove to be immensely popular not only in this country but abroad, and anticipates taking a trip to Europe so as to personally arrange for foreign distribution.

This series of comedies is being directed by John D. Schulze, while Harry Keepers is the cinematographer. The office of the company is located at 812 Longacre Building, New York. As an added feature in the third comedy, Sophie Tucker, a vaudeville headliner, known as "The Queen of the Jazz," appears.

Conditions Analyzed for Rothacker Release Plans

THE Rothacker "system," which has won such commendation recently for the service installed at the Chicago printing and developing plant and also for the quality of print turned out, will now apply itself to a comprehensive study of exchange and releasing conditions all over the United States.

This first hand survey comes as preliminary to the release of several single reels by Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, who is studying conditions with the idea of finding the best means of releasing his product. Among the single reels for distribution are a novelty reel, a scenic, and the Rothacker Review, which will be described to the trade shortly.

G. S. Anderson is now completing a trip covering Canada, Buffalo, New York, Philadelphia and other Eastern points. S. Calvert is traversing Kentucky, Indiana and Michigan. C. P. Tobin is covering Michigan. E. O. Blackburn is taking in the territory of New Orleans, Texas, Memphis, Oklahoma and Missouri, while Stanley West is looking over the Middle West.

Mr. Rothacker himself has left Chicago for an exhaustive study of conditions on the Pacific Coast. When all the information has been compiled and analyzed, the releasing plans of the Rothacker organization will be announced.

Wharton Made Supervising Head of San Antonio Films

PLANS for the future of the Theodore K. Wharton Company became known last week when Mr. Wharton returned to Ithaca. He has been appointed supervising director of the San Antonio Picture Corporation, which will star Maclyn Arbuckle in productions to be written by Irvin S. Cobb, Holman Day, Harry Wilson and George V. Hobart. In addition he will also produce three serials at the Wharton plant at Ithaca for Pathe.

The three will be made during the summer, and Renwick Park promises to be a lively place in spite of the sale of the Wharton producing paraphernalia there. Wharton has also contracted with George Eastman of Rochester for the filming of a special picture for the Monroe County War Chest. Mr. Wharton will make his headquarters in Ithaca, going occasionally to San Antonio, where his brother, Leo, as general manager and vice president, will have charge of the new enterprise there.

Adolf Philipp Opens Offices.

The Adolf Philipp Film Corporation, which was organized a few weeks ago, have opened offices and studios at 11 East Fourteenth street, New York, formerly occupied by the Prizma.

The studios are being entirely renovated and are being equipped with an entirely new electric light plant.

By Mr. Philipp turning over twenty-nine of his plays to the Adolf Philipp Film Corporation the company is in a position to duplicate these successes for the screen. He will introduce a new feature in the way of incidental music to his productions.

PRIVATE SHOWING FOR WILLARD FILM

Champion Divided His Time Between Acting in Studio and Training for Fight with Dempsey

"THE Challenge of Chance," a seven-reel special feature in which Jess Willard is being starred by the Continental Pictures Corporation, according to the announcement from the representatives of the company, will shortly be ready for private screening.

It has already been announced that the company purposes conducting a national billboard campaign prior to the release of the picture; and an extensive advance publicity campaign, embracing hundreds of the leading newspapers of the country, has been under way for several weeks past. In addition, a system of scientific "spotting" has been employed to place special publicity stories and pictures in spots where they will attract the attention of a specific class of readers.

Advertising in Experts' Hands

This campaign, together with the future exploitation and marketing of the production, is in the hands of E. Lanning Masters, Inc. This organization is divided into several bureaus—marketing, exhibitor's service, producers' service, advertising, publicity and financing.

The picture has been completed. Willard left California last week and is now at his training quarters in Toledo. Director Revier, with Arline Pretty, who is to be featured with Willard, is expected to come east in a few days. Mr. Revier, it is said, will have prints by the time he arrives.

The story was written by Roy Somerville and includes some massive outdoor scenes, including a big racetrack action and a border raid. Thousands of people have been used in some scenes, taken in Old Mexico and in Southern California.

Champion Acts and Trains

Special interest is attached to the making of the subject owing to the fact that the heavyweight champion was engaged in training for his title bout while working in the pictures. He devoted his mornings and early forenoons to training and the rest of the day to work before the camera. His gymnasium was set up in the studio, and most of his training was done in secret.

Outside Photographers Banned

Willard gave additional value to the Continental's seven-reel special by banning cameras from his training quarters as soon as he began work. He ruled that no pictures should be made of him in fighting regalia during the early stages of his work in California and the result was that the only authentic photographic news of the champion's condition which newspapers and magazines have been able to get up to date have been the "stills" taken in connection with the making of "The Challenge of Chance." This resulted in the New York Evening Telegram using a half-page layout showing Jess in scenes from the picture.

Plans are now being made for a special showing of the picture to exhibitors, and the producers express confidence that the finished production will prove a revelation to them.

CO-OPERATIVE STUDIO FOR COAST

As Public Tire of Southern Californian Scenery, San Francisco Mutually-Run Plant Is Suggested

REPRESENTATIVES of producing companies, San Francisco civic and commercial organizations, with members of the Board of Supervisors, met on May 28 in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce and pledged their moral support to a proposed plan for a co-operative moving picture studio for that city, which could be used by various film producing concerns.

Joseph A. Eliason, of the Herman Film Corporation, attended the meeting and declared that producers realized that a change must be made in the location of studios, widespread complaints having come from the public to the effect that it was tired of Southern California scenes. He said further: "Many studios operating in other cities will gladly come to San Francisco if proper quarters are available, and they are assured the united support of commercial and municipal bodies. San Francisco and the peninsula furnish the most advantageous field for moving picture enterprises on the Coast, including climate and natural scenery."

As a result of his representations, resolutions were adopted giving full indorsement to the plan by the interests represented at the gathering.

Supervisors to Lend Aid.

The supervisors present pledged the support of the city's lawmaking body and, C. A. Day, of the Chamber of Commerce, said that this organization would gladly co-operate with producing companies. William J. Otts, president of the William Otts Production Company, was present and announced that he had selected a site for a studio here and would begin operations at once. Another meeting will be held at an early date, at which a concrete plan of operation will be submitted.

Scarcely a week passes but that some company comes here from the Southland to secure suitable exteriors, and many directors have stated that most of their work would be done here, if suitable studio facilities were provided. The numerous offers to lease studios have encouraged local interests to give the plan of erecting a large one their attention.

Eddie Foy to Make Comedies.

Eddie Foy and his family of seven will go to Denver for the summer to make two-reel comedy pictures which will be known as the Foy Fun Films. George McManus, well-known New York cartoonist, has created a special cartoon character for Mr. Foy. Albert W. Hale is manager of productions for the National Film Corporation and will direct Mr. Foy.

"LOST BATTALION" INCIDENT FILMED

Men of 77th Division React Heroic Episode of Argonne—Duplicate Original French Scenery

THE MacManus Corporation has taken for the plot of its first big production the heroic stand made by the First Battalion of the 308th Infantry, which will be known to history as "The Lost Battalion."

The deeds of this gallant force while surrounded in the forest of the Argonne are known to everyone who has followed the story of the battles that have been fought on the fields of France. Readers will recall the special greeting that was given to this particular unit of the 77th Division as it paraded under the command of Major General Alexander and received the plaudits of millions, when it paraded up Fifth avenue on May 6.

Identical Equipment Used.

The interest of the MacManus picture, which will be called "The Lost Battalion," lies in the fact that it is a perfect reconstruction made under the direction of the officers and men who fought that engagement, with the guns and equipment they used to withstand the onslaught of the enemy. Major-General Robert Alexander took such a keen interest in seeing that Mr. MacManus should make no error in the slightest detail in his production, that he himself visited the scene where the action was laid and made a thorough inspection of the trenches, forest-land, and terrain that had been selected by regimental engineers as conforming in almost every aspect to the actual spot in the Argonne Forest, where the Lost Battalion made its stand.

Incidents Reacted by Soldiers.

Lieut-Colonel Charles W. Whittlesey accompanied General Alexander on the several visits made, and selected the actual subordinate officers who showed unusual gallantry and accomplished deeds of daring in the face of untold odds. The public will receive a surprise when they realize that there is being presented to their vision not mere actors, but the actual heroes who fought in that fight. Not only were the sites chosen for the production of the scene by military experts, but every man who played a part in that tragedy of the war, was engaged by the MacManus Corporation to re-enact his original role.

Love-Theme Introduced.

Mr. MacManus' production is not founded entirely on the deeds of daring in the Argonne. He has provided his story with an original motive, a love theme. As it is generally known, the 77th Division was New York's own division. The wealthy boy of the avenue greeted on an equal footing the son of the Italian peddler.

Thus the story of the draft, the training in the camp with all its humorous lights and shadows, the breaking up of the home, the parting of lovers, the separation of husband and wife, the breaking up of families, the rupture in business relations, are accurately emphasized and treated in such an original manner that the sidelights of the story in their pathos and their humor almost overshadow the grim tragedy of war.

Harry A. Palmer mobilized the non-military characters necessary to the plot and who are individually prominent as screen favorites. Burton King directed the production, his associate director being Leander De Cordova, who in turn was assisted by John Coleman and Frederick F. McGuirk. The dramatization of the story of the Lost Battalion was accomplished by Charles A. Logue, whose recent writing of the Houdini serial and other photoplays have given him distinction as an author of silent drama.

Miss Marion Coakley and Gaston Glass were selected to portray the non-military roles.

Realism Affects Actors.

These actors admitted they did not feel they were playing the parts allotted them. They felt more like spectators. The realism of the production as it was played by the soldiers themselves overwhelmed them in its intensity. Each one felt as if he and she were mere spectators of a real battle. The continuous firing and din unnerved not a few of the players, and the bits of realism that were injected by the soldiers themselves appalled them.

The production called for realism hitherto unknown in filmdom. Trees were splintered, boulders were shivered, craters were formed where shells were thrown. Bombs burst in the air, real bullets chipped through the foliage. Starlight shells illumined the gloom of "No Man's Land," and the silhouetted barbed wire bore upon its prongs shreds of clothing, with here and there a soldier re-acting the spasms of the wounded.

Credits State Right Men with Saving Open Market

IN connection with the statements recently appearing in various trade journals regarding the open market system of releasing pictures, H. F. Jans, president of Jans Productions, Inc., takes up the cudgels for the state rights distributors and presents their side of the controversy.

"I want to give credit where it is due," says Mr. Jans, "but wish to state that while many of those mentioned as originators of the open market and exhibitors co-operation were still theorizing upon the feasibility of these innovations, the territorial rights buyers and managers of state rights exchanges throughout the country were actually putting these theories into practice.

"All honor to the men in Seattle, Atlanta, Minneapolis, Boston and thirty other exchange centers. They have not been mentioned, but every exhibitor knows these men were the pioneers of the innovations so strongly publicized at this time. The individual state rights men in the various districts were the actual stumbling blocks in the path of prospective domination of exhibitors through programs. These independents were the salvation of exhibitors from the very beginning. To these unnamed men belong the glory of the present situation.

Sturgeon Is Director of "Destiny."

Owing to an inexplicable error, the credit for the direction of "Destiny," Dorothy Phillips' new Universal production, was given to Allen Holubar. Universal announces that Rollin Sturgeon was the director of the picture, and kindly asks that anyone giving publicity to this picture, make note of the correction.

KATHERINE MACDONALD HEADS COMPANY

Player of Title Role in "Woman Thou Gavest Me" to Appear in Series of Pictures—One Completed

CLOSELY following the release of the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," comes the news that Katherine Macdonald, who plays the leading and title role in that production, has formed her own producing company and will make six special features during the coming year under her own management, to be released by B. P. Fineman. Although Miss Macdonald had left the Famous Players-Lasky organization after she completed her work in "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," no authoritative news of her future plans was obtainable until the announcement was made in the advertising columns of the trade press that she had completed the first picture made by her own company and that the method of release would be announced later.

Following this, announcement was made at the offices of B. P. Fineman this week that arrangements had been completed whereby Mr. Fineman would release the Katherine Macdonald productions. The transaction was arranged between Mr. Fineman and Sam E. Rork, one of the executives of the Katherine Macdonald Pictures Corporation, who was in New York last week for the purpose of arranging for an advantageous release.

Star Had Rapid Rise.

About a year ago, Miss Macdonald was comparatively unknown to the motion picture fans. The first real opportunity to display her abilities was afforded her when William S. Hart selected her to play the leading female role opposite him in "Shark Monroe," an Artcraft picture. Her work in this production attracted immediate attention, both from the public and the daily press throughout the country. She was immediately re-engaged to play opposite Mr. Hart in another production, "Riddle Gawne," and repeated the success she made in her first really important effort.

Following this, she was engaged to play opposite Douglas Fairbanks, and won her new laurels through her work with the star in "Headin' South," also an Artcraft picture.

By this time she had achieved a real position in the film firmament. She has been interviewed many times in popular motion picture periodicals, and the intimate details of her daily life, which the public demands to know about its favorites, have been extensively pictured and storied.

Production Is Limited.

Miss Macdonald had originally planned to have eight photoplays produced during the coming year, but that she changed her plans in order that the pictures might gain quality and distinctiveness.

In Mr. Fineman's statement regarding the release of the Katherine Macdonald pictures, this restriction of output is touched on. Mr. Fineman said: "Not more than six productions starring Miss MacDonald will be made during the next year, and the same number is the maximum planned for the following year. This will give Miss Macdonald's producing organization ample time to make pictures that will be worthy of her talents."

Personnel of Organization.

Miss Macdonald's producing organization includes Charles E. Evans and Sam E. Rork, both men of long experience in the show business as well as in pictures, and Colin Campbell, the director, who is remembered for the successful photoplays, "The Spoilers," "The Garden of Allah," "The Crisis," "The Still Alarm," and others.

Mr. Fineman was a member of the Famous Players-Lasky organization until very recently. He was largely instrumental in the inauguration of the exploitation department, which is to be a feature of the Paramount-Artcraft distributing plan for the next season.

EAGLE RIVER "DISCOVERS" CHAPLIN

Residents of Wisconsin Town Familiarized with "Shoulder Arms" by Children's Word Struggle

HOW many words can you make from the letters in the two words, "Shoulder Arms?" This was the question that put the boys and girls under fourteen years of age, in Eagle River, Wis., to real hard work. Eagle River is a town of perhaps two thousand, and the Dreamland Theatre, which seats 120, is usually ample to accomodate the crowds. It was hard work for the salesmen for the First National Circuit, to book Charlie Chaplin with Frank W. Carter and Thomas W. Macquacker, managers of the house.

"Too much money for such a small house!" they grumbled. But the salesman convinced them that they might try him out once, and having put their names on the dotted line, they put their heads together to evolve a totally different procedure of exploitation than had previously been used. A children's contest was the result—and although it is still several days before the picture will be played, the managers have no qualms as to its financial returns.

Scheme Works Well.

Heralds were scattered about town, advertising the fact that two complimentary tickets would be given to the boy and girl who succeeded in making the most words from the letters in "Shoulder Arms." But they were not prepared for the deluge of words that descended. It never occurred to the managers that the number of words would run into the hundreds—but they did. The boy winner, Harrison Weil, handed in 587 words, all good English language words, and the girl winner, Maxine McIntyre, handed in 443 words. Both children are less than ten years old, although the contest was open to those up to fourteen. They did the job systematically by taking the dictionary and going through it for words having the same letter. The words were written neatly in columns and numbered so that they could easily be counted.

Overflow Meeting in Opera House.

"The advertising we got out of the stunt was wonderful," wrote Frank Carter, manager, to H. J. Fitzgerald, of the Milwaukee office. "We have a boy engaged to parade the streets dressed as Charlie, the day of the show. He will wear the funny shoes, hat and baggy trousers, and carry a cane, and will bear the sign, 'Show Now Going On at the Opera House.' We have decided not to use the Dreamland for this show, as we know it will not accommodate the crowds, and have rented the Opera House, seating about 250, and will show a continuous program from noon until midnight. We have added a drum with sound effects, to the piano, so we can bring out all there is in the picture. It will be a big day in Eagle River when Charlie is here. Incidentally we have raised our admission price to 25 and 35 cents!"

Katherine Macdonald
Appears well content with the contract for the release of her own productions by B. P. Fineman.

Baltimore Y. M. C. A. Uses Motion Pictures in Teaching

THE method of teaching by motion pictures has been adopted by the Baltimore Y. M. C. A. in order that the more important phases of its work in developing character as well as physical and moral health may be emphasized.

Through the use of motion pictures a definite propaganda of information is being developed. Instructive films which deal with physical and moral development, economics, Americanization and religion are to be shown at the Central Building in Baltimore, three nights a week, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, at which soldiers and sailors are present. Later on they will be shown every night. The pictures have been given an enthusiastic reception.

The Community Motion Picture Bureau of the National Y. M. C. A. are making and distributing the films to the "Y" centers.

CRITICISE FILM TRADE BOARD RULES

Expect New Association of Kansas Exhibitors to Adjust Difficulties Among Showmen and Exchanges

THE atmosphere between the exhibitors and the Kansas City Film Board of Trade will doubtless be cleared within the next few weeks. The new association of Kansas exhibitors is expected to tackle this subject with aggressiveness. No hint has been given as to what the association will do; but this much can confidently be predicted: less actual unpleasantness unless a few changes are made in the rules of the Board of Trade.

The Kansas City board has been established on a substantial basis and has a membership including most of the exchanges. As long as some of the exchanges are out of it there is always the danger that its rules cannot be enforced; there is always that chance of the exigencies of competition causing a slackening of interest.

Exchangemen's Conflicting Beliefs.

The exchanges which are in the board earnestly believe that they are working in the right direction. Some of the exchange managers outside the board are equally earnest in their contention that the board is not approaching the subject from the right angle. In only a few cases in or outside of the board do purely selfish considerations prevail —the majority of the managers really want to bring about the best conditions for all parties in the industry.

One objection to the program of the board is that the benefit of its operation are one-sided—the exhibitor does not have any recourse in case accidents happen to his disadvantage.

Some exchange managers and most exhibitors now have the position that all contracts between exchanges and exhibitors can best be handled between the exhibitor and the exchange manager. As one manager put it, "It's up to me to get the money and make adjustments. And while there are many ways in which associations of exhibitors as well as managers, can help the industry, I don't believe the Film Board of Trade has this helpful slant yet."

To Show Strength of Organization.

The tone of the Kansas convention at Hutchinson was one of co-operation and helpfulness. Conferences may be held at which outlines may be developed for working out a satisfactory plan of operation for a Film Board of Trade, one that will be satisfactory to the exhibitor as well as to the exchanges. The present prospect, however, is that the exhibitors will show how strong their organization is and will try to demonstrate to the board that it cannot continue to operate under its present system.

The Kansas exhibitors have tried to organize before, but they couldn't make their agreements stick. They agreed once to resist the requirement of a deposit; but only a few exhibitors stuck it out—most of them came across with the deposit when it was required. One exhibitor—in a fine town with one of the best theatres in the state—held out consistently against the deposit, and he is now angry with the state exhibitors because the rest of them did not stick it out, too. He is fearful that the Kansas exhibitors will not hold together.

Atkinson and Cohen Are Promoted by Metro Heads

ANNOUNCEMENT is made from the offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation of the appointment of William E. Atkinson as general manager in entire charge of the active business of the company. Mr. Atkinson has hitherto been business manager of Metro and has been with the concern since shortly after its organization. Within the year he has taken over the management of the exchanges, and up to this time he has been in charge of the foreign department.

His appointment as general manager brings about an advancement for another original Metro man, Harry J. Cohen, who now takes full charge of the foreign department.

"Red Lantern" Shown in Seattle with Many Props

PRESENTATION of the "Red Lantern," Nazimova's latest release, at the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, this week has created a great deal of interest. The theatre front is made up with paint, bunting, and lanterns, to look like a Chinese temple, and the doorman is dressed like a mandarin. The ushers are dressed in different colored satin Chinese costumes.

After a preliminary concert the orchestra begins playing an Oriental tune, while the curtain parts to disclose a street scene in Peking, similar to that first shown in the picture. The stage lights are out when the curtains first separate, the scene showing very dimly, as at night; then gradually the lights come on, disclosing the scene fully.

In a moment a girl appears, dressed in the black Chinese costume similar to that Nazimova wears in the first scene, and trots across the stage, carrying a basket like that Nazimova carries. She goes to the opposite side of the stage and sits down, takes off her shoe, then puts it on again, and goes dancing off. The showing of the picture then begins with full orchestral accompaniment. The atmosphere thus created at the beginning is maintained throughout the performance by the excellent interpretation of the orchestra.

George Rogovoy, 'cellist of the Imperial Russian Orchestra, later a member of Damrosch's New York Symphony Orchestra and of Hammerstein's Philadelphia Orchestra, has been engaged for the Guterson orchestra at the Clemmer.

Clark Photoplay Company Formed.

Frederick Russell Clark, president of the Clark Photoplay Company, a new organization of Chicago, makes the announcement that it will produce three high class state rights features a year and a two-reel comedy every second week.

Mr. Clark's first lieutenant and chief executive is Vice-President Bob Horner. M. H. Luehrs is secretary.

George is engaged in "Putting One Over," while Albert is trying, with Elinor Fair, to "Be a Little Sport," both Fox features.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

"Fillers."

EDUCATE yourself to look upon your short subjects as features and not as fillers. Select them with care, advertise them with enthusiasm and make the most of your entire program instead of trusting to the main title to bring you business. You cannot pull as much business with a Ford Weekly as you can with a five reel Pickford, but you can pull some people with the Weekly whom perhaps the Pickford will not reach, and you can cinch some others, whom you might not reach with Pickford alone. Get good small stuff and then advertise it attractively. Make every item on your program work for you. Every item can be made to work and work hard if you present it properly, but before you can make your patrons respect your short length numbers you must first show them proper respect yourself. Tell what you have in your news weeklies. Advertise your scenics and educationals attractively. Dignify your short comedies with the title and the star. Make people realize that your show is all good and does not merely consist of one feature with some junk thrown in to fill up with. Make every item count and you'll have just that much more of a chance at business, but book with care, build your program, and then bill what you have built.

Full but Readable.

This seven elevens (sounds like a crap game!) from the Gaiety, Springfield, Ill., is a good example of a composite advertisement. If the reader has no time, he cannot escape the central display. That is an advertisement in itself taken in connection with the top line. If only that is read as much is told as is offered in the style of advertisement approved by those who do not like overcrowding. If interest is gained, then the larger facts are told in the side panels, and if additional material is wanted, there is a six-inch reader in the left hand column to go with the display. The center display with its use of lines is well done, a clean-cut bit of drawing with type lettering, and keeps this part of the display away from the rest. Three similar panels would not have done the work, but the drawn design gives practically a double advertisement, reaching both classes of readers.

Improving.

Annabel Davidson, of the City, Strand and Rialto, Brockton, Mass., sends in some late samples to show the improvement she is making in displays. She has not yet trained the compositor to the value of white space. He fills the spaces just as full as he can get them, but the copy is laid so that he cannot wholly spoil it by using faces too large. The City uses double feature bills, which is the curse of the New England States as well as certain sections of New York and Pennsylvania, leading to saiety on the one hand and disgust at the manner in which the films have to be raced in most instances. The week-end advertisements are large, running around five tens for the City, as in this first example. The newspapers do not do well with fine screen cuts in Brockton. That for Petrova is too fine, and it spoils the striking costume by mudding up. The copy is well planned and the relative display given the lines is good, but they are set in such large faces that there is no room for white space which sometimes gives a better display than type. The name of the star and main title are all right, but the "A Startling Story" should have been set in 18 instead of 24 point, and the "eight reels of intense action" should have been smaller still. The Paramount feature stands up better, but "she could fight like a wild cat when she was young" is a little awkward. "She could fight like a wildcat" would have been better. The qualifying phrase suggests something not shown in the action. Some reference should have been made to the fact that this is a reissue. The cuts for Mix and "Little Women" are better, because they are larger screen; particularly the Paramount. These cuts are planned for general press work. They do not show well on programs, but they certainly give good results in newspaper displays. That underline, "From Tarantula, Arizona, to Concord, N. H.," is a good idea and will be clearly understood since the lower bank states that "Little Women" was photographed in Concord, the actual scene of the story. This display is a little lighter than the other and the paneled "also" makes a better connection between the two offerings. A third display is a three sixes for the Rialto. This carries an excess of panel work, but it looks better than the average and the paneling is done in such a manner as not to spoil the sense of the advertising talk. The various items are separated by panels instead of the various parts of a connected statement, and this helps much. Here, again, the cut is too fine a screen. It takes a lot of denial to trust entirely to type when cuts are to be had, but unless the cuts are of the sort which work well on the paper used by the local sheets, it is far better to get a good type impression than to take a chance with a cut almost certain to smear.

Has Another.

Now that the Sterling, Greeley, Colorado, has come under the management of Charles Decker, who used to run the Majestic at Grand Junction, there is a new house sheet. It is not yet as ambitious as the Movie Fan, but it is only in its second number and we imagine that in time it will work up to the standard of the old sheet, which was one of the best house organs gotten out anywhere as well as about the most permanent.

Not Wise.

The Third Street Theatre, Easton, Pa., makes a tactical error when it announces Pauline Frederick in "Paid in Full" and adds:

> Please Note:—This is probably the last picture in which Pauline Frederick will be seen at the Third Street Theatre for some time. Miss Frederick has left the employ of the Paramount organization who was responsible for her success, and has gone with an inferior company.
> Don't fail to grasp this last opportunity to see Pauline Frederick's crowning achievement, in which she reaches the zenith of her screen career. Never again will she appear to such advantage.

Should the Third Street later on desire to turn to Goldwyn, it would have some tall explaining to do, and at best such a note is unwise and certainly uncalled for. Miss Frederick has the right to change her employment without incurring the enmity of the exhibitor, and that "inferior company" is in very bad taste.

A Rope Lobby.

This rather weak photograph shows the lobby display of the Mission, Seattle, for Harry Carey in "Roped." The banner at the top of the lobby is painted, but the panel inside of the lobby is done with actual rope, tacked down to make the script title. The design is very effective. The top stem of the capital letter touches the portrait of the star, cut from a one-sheet, and the tail of the "d" runs to a similar circle lettered with the name. If the three-sheet provided a cut out, it would have been effective had this been set up in the lobby with a lariat about the neck. The idea is good, but might have been considerably extended.

Tell It Right.

The Hill takes half of a front page of the circular program to remark, "We want you to see Gladys Brockwell in 'The Forbidden Room.' Don't miss this one." If Johnny Mack really wants his patrons to get the idea, he should tell his printer not to use Cloister type. It belongs to the old English family and it is not easy to read. When you want to say something, say it in the plainest possible way.

Booming Things.

A. L. Middleton is booming things for the Queen down in De Queen, Ark. His latest envelope is headed, "See directions inside how to live happy," and below is "Where do we go from here? Directions inside." Of course you go to the Queen. He showed "The Greatest Thing in Life" at fifty cents a head, and he did not throw in the war tax, either. That is going some. Mr. Middleton has improved a lot as a copy writer in the last year or so and he can discard press book copy and get out snappy stuff. A teaser in a late issue reads "Don't change your husband until after May!" This, of course, is the date he shows the De Mille production. In the last couple of years Mr. Middleton has worked the Queen up from undated stuff of the cheaper sort to the best in the market, and he has done it all with hustle and advertising.

The Way to Talk.

The Greenwich Theatre, Greenwich, Conn., uses a ready-print house program, but it has an editorial page that is worth the cost of the entire twenty-page issue. The chief merit of a program is the opportunity it gives you to talk to your patrons, and the Greenwich does this right. A recent program, for example, leads off with:

> Last Monday, March Thirty-first, I chanced to pass by the Rivoli Theatre of New York. And there, displayed upon the panels, in all elaborateness, was the title, "Three Men and a Girl." Imagine, can you, my feeling of satisfaction that on the same day, "Three Men and a Girl" was being shown at the Greenwich Theatre. You see, in New York, no other theatre will be able to show that picture until after its week's engagement at the Rivoli has been completed.
> And so in our showing of our other photo-dramas. The best, always, and first at that. To be sure, there are some very excellent productions of former days, which, like good music, should be brought back before the public, should never pass into oblivion. An example of these is "Poppy," the picture which made Norma Talmadge the popular star she is. "Poppy," the mesh of which was woven by the delicate fingers of the sensitive artist, Cynthia Stockley, will tell her story on the Greenwich screen on Monday, April Seventh. It has never been played in Greenwich, and is too beautiful to be left out of Greenwich.

It is worth the cost of the entire program just to get that first paragraph over, and the second, with its defense of late bookings is just as good, though it reverses the first statement. The man who gets out a program and does not use an intimate editorial is wasting his opportunities. The personal contact of the manager with his patron is his best asset. Since this is seldom possible, the intimate editorial page is the next best appeal and should be followed up.

Racing Again.

Our small son put a new angle on racing film the other night when he was shown "The Heart of Humanity" in an hour and forty minutes, which is about ten minutes to the reel. He was told he would not be taken again if he asked so many questions. "But I had to," he offered in defense. "It went so fast I couldn't understand what it was about." It was pretty hard for the grown-ups for that matter, and the value of the fine production was lost through the excessive speed. It is unfair to the patrons, and it is unfair to the producer.

In Brief.

On the two inside pages of a 4x5 program, the Star Theatre, Weser, Idaho, manages to get in a complete list of attractions for a month and to get interest for them. Five lines is the most any feature gets, but the management has the trick of condensing the facts without killing the appeal. It is a nice study in condensation, and it shows that even in a couple of lines you can get the big idea over.

A Horrible Example.

We think this advertisement from the Baltimore Sun one of the poorest to come under observation in some time. The Sun shows a pretty high average of good advertisements, but something went wrong with this, and the trouble lies in the cuts. In a space of only fifty lines deep two cuts are used and they not only overcrowd the space but their form and excess of black background makes it look more like a sterescopic picture than a display advertisement. Two cuts in so small a space are not desirable, but if they must be used it would be better to rout out the background and vignette the bottom of the cut. This would lighten the effect and make it possible for so small a space to carry a pair of them. Even two of the thumbnail cuts would be rather heavy, but this layout is as harsh as can well be imagined. Straight type would have been much better.

Much Better.

Now that the Dayton, Dayton, Ohio, has dropped the hand drawn stuff, the advertising is very greatly improved, as these two examples show. Particularly good is the design for "The Brand." The Chaplin appendix detracts from the artistic effect somewhat, but not from the advertising value, and this is an advertisement and not a picture. The composition of the display is out of the ordinary with its suggestion of the snowy plains and the totem pole balancing the fir tree on the right. It is one of the best drawings the Dayton has yet sent in. The smaller display is also cleverly done, the placing of the scene sketch in the frame made by the outline of the cat's body gives character to the attractor just as does the larger sketch, and the artist has drawn a real wildcat. And the best part of both displays is that there is not a line which cannot easily be read.

Without Stars.

This three sevens from the Baltimore Sun shows how the New Theatre handles plays without stars. It identifies three leading players and in a note by manager L. A. DeHoff he adds: "While there is no special star featured in this play, every player in the cast acts with wish, skill and harmony that the result is astounding." This will appeal to many persons who prefer a good ensemble to a star poorly supported. The three leading players are named with an identification line in eight point italic below. This virtually stars them without making the appeal too obvious. The advertisement has been nicely set and white space gains prominence for the showing.

Another Reverse.

Here is a five twelves from Syracuse, N. Y. for "Common Clay." It is by no means a poor advertisement, and yet it would have been much better type-set and with white space instead of black. The press comments are more or less a waste of space. We do not believe that even the smaller towns care as much for

A Five-Twelves from Syracuse.

New York comment as they used to, and not one of the press notices gives as much about the story as could be told in original matter. There is no mention of the stage success of this play, and no specific talk on the strong points of the drama, merely general chat about the story. The portrait cut stands up fairly well, but by no means as well as it would have done against a white ground. Reverse work should be very sparingly used. It is seldom as good as black type on white paper.

A Fox Program.

This is the program for William Fox's Academy of Music, New York, once the home of grand opera in America but now far from the fashionable section. The cut shows the cover and one of the inside pages, the program covering a week and carrying a half week to each page. Each program carries four singles, two features and three musical numbers, but the run is not hard and fast. The Academy is now in a business section and runs continuously from noon to 11 p. m. There is a special effort made to have one complete feature between 12 and 1 and another between 1 and 2 for the benefit of the lunch crowds. Then the program starts to run straight through. The back page matches the front in design and carries full information about the house, prices, times of showing, arrangement of program, and all similar details.

Keep a File.

The manager who simply packs his press books on or under his desk, without system, is like a ship's crew with the lifeboats in the hold. Arrange your material so that you can find it in half a minute, and you will have more time for the proper preparation of your advertising.

A Bleich Strip.

Here is another idea in a strip advertisement from George A. Bleich, of Owensbork, Ky. Mr. Bleich takes liberal spaces daily for each of his three theatres, but he contends that his best advertising is done in the Sunday issue when the people read at leisure and plan for the week. For this reason he always advertises his entire week's program in the Sunday issue, and he has shown many odd arrangements. We like the present display because it gives the strongest featuring to the early showings. Directly below the house signature he makes an especial appeal for Geraldine Farrar in "Shadows." Just below that he lists his specials as "Featurettes" giving the list for the first five days. In a general advertisement such as this the idea gives the small stuff a special distinction and makes the reader realize that they are small features and not merely some odd lengths of film put in to make the show the proper length. We think that Mr. Bleich could go still further and name the titles of the comedies with good results. It pays to play these things up.

Press Books.

In getting out a press book for "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain," Lee Kugel offers a layout that anyone can follow. He does not tell you to have your property man build a Dinosarus a hundred feet tall and display it in the lobby. He knows that most theatres have no property men or that the occasional property man is apt to be too busy sweeping off the sidewalk or taking tickets to build a beast. As he put it himself, "I suggest doing just what I should do were I ahead of a show and going into a town." It is printed only in one color, but it has ideas on every page, and the best idea is to tell the exhibitor to do just what any well trained agent would do and then give him the material to do it with. Its a wonderful picture to advertise, and Mr. Kugel has given a press book that will permit a clean-up. The advance stuff is the sort that any editor will carry, and his copy for lobby cards and banners is a new idea in press books.

Roosevelt Again.

The McClure publicity department points out that the Grand, Harrisburg, Ill., did use copy prepared by that department with which to fight Steve Farrar's two-reel "Real Roosevelt." It quotes the text used. The point we sought to make was that the Grand should have thrown overboard all press book copy and have fought Steve with stuff along his own lines. It should have put punch into the fact that this was the real and not the fake picture. It should have told why Roosevelt could not pose in the scenes. The press book copy is too polite for a live scrap between live exhibitors.

Read Up.

Know what you are talking about before you undertake to talk to others. Use some scheme of classification of press book and trade paper material and take the time to read up thoroughly on your shows before you attempt to write a single line of advertising.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive projectionist should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Lens Charts for Framing.

The December 28 issue containing the lens charts was exhausted very quickly. The demand for lens charts was so great that we have had a limited number printed on heavy paper, size 11x17, for framing. Covers amperage 25 to 60 A. C. or D. C., and Plano-convex om meniscus biconvex; also gives necessary projection lens diameter to avoid waste and distance of revolving shutter from aperture. Every progressive, up-to-date projectionist should have one. Price, 50 cents, postpaid to any part of the world. Send U. S. 3-cent stamps or money order.

Managerial Foolishness.

Guy MacAllan, Tompkins, Sask., contributes the following sample of managerial over-officiousness. Seems to us it is pretty nearly time that even the most confirmed dark ages manager woke up to the fact that it is no longer permissible for employers to dictate to employes what he shall or shall not belong to. The employer simply purchases from the men employed a certain number of hours of service, of a given class, per day. He has the right to demand that amount of service, and that the service be of the class it is presumed to be, but beyond that he has no more moral right to dictate to the man he employs than the man he employs has the right to dictate to him. The term employer and employe is a very much misunderstood one. The manager has the right to discharge the employe if he does not perform his duties efficiently and give that which he sold to the manager, viz., ability and willingness to project to the theatre screen a satisfactory picture, and to perform that duty efficiently. Beyond demanding this service the employer has absolutely no right over the employe. Friend MacAllan says:

"Find enclosed 40 cents for question booklets. Am not a projectionist, but an apprentice. Have handbook and am subscriber to the World, both of which have helped me a lot. A short time ago I applied for position as apprentice in a certain theatre in Swift Current. The manager wanted me to sign a paper to the effect that I would not join a union so long as I worked for him; also he wanted me to be unfair to the projectionist. What I told him will hold him for a while, I guess. Am to take the examination for license in August, and hope, with good luck, to come back with a first-class license."

The Swift Current manager (?) should have lived down South in slavery days. He could then have purchased slaves and cracked his whip to beat the band.

Newport Naval Station Equipment.

Edwin C. Walsh, who is now returned to civil life, but was at the time of writing in the navy, writes from Newport Naval Training Station as follows:

"Am about to be discharged, and before that happens will tell you, and through you the men all over the country, what the navy does in the way of amusement for its men at this station. Theatrical performances are given in two places, viz., Barracks B and the new armory. They frequently have minstrel shows and acts given by different regiments or schools; also by the station athletic department. But the standby is the motion picture, of which all the well known and best programs are run. Recently we showed the 'Making of a Sailor,' most of which was taken at this station. The projectors are late model Simplex. The current is A. C., and at Barracks B we have a motor-driven generator supplying D. C. for projection. At the new armory we have a 70 ampere G. E. set which gives excellent results. Projection was in charge of A. Martens, of Local 453, Westchester County, New York; A. G. Smith, Local Union 249, Dallas, Tex.; S. R. Garwood, Atlanta, Ga., and E. C. Walsh, Local Union 233, Buffalo, N. Y. Have always taken great interest in the projection department; also it was always of much interest to the rest of the men, who, by the way, extend to you their best wishes. In attached picture I am reading the projection department."

Edwin C. Walsh
Who has returned to civil life from service in the navy.

Motion pictures certainly did their full share during the late scrap. They boosted for the various Liberty Loans, and boosted effectively, too. They whiled the days of tedious waiting both on this side and behind the battle front. They performed wonders in hundreds of ways in forwarding the various processes of "make ready." They cheered the sick and made the mangled for the moment forget their maiming. They give the soldier "over there" a glimpse of his loved ones back home, and they gave to us a glimpse of the horrors our loved ones faced over there. Yea, verily, did the motion picture do its part, and then some.

From Edmonton, Alberta.

From four hundred miles north of the "line" Charles S. Stuckey steps on the editorial toes as follows:

"Well, old friend, after an absence of a couple of years here am I again, the same old guy and a whole lot wiser. Just as a reminder, I was one of the active ones during the series of questions you run in the department. Heard a lot about your visit to Edmonton, though unfortunately I was away at the time. And now here comes a slam. Why is it the projection department articles don't seem to be as lively as they used to be? Surely there must be lots of good, live material floating around. I know it must be a rather thankless task to edit such a department in a way to suit everyone. Now DON'T think I'm finding fault! I am not. And, as you have often said that criticism to be beneficial must be constructive, here is my suggestion: Suppose you have an article from your pen each week explaining the action of something relating to electricity, optics or equipment. For instance, one article could explain the action of a constant current generator, such as the Transverter. You may reply that the projectionist ought to dig down and get the information for himself, but, while I agree with that to an extent, still there is a limit, and it is not easy for the non-technical projectionist to wrestle with the technical electric books from which such things must be dug. Your Handbook is excellent, but it, of course, does not go deeply into matters of this kind. I have a set of Terrill Croft's 'Practical Electricity,' and they are about the best and most simple, easily understood books on electricity I know of. They also have a pretty nifty book on mathematics for those who care for that sort of thing; also an interesting section on light ray reflection.

"Have heard lots of talk among film exchanges about punch holes lately, but nothing done by those institutions to overcome the evil except to bawl out the projectionist. May I offer this as a partial solution, viz: At present all exchanges ship their films on 1,000-foot reels. In many theatres these reels are doubled up for projection. Why not ship all photoplays of 2,000, 4,000, 6,000 or greater length on 2,000-foot reels? In assembling the films on 2,000-foot reels at the theatre there is necessary waste, and waste again when they are returned to the small reels. Most projectors now in use have magazines large enough to hold a 2,000-foot reel, and if this were done the remaining small magazines would very soon disappear. This plan would reduce wastage, and if each double reel except the last ended with a slow fade-out and each reel except the first began with a slow fade-in there would be no more punching. A still better scheme would be to have a certain scene cut five to eight feet after a title. Surely any projectionist could remember the title, or he can make a cue sheet. Some projectionists believe in signal devices. I do not, because they cause laziness, and are apt to incline toward too much of an automatic system of projection, which practically leaves the whole projection of the picture to the mechanical devices instead of being under complete mind control of the projectionist. Then, too, such devices usually cause more or less damage to the films. Get this signal device stuff out of their noodles if you can. It's bad dope. And now, Old Sport, a word concerning this, our fair city. Projection, take as a whole, is as good, if not better, than in any city of its size I have seen, and I've traveled quite some lately, too. At present am working with Brother W. B. Allen in the new Allen Theatre, which same is up to date in every respect. In fact we consider its projection plans to be the best in the country. It would certainly make some big town projection rooms look pretty cheap. In our house program the projectionists are named as follows: 'Mechanical Engineer' and 'Chief Projectionist.' Edmonton is now and for some time past has been 100 per cent. organized, of which fact Local Union 360 is quite proud."

Say, Mr. Man, you've a nerve with you coming over with a blast like that. But we'll forgive you because maybe an occasional kick at the editorial slats serves a good purpose in keeping us working right up in the collar. I cannot agree with you that the department has become dry. I believe it isn't that at all, but the fact that you have yourself advanced, so that much of the stuff which used to interest you does not do so any more, and we are compelled to keep a considerable part of the department running on comparatively elementary stuff, because a goodly percentage of the men are still in the elementary class.

Your suggestion as to articels is a good one, and will most likely be adopted, but you must remember that from my viewpoint very much of that would be objectionable, because of the fact that it would appeal to a comparatively small number of men; also the possible subjects are not so many. What I have been considering is the conducting of a long range "examination," meaning by that the asking of examination questions such as any examiner would be justified in asking or any union committee would be justified in propounding to candidates for membership. But I would like to know how many of you would be interested. My idea would be to have such projectionists as cared to answer the questions, and then to give the answer maybe a month after publication of the question. It would be somewhat similar to the old series of questions you spoke of. How does the idea strike you, gentlemen?

As to the big-reel idea, I cannot agree, for the very simple reason that we have to do those things which we can do. We CAN get some sort of changeover signal, but to get the producers or the film exchanges to do anything to help projection is just about as easy as it would be to move Pike's Peak off its base. The changeover signals certainly are open to the objections you name, but—. Glad to have the good report of Edmonton projection, also to know she is thoroughly organized. Good work!

A Wide Awake Manager.

S. A. Hayman, Grand Island, Neb., orders the lens charts and exercises his typewriter on the following:

"I want to compliment you, Mr. Richardson, on all you have done to lift the industry to a higher level. Unquestionably many of our theatres have based their success upon your study and knowledge of projection—I know that is my case. I happen to be manager and proprietor of the Lyda Theatre, this city, and I study the projection department of every issue carefully. Having taken the electrical engineering course at the University of the State of Nebraska, I feel pretty well qualified in that line. Look after my own projection and believe I have as fine a screen result as any theatre in this state can show, though, as you say, we are never perfect. And so I am going to continue to study every word old man Richardson writes. I spare no expense in my projection room. It contains the very latest projectors. My projectionist is allowed anything he wishes. Result? Well, here is a sample. In March, with a house seating 287, I ran 4,400 children and 25,000 adults, and that in a town of 10,000. How is that?"

In the language of the immortal Teddy, it's Bully! Going some, if you ask me! The lens chart has gone forward long ago. You no doubt have it by now. It is always a pleasure to meet a progressive, wide-awake man, be he manager, projectionist or exhibitor. Many thanks for your kind words as concerns the editor. We simply try to do the best we can and —let it go at that.

Solder Terminal.

From one of the electrical magazines, I am sorry I do not know just which one, the following was clipped. It might come handy to projectionists. If a good hard solder were used, I think such a terminal would do for rheostat connections, unless the rheostat be overloaded, hence over heated.

"A satisfactory way of making a durable, efficient terminal is to form a solid loop at the end of the ordinary high-tension cable. The wire end is bared of the insulation for about 2 in., and the copper strands are untwisted and divided into two parts. Next, each of these sets of strands is twisted to make two large strands, after which the loop is made by twisting the two parts together for a short distance, then placing them around a small round rod and twisting the two ends together. The job is completed by dipping the loop in solder."

Sixty-Five Foot Picture.

P. L. Akins, Co. C, First Bn., A. P. O. 710 (Pfwat th' divil ever that is) writes from overseas, or rather sends a postcard, on which he speaks of a picture "sixty-five feet wide and good light," with the "good" underscored. Far be it from me to question Brother Akins' veracity, but Missouri is a good old state and I live in it for a spell. S-h-o-w me, Brother Akins. Show me. That's all.

Interesting Letter from Toronto.

"I read the department regularly, with much interest and not a little profit. My 'library' contains almost complete volumes of the Moving Picture World, including pink covers, down to the time when the Red Cross required all available papers. In February 15 issue, California's 'Queer Proposition' drew sympathetic attention from me, for, after using 60 cycle A. C. for years with fairly satisfactory results, 25 cycle was wished on me by the benevolent powers that be, viz., the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission. Admitting the best solution of this circumstance to be a modern motor generator set, a converter or Mercury Arc Rectifier, still there are those who are obliged to consider cost too thoroughly to invest in such an expensive device, and this brings me to the doo-dab which stands between my arcs and a 25 cycle supply, viz., the Excelsor Electric Current Converter. This little affair consists of three units, as follows: a ½ H. P. synchronous motor, connected to a specially designed commutator, an auto-transformer 220-70 volts, and an automatic polarity switch. The transformer delivers up to 100 amperes of the 25 cycle to rings on end of the commutator, through carbon brushes. The commutator, rotating in synchronism with the alternations of the current, delivers same to arc as D. C., which is first class —all jake as far as it goes, BUT it can't manufacture voltage to supply the zero period between alternations, so what I have is heavily pusating current at the arc. Hence and therefore my fellow feeling for California.

"Early in the use of the device, I discovered that neither two or three wing shutters were satisfactory, therefore got busy with pasteboard and Jack knife, and now use a shutter with five blades. Made the main blade of just sufficient width to cover the movement period, and then divided balance equally between light and darkness. It is not a perfect solution, but is far and away better than any I have heard of to date, including several which decorate the wall over my work table. Have the notion that if flicker blades were made different widths it would break up the trouble at desired speeds. I lose in screen brilliancy, yes, but can use higher amperage if I desire, except when using both arcs at once. With my lens system lined up according to Hoyle, at a speed of 50 or less, I have flicker or synchronism, or both. At 60 results are fair, at 70 all is jake. At 80 to 90 I am unable to detect the slightest flicker of any sort, but I don't care to run that fast. The practical result is, therefore, that comedies usually flicker, while dramas of modern vintage sail smoothly. Query: Why are they thus made? And now, with due respect to conservation it does not pay, individually, to 'save current,' because it only costs us .15 of a cent per K. W., we being favored with a very low rate for power, and arc lamps being rated as power. Lights for illumination come higher. Power rate as follows: $1.25 per H. P. per month for the maximum demand. First 230 K. W. at 1.5 cts. per K. W., next 230 at .5 of a cent, and remainder at .15, which is some rate.

"Am afraid that I have stretched the editorial patience, but would like to take a slap at machine manufacturers. Bought two new projectors, and was, of course, up against the shutter trouble. Explained trouble direct to manufacturer and received reply expressing sympathy. Great! But why the h—eck didn't they at least say, fight it out with cardboard and we will supply shutter in metal after your own pattern? If the latter survives scissor attack, it's an ear mark for the Enterprise Optical Company! Should you print any of this, please credit to 'Ontario,' without my name."

Now wouldn't that get your goat? A chap writes thus interestingly and right at the end I am told to go back, scratch out his name and even the name of the city, thus hiding his arc light under a bushel, as it were. As to your shutter scheme, it's a new stunt to me. Should think you would cut a tremendous per cent. of light, but if flicker is reduced it is worth it. I cannot agree that as a business proposition it would not pay your employers to install a modern motor generator or a Mercury Arc Rectifier. Its cost would, it seems to me, come back very quickly at the box office, through increased patronage brought about by better screen results. But anyhow, your description is interesting. As to machine manufacturers and shutters, we have repeatedly pointed out the advisability of sending out an adjustable shutter instead of the standard shutters now sent, which cannot possibly fit the local condition perfectly except by accident. The machine manufacturer replies with a statement of fact to the effect that the average projectionist does not know enough about his business to handle an adjustable shutter intelligently, and therefore the manufacturer, would be in hot water, and the machine blamed for the fault of the projectionist who had improperly adjusted the shutter. And there you are. Doubtless the Enterprise Company did not go into matter further with you because they feared results would be unsatisfactory, not knowing your ability to handle such a matter intelligently. As to the semi-converter you are using, seems to me you might flatten out the wave with a choke coil, but of that I am not at all certain, and anyhow, it would be a job for a very competent technical electrician to tackle. Come again. You write interestingly and therefore need have no fear of scissors. But don't be so danged modest.

Voltage Drop on Projection Room Leads.

John H. Auerbach, a stock broker of New York City, whose hobby is projection, sends the following very interesting letter. Suppose some of you professional projectionists read it over a few times, remembering that it is written by a man who never was, and in all probability never will be, a professional projectionist —simply studies it for his amusement. But he knows more right now about the problems of the projection room than most of the men who make their living in them, and ten times as much as some of them. His letter is as follows:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: Once more I take the liberty of using up some of your valuable time in making you peruse another of my epistles. In the handbook, page 45, under the heading of 'Figuring Voltage Drop,' you say: 'The question of drop in voltage in theatre circuits is usually given too little consideration,' and again on page 47 we read: 'In many instances it will be found that they are paying heavily for energy wasted in line resistance. There are many operating room feed circuits that are giving a 5 per cent. drop, or even larger than that, and all this waste energy is registered on the wattmeter.'

"Now, in considering incandescent circuits, where we are dealing with a fixed resistance in the lights themselves, I can readliy see that any further unnecessary resistance in the line is a waste, which will be registered on the meter and will tend to diminish the candle power of the lights. The same would be true in the case of a projection arc operating in series with a rheostat of fixed resistance. It is easy to understand also, that if we use a constant current motor generator set to furnish our current for the projection arc, that any unnecessary resistance in the line must be overcome by the generator producing a higher voltage, the same being done, of course, at our expense. But this is what I don't understand. In a projection circuit in which the arc is in series with an adjustable rheostat, I fail to see why this element of line resistance is of such great importance. Assume that we are using 50 amperes at a 50 volt arc on a 110 volt D. C. system, and are using an ammeter. To produce this result we must have 1 1/5 ohms resistance in the whole circuit, outside of the arc resistance, no more, no less. Now, theoretically, at least, from the standpoint of current expense, what difference does it make (leaving out the question of any copper wire deterioration under the influence of heat which incidentally does not appear in your chapter on voltage drop) where this resistance comes, whether it is in the line or rheostat or both. By watching the ammeter we cut in or cut out resistance in the rheostat at will, to compensate for any change in line voltage or line resistance, and manipulate the carbons in order to keep the arc voltage and amperage constant. We should perhaps find that we used less rheostatic resistance with a No. 6 wire than with a No. 4 wire, but where does the increased current expense come? Where is the waste?"

Under the conditions named there is none, except in the incandescent circuit of the projection room. In the handbook, it was utterly impossible to go into lengthy detail in many things, else we would have a book of more than a thousand pages. It was absolutely necessary to keep the size of the book down so that it could be sold at a comparatively low price, if we were to reach the very people we most desired to reach, viz., the projectionists who had not as yet studied at all. They had to be educated into buying text books, and if the price were too high, that would be increasingly difficult in proportion as the price mounted. It was therefore necessary to, in many cases, merely state what might be termed a general principle, without much elaboration. This is not, mind you, intended as an excuse, but a statement of fact. The handbook should have been at least 1,500 pages in size.

I see nothing to criticise or elaborate in your argument. What you say is correct, but it does not alter the fact that projection room wires, and all other copper wires, for that matter, ought to be large enough to carry the current with very moderate voltage drop. The deterioration of copper wires through heating was not dealt with in "Voltage Drop," because in my opinion the heat generated by any voltage drop contemplated in my remarks under that heading, would not be sufficient to cause serious deterioration in the wires for a very long space of time. It is practically negligible.

A Remarkable Tribute.

C. A. McMahon, Editor Projection Department Canadian Film Digest, writes as follows. The letter is remarkable, in view of the position Brother McMahon holds. He says:

"I have just read, with great interest, your latest masterly effort in the science of projection. I refer to the main article of May 3 issue. The achievement is magnificent, and impels me to write in acknowledgment. In many ways a world of good should come from this concrete and indisputable proof of the divergence of the condenser beam beyond the aperture, and the resultant waste surely will stimulate the optician to find the remedy and apply it. Well do I remember the stand taken by the authorities that the condenser beam was a convergent ray beyond the aperture. My mind goes back to your comment on an article by an optician, concerning his remark that 'the divergence of the condenser beam between aperture and objective is due to spherical aberration.' Your stand against that proposition on that occasion is now more than proven. In fact, your stand has always been consistent, and the experiments you have made and have encouraged others to make in the optics of projection has accomplished much improvement already, and will accomplish more. Along this line stands out very clearly October 23, 1915, issue, in which Mr. Griffiths submits four charts, all of which show exactly what you have now proven in such a splendid way. I should think you would rub it in, and with brother Griffiths to assist, it should be a veritable massage. I want to personally thank you for May 3 issue; also to thank you on behalf of the readers of the projection department of 'Digest'."

Editor to Serve on Committee.

We are in receipt of following from Dana Pierce, Chairman of the Electrical Committee National Fire Protective Association. We have, of course, promptly accepted Mr. Dana's invitation:

"Mr. F. H. Richardson, Moving Picture World, New York City.

Dear Sir: Acting as Chairman of the Electrical Committee of the National Fire Protection Association, I would like to request that you serve as a member of one of our so-called Technical Sub-Committees to investigate the present status and possibilities of improvement in rewinders for motion picture films, as they are used in exchanges and theatres. I have no doubt but that your general familiarity with projection matters will render you of valuable assistance to us in this investigation. If you will be so kind as to accept this appointment, Mr. Lodge, who is Assistant Electrical Engineer of Underwriters Laboratories, Chicago, who will act as chairman of the committee, will advise you of the lines of investigation to be undertaken and the questions at issue. Signed: Dana Pierce."

Reel Trouble.

H. Merrill Young, Reading, Pa., wants to know where he can get good reels. Has a Power's 6 A, and trouble with jerking of reels in upper magazine when reels are nearly empty. Says he would like to have the editor make the trip through Pennsylvania, and is sure the Reading local union would give us welcome; also other Pennsylvania locals.

You can get good reels from the Nicholas Power Company, 90 Gold street, New York City. Those with the five-inch hub will stop all that trouble. Would also suggest that you try the Boylan Even Tension reels, which will be on the market very soon. Watch advertising pages for announcement. They will, I think, be exactly what you want. The trouble probably lies in the upper magazine tension.

PICTURES PUT OVER TEXAS BOND ISSUE

Dallas County Voters Are Impressed by Screen Campaign After All Other Methods Had Failed

THE power of moving picture argument carried the $6,500,000 good road bond issue which has just been adopted by Dallas County voters. The bond issue is the largest ever passed by any county in the Southwest and, it is believed, by any county in America, for new road construction.

Arthur Dyer, secretary of the Dallas Automobile Club, conceived the idea of making a moving picture campaign. He took scores of films of bad roads in Dallas County, showing wagons and automobiles mired to their axles. He showed them in every moving picture house in the county and at every hamlet and crossroads. The pictures bore appropriate slogans urging good roads votes on a patriotic basis. The appeal had its effect and the road bond issue carried by a vote of three to one. Previous issues submitted had been beaten.

Exchanges Boost Dallas Express Business.

Thanks to the enormous business done by its two dozen large film exchanges, Dallas leads the entire United States in the amount of express business done per capita. This information was featured in the report of the Dallas branch of the American Railway Express Company for May.

Film shipments from Dallas, according to the express company reports, exceed those of Detroit. Dallas, with its big surrounding territory, claims to be the third largest distribution point of films in the United States. It takes a dozen big express wagons to handle the daily business of the film exchanges here, and the business is constantly increasing.

Thrifttown Charges Dollar Admission.

Thrifttown, Texas, was born on Thursday, May 9, when the great Thrift oil well on the banks of the Red River in Northwest Texas spurted high over the derrick. In the next few days oil drillers were on hand by the scores. Tents sprang up like mushrooms and Thrifttown evolved out of the bald prairie. On Sunday, May 11, Thrifttown opened its moving picture show for the benefit of the old-timers who had lived there for three days. The Royal Theatre is established in a tent. It charges a dollar admission, and the show is worth the price since films have to be hauled for miles over terrible roads by automobile. The old timers, however, cannot reserve seats. Thrifttown's democratic.

Hulsey Occupies Old General Offices.

The General Film Company offices have been vacated during the past week, and the quarters will be taken over by E. H. Hulsey, of First National. Wallace Walthall, former general manager, will remain in Dallas It is understood that he will go into the film business on his own account. Mr. Walthall is the brother of Henry Walthall, and during his month's residence in Dallas has made many friends here.

Film Row Will Be All Lit Up.

Film row, in Dallas, is soon to be as bright as the downtown theatre district with its great illuminated signs.

A big electric sign has been installed over the First National and Metro offices on Main street, advertising the particular films which the companies are featuring. Other film exchanges are planning to follow suit, and a little bright light district is to be created uptown.

San Antonio Wants Exchanges.

San Antonio, which has been going heavy on the production end of the game, is now after film exchanges. Their Chamber of Commerce is actively seeking them. R. D. Lewis, of the R. D. Lewis Film Company, of Oklahoma City and Dallas, is planning to open a branch in San Antonio, in June.

Pathe Films Supply Train's Return.

The enormous crowds from all parts of North Texas, which came to Dallas to welcome the Supply Train troops which represented Texas in the Rainbow Division, were filmed by Pathe. The pictures showing the welcome to the 42nd Division soldiers are now showing in all parts of the state.

Pictures Keep These Houses Open.

Majestic theatres of the Interstate Circuit will play moving pictures in Texas during the warm weather period when vaudeville houses close. The Majestic theatres, at Dallas, San Antonio, Houston and Little Rock, Ark., are all planning for moving picture features during the summer months. The Byers Opera House at Fort Worth, also owned by the Interstate Amusement Company, is already showing pictures. The Majestic theatres have booked "The Shepherd of the Hills" as one of their first summer features.

Levy Will Build a New Strand.

A new $75,000 theatre for Fort Worth is announced simultaneously with the statement that Pierre C. Levy's Strand Theatre will be torn down to give place to a twenty-four-story office building. Mr. Levy has purchased a site directly opposite the one occupied by the Strand and will build the new Strand directly across the street, at Main and Seventh. Besides the new Strand Mr. Levy, as previously announced, will soon start work building his $500,000 eight-story moving picture theatre building.

Short Notes.

E. H. Hulsey, for many years owner of the controlling interest in the Old Mill Theatre, has bought out the Dalton Brothers, of Dallas, minority stockholders. The capital stock of the theatre has been reduced from $100,000 to $75,000.

The Selznick Pictures Corporation, of New York, has opened a branch house at Austin, having received a permit from the state department to do business in Texas. The capital stock is listed as 2,500 shares without nominal or par value.

The Queen Theatre is the latest moving picture house to be opened in Corsicana. It has a seating capacity of 750.

The Rothapfel Unit Program has been adopted by Hulsey's Old Mill Theatre. Special pre-showings were given during the last week in May.

Herschel Stuart, general manager of the Hulsey Enterprises, was running up the stairway of the Queen Theatre a few days ago and fell, breaking his collar bone.

Peeps Behind Footlights in "Trixie."

There is nothing the average fan enjoys quite so hugely as a peep behind the scenes into the off-stage lives of the stars of the footlights. Such peeps "Trixie from Broadway," Margarita Fisher's latest release, affords in abundance. The sprightly comedy-drama takes the spectator from out front into the dressing-rooms of the chorus, the business office of the theatre on pay-night, and a gay cafe where the sporty "angel" of the show stages a hilarious chow party after the performance. Agnes C. Johnston wrote the story.

Emory Johnson plays opposite Miss Fisher, and Olga Grey, George Periolat, Frank Clark and J. Farrell MacDonald complete the supporting cast. The scenario is credited to Frank Howard Clark, and direction to R. William Neill. "Trixie from Broadway" will be released by American, June 15.

Spokane News Letter

Managers Preparing for Farmers.

SPOKANE theatre managers are preparing to present strong programs during the week of the farmers' convention which is to be held June 11, 12 and 13. A number of exhibitors are sidetracking the regular attractions booked for those dates and are endeavoring to secure special features to entertain the visitors.

The Clemmer Theatre expects to offer Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs" during the convention week. At the Liberty theatre the bill will be Charles Ray in "The Sheriff's Son" for the early part of the week, and later in the week an all-star cast in "What Every Woman Wants."

The Majestic Theatre will offer Rex Beach's story, "Heart of the Sunset," and the Lyric Theatre plans to present Madelaine Traverse in "The Love That Dares." The Class A Theatre has booked Louis Bennison in "Speedy Meade."

The Woodward Theatre will be closed that week unless Manager Yorke is successful in his efforts to secure a screen production for the convention.

Spokane Wants Convention.

Efforts are being made by the managers of the motion picture theatres in Spokane to obtain the annual convention of the Film Board of Trade for Spokane. Arrangements for the convention are being made, but the convention city has not been selected yet.

The membership of the Northwest Film Board of Trade includes all the exchange managers and leading exhibitors of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana.

Markwood Wins Suit.

The jury in the case of Lee Markwood vs. C. E. McBroom, receiver of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation, awarded Markwood $1,500 damages. The case grew out of the death of Markwood's five-year-old son from rabies, caused from being bitten by a dog belonging to an actor in "Trampled Truth," a film that was produced by the Washington Motion Picture company.

Lyric and Majestic Reduced Prices.

Beginning May 24 the Lyric and Majestic Theatres reduced admission prices from 20 cents to 15 cents, including war tax. Manager J. W. Allender said there would be no change in the program policy at either theatre and that at the Lyric return engagements of the best sellers of the bigger houses would be continued. At the Majestic first-run attractions presented for the first time in Spokane will be continued.

Liberty Made Scoop.

The Liberty Theatre scooped the town by being the first to present pictures of the naval airplanes leaving on the famous transatlantic flight.

Arthur Loeb, the hero of the Eastland disaster, appeared at the Liberty May 21, 22 and 23, with pictures of the disaster, which he explained. He appeared in his lifeguard bathing suit and wore the Carnegie medal that was awarded him for his work in saving lives. He is touring the country raising funds to pay for an operation on his head which was injured by a dive into the hole of the Eastland. The operation, if successful, will permit him to accept a deep sea diving job with the Government.

KANSAS CITY'S NEW CENTRE PROSPERS

Sponsler and Goldstein Have Taken Over the House and Are Running Ahead of Expectations

LEWIS SPONSLER and Wolf Goldstein have taken hold of the New Centre Theatre, Fifteenth and Troost, Kansas City—and the prospects are that here will be found one of the big successes of the business. The managers themselves say that they didn't expect to make any money before September, but that they are several weeks ahead of their schedule. Their house seats 1,046 downstairs, and 433 upstairs; last Sunday, at two performances, there were 1,300 paid admissions to see the Harold Lockwood picture. The previous Thursday, Friday and Saturday the total receipts were $2,400 to see (and hear) "The Red Glove" for two days, Sessue on Saturday. The young men have had the theatre since May 11, and they are now running to about $500 business a day, with some days running much stronger.

Was a White Elephant.

The New Centre has been a white elephant on several occasions. Once in awhile somebody would take hold, and show good earnings; but usually one thing or another caused the manager to quit, disgusted. The two men who have taken hold now, are both exhibitors. Mr. Sponsler formerly had the Little Bijou on the Chicago south side, and Mr. Goldstein had a theatre in Kansas City, Kansas. Mr. Sponsler has been a singer on vaudeville circuits, notably the Orpheum, for several years; and he sings during the program.

Universal Office Reorganizes.

Paul H. Bush, sales manager, and H. W. Talbot, office manager, of the Universal at Kansas City, have reorganized this office, and are showing marked results in the few weeks they have been in charge. Mr. Bush was formerly manager of the Detroit office of the Universal. Mr. Talbot is familiar with this territory, having been manager here previous to his transfer to St. Louis. E. L. Hammerstein has been added to the force as booker, coming from the Goldwyn St. Louis office. B. Portman, formerly assistant manager of the Globe Theatre at Kansas City, who a few years ago was connected with Martin & Estes, state rights distributors, now has northern Missouri territory for the Universal.

Braun Is District Manager.

T. C. Braun is "installed" as district manager for the Film Clearing House for the district including St. Louis, Kansas City and Dallas. The word installed should not be taken in its broadest significance, since Mr. Braun will have no single headquarters, but will spend his time among the various offices. His headquarters are actually New York, since he is a part of that office organization. He was formerly manager of the American at Pittsburgh, Pa.

M. A. Kahn Joins Crescent.

M. A. Kahn, formerly manager of the Bee Hive exchange at Milwaukee, has joined his brother, A. L. Kahn, manager of the Crescent Film Co., Kansas City, on May 26. M. A. Kahn will look after the sales of this growing concern, traveling the territory occasionally himself, and looking after the sales force.

Douglas Manages American Office.

L. H. Douglas, well known to exhibitors of the territory, is in charge of the Kansas City office of the American; L. G. Dewald, formerly manager of this office, has returned to the Oklahoma office, of which he was manager before coming to Kansas City. Mr. Douglas took charge May 20.

Equitable Is in New Quarters.

The Equitable Film Corporation is now occupying more convenient quarters on the fourth floor of the Ozark building, Kansas City. It has added to its office and shipping room force, additional inspectors to keep the films moving rapidly.

Foland Manages Sherry Office.

J. E. Foland now heads the William L. Sherry office in Kansas City. Mr. Foland was recently manager of the General office here, and was building up its business in great shape. He has now five states for Sherry, Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri.

Kuhn, manager of the Salt Lake City branch. The Mormon City office will be conducted under the direction of T. C. Malcom, formerly connected with the Mutual in San Francisco.

Board of Trade Selects Officers.

Owing to the resignation of Ben F. Simpson as president of the San Francisco Film Exchange Board of Trade, new officers have been chosen. These are as follows: President, Louis Reichert, manager of the local Metro branch; vice-president, Harry L. Knappen, manager of Select, and secretary-treasurer, Ralph Quive, manager of the Greater Vitagraph. Mr. Simpson had held this office for only a month, having succeeded Myron H. Lewis, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who was transferred to the East.

Film Man Laid at Rest.

Fred Dahnken, Jr., president of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, has returned home from a month's tour of the East and expresses the belief that the industry will witness unusual prosperity during the coming season, with the standard of pictures raised higher than ever.

Sam Y. Edwards has succeeded to the position of E. M. Asher as manager of the film exchange end of the business of Turner & Dahnken and likewise retains his former position as superintendent of theatres, his appointment having been confirmed by President Fred Dahnken, Jr., upon his return from the East. Mr. Edwards joined this organization three years ago as door man and has filled the position of publicity director, manager of the theatres maintained at Richmond, Berkeley and Oakland, road man and superintendent of theatres.

W. H. Jobelman, former director of publicity for the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, has secured his release from army duty and is now manager of publicity for the Tivoli Theatre.

E. V. Clover has resigned as manager of the T. & D. Theatre at Stockton, Cal., and has been succeeded by P. W. Brubeck, formerly in business at Fort Bragg, Cal., where he conducted the Union Theatre for years.

Bob Hopkins, writer of Tivoli Chatter, a weekly screen compendium of fun, is now doing work for Bill Parsons, Los Angeles, and is sending Tivoli Chatter from there for the present.

Fairbanks' Manager in City.

Leeds Baxter, business manager for Douglas Fairbanks, was a recent visitor in San Francisco to attend the initial showing of "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" at the California Theatre. The building of the circuit of theatres in Europe by the "Big Four," composed of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin and D. W. Griffith, will be under the direction of Baxter, according to present plans.

Strike Up the Band.

Sergeant Ralph Marks, of the Acme Theatre, Stockton street, has returned safely from France to the undisguised delight of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. I. Marks, and a host of friends in the film world. Ralph was where the bullets were thickest in France, being with an ammunition division, and was headed for the front line when the armistice was signed. Thanks to the circus day training of his father the Acme Theatre has been advertised throughout Northern France, the red and yellow envelopes used, with the modest two-inch type employed for the return notice having brought fame to the house. This theatre, known as the most cosmopolitan moving picture house in the world, has become a Mecca for returning soldiers. Sergeant Ralph Marks is very popular here, having served as secretary for both local and state organizations of exhibitors.

All Star News.

Walter Rivers, formerly of the Alcazar Theatre, is now with the All Star Features Distributors as publicity man.

"Hearts of the World" was shown recently at the Lyric Theatre on Fillmore street, a five-cent house having a seating capacity of about one thousand, at an admission price of 25 cents. Sixteen hundred seats were sold at two performances.

The United Theatre Exchange has been instrumental in making the following transfers of late: The Rex Theatre, Sixteenth and Valencia streets, San Francisco, from E. C. Cunningham to William Berlin; the Regent Theatre at Fillmore and Clay, from William Corbett and C. Noll to E. C. Cunningham; a one-half interest in the Broadway Theatre, on Broadway, from Max Blumenfeld to M. Mambler, and an interest in the Strand Theatre at Thirty-third street and Telegraph avenue, Oakland, Cal., from W. G. Bailey, W. A. McNeil and C. C. Griffin to O. B. Atkinson. J. R. Saul, who has been connected with the United Theatre Exchange for the past year and a half, has purchased a one-half interest in the business and the opening of a branch at Los Angeles is contemplated.

War Tax Records in Demand.

G. A. Metcalfe recently received a large shipment of theatre record ledgers, with space for war tax records, and notes a big demand for these, as well as for special tickets with the extra war tax printed on them.

MYRICK LEAVES OREGON FOR MONTANA

Former Manager of Portland's Liberty Theatre Will Succeed Ralph Ruffner at Butte's Rialto

E. J. MYRICK left for Butte, Montana, May 27, to manage the Rialto, the Jensen and Von Herberg theatre. It is understood here that Mr. Myrick takes the place of Ralph Ruffner, who leaves Butte for San Francisco.

Mr. Myrick came to Portland when Jensen and Von Herberg first entered the local field, acquiring the Columbia Theatre from Foster & Kleiser. Mr. Myrick built up the patronage until the Columbia became one of the best known theatres in the Rose City. When the Columbia owners took over the big Liberty, he was given the managership of this house, and for a time was the head of all the Jensen & Von Herberg houses here. He was president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, and chairman of motion picture activities in connection with war work and of civic committees that called in the aid of motion picture publicity.

Vincent, who has just returned after twenty-two months' service, expects to get back into the harness after a short rest.

C. F. Conant, of the Sunset, now conducts the Washington Slide Company in the Majestic Theatre Building.

Boyd Lawrence, also former projectionist at the Sunset, has gone into the automobile business at Pendleton, Oregon.

Circuits Solve Problem.

F. A. Bernardo, representative for Goldwyn, has solved the long distance shipment question by arranging a series of circuits so that, although the Goldwyn headquarters is in Seattle, the product can be supplied to Oregon exhibitors as cheaply, from an express standpoint, as films served out of Portland. Goldwyn has been getting a lot of business in the territory of late, and it is rumored that there is a possibility of opening a Portland branch office soon.

NEW LINTONIAN OPENS IN SENECA FALLS

Linton's Fourth House Is Very Well Arranged and Most Beautifully Decorated and Furnished

ON the night of May 21, W. H. Linton opened the fourth in his rapidly growing chain of theatres, the New Lintonian Theatre, Little Falls, N. Y., where he also operates the Hippodrome. The Lintonian is one of the most beautiful theatres in the Mohawk Valley, and Mr. Linton spared neither time nor expense in fitting it up. One would hardly recognize the Lintonian as a reconstructed amusement house, but rather as an entirely new theatre. Over the front of the main entrance is a massive marquise and on the walls of the exterior, are well arranged poster frames with glass coverings. A short flight of stairs leads to the main lobby. Here is the box office and the doors leading into the men's smoking room and ladies reception parlor. The latter is unusually beautiful. Leading off the main lobby is Mr. Linton's private office. A short flight of stairs leads to the main auditorium and foyer. The interior color scheme is old rose and ivory, grey and gold. In the center of the auditorium ceiling is a painting representing a blue sky.

Balcony Has Loge Effect.

Instead of the usual balcony seats a new balcony has been constructed, but with the loge effect carried out in its entirety. Here are boxes accomodating from 5 to 12 persons, containing wicker chairs, made especially for the Lintonian. The orchestra seats are of the up-to-date opera style and number one thousand.

The Lintonian stage is large enough to accommodate any size road attraction, but it is a show house partcularly well adapted to pictures. The booth is at the rear of the balcony, with nearly a level throw to the screen. Powers machines are used.

Opened With "Daddy Long Legs."

The picture secured for the opening was Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs," a First National production. Along with this was a Kinogram reel. These pictures were shown on Wednesday and Thursday, and on Friday and Saturday "The Heart of Humanity" was the attraction, together with a Universal Comedy. Admission was 35 and 50 cents.

The house has a concert orchestra under the direction of Frank Stewart. Casper Shults, formerly part owner of the old City Theatre, is operator and stage manager.

Clifford A. Carroll, formerly dramatic editor of the Utica Saturday Globe, is general publicity man, taking care of the advertising for the Hippodrome, Utica, and the Lintonian, Little Falls.

The Lintonian makes the fourth theatre of which Mr. Linton is owner. He now controls the Hippodrome, Utica; the Hippodrome, Little Falls; the Lintonian, Little Falls, and the Richmond, Herkimer. In the latter he is associated with D. R. Letson, of that place.

Majestic Goes to Pictures Only.

The Majestic Theatre, which has been playing vaudeville and feature picture for some time past, eliminated the vaudeville, on May 26, and opened the summer season with pictures only, with "The Better Ole." In addition there was a comedy, news reel and scenic. A stage setting showing a trench in No Man's Land, with soldiers in uniform, was shown. For the last three days of the week the Thomas H. Ince special, "The Midnight Patrol," was the main feature. The house has a full orchestra. Admission is 11, 15 and 20 cents.

Speigel May Open in Utica.

Present appearances point to the entry of Max Speigel in the Syracuse amusement center. The story has it that Speigel and William F. Rafferty will soon close a deal either for the erection of a new house here, or for the lease and remodeling of the old Grand. Speigel is already financially interested in the Syracuse Strand, and for some time past has had his eye on the local field. It is said that plans for a new house were made some time ago, but the high cost of building caused the deal to be postponed.

MINNESOTA FIRE MARSHAL GETS BUSY

And Starts Out After Scalps of Traveling Exhibitors Who Violate the State Fire Laws

GEORGE H. NETTLESTON, state fire marshal of Minnesota, is out after the scalps of certain traveling exhibitors who are violating the laws governing the regulation of moving picture theatres by the state fire department. In a statement recently issued, he said:

"This department has found that there are a number of traveling exhibitors who are going about the state putting on motion picture shows for two or three night stands in town halls or other buildings which have not been inspected and licensed by this department.

"In doing so the law regulating motion picture theatres is being violated, which cannot be tolerated by this office, inasmuch as the enforcement of this law has been one of the duties of the fire marshal.

"I wish to have it generally understood that such cases will be vigorously prosecuted by this office and we will be glad to have the co-operation of everyone who is interested in improving the motion picture business by having violations of the law in this respect reported to the department."

LOUISVILLE EXPERIENCES BAD WEATHER

The Regular Houses Prosper but the Airdomes Are Now Having an Extremely Hard Row to Hoe

BUSINESS with the local exhibitors is reported as very fair, considering weather conditions. For the past six weeks it rained during some portion of almost every twenty-four hours. However, according to Fred Dolle, of the Alamo, and other exhibitors, business has been so good that the theatres have been making up for losses experienced during the influenza period, although Louisville houses were so far ahead on the 1918 season as a result of activity at Camp Taylor, that the loss did not hurt many of them. The spring races attracted many visitors to the city this year and have done their part in making business brisk. They have also pried some exhibitors loose from portions of their bankrolls.

Outdoor Shows Suffer.

Rivoli Gardens, on Preston street, made an effort recently to open the outdoor season with moving pictures and other attractions, but outdoor amusements are making no headway this season as against the rain and chilly weather. Fontaine Ferry Park has had very few good crowds to date. The dance hall is pulling, but the theatre and other amusements look dead. Airdomes in most cases have stayed "put," and don't expect to open until weather conditions settle. There are more airdomes operated as losing propositions annually through starting too early than from any other cause. Baseball very seldom pays dividends before June, and June nights are cool even as far south as Louisville. While the airdome has been considered a failure by many exhibitors, it has been due entirely to early opening. An airdome operating from mid June until mid September or early October would only have about three months in which to make taxes, operating expenses and profits, but if the overhead is lost during the first month there is no chance of breaking even.

Health Board Will Move to Louisville.

Louisville theatrical men, including both the moving picture exhibitors and the stage men, are much pleased over recent announcement by the State Board of Health, which is moving its offices from Bowling Green to Louisville. While this may result in local theatre men being checked up more closely on certain details, at the same time it will work for benefit to the theatrical world as a whole to have headquarters in the principal city of the state instead of a small country town. Last year, during the influenza epidemic, the need for a locally operating board was very apparent, especially as the board met but once a week, and conditions were changing rapidly. Members of the board in many instances made decisions on what they heard rather than what they knew to be a positive fact.

Big Features Has Moved.

The Big Features Rights Corporation has moved its offices from the Rex Theatre Building to the National Theatre Building, where it is occupying portions of the second and third floors. Manager Lee Goldberg reports that he is doing fine with the concern's most recent feature attractions, which are "The Unpardonable Sin," "Daddy Long Legs" and "Mickey." Louis Ochs and Nathan Kaplan have been added to the traveling force in Kentucky and Tennessee. The company is also preparing to put out six or more traveling road shows.

At Madisonville, Ky., four organizations of women circulated petitions, and called on the Mayor, requesting that city official to prohibit the display of posters advertising moving pictures, stage productions, etc., where the posters displayed shapely calves, and lovely chorus girls not fully clad. The chances are that nothing will come of the protest.

Louisville Man Is Stung.

The Better Business Bureau, of the Louisville Advertising Club, has been doing some excellent work of late in investigating crooked enterprises. Neither did the company exist, but the Louisville man was caught for $350 in cold cash.

THE Electric Reading Club, one of the oldest clubs in St. John, N. B., for their May meeting discussed the moving picture. The evening was in charge of Canon Armstrong, Rector of Trinity Church, and the preacher of a sermon last year against sensational pictures, particularly serials for children. There were several excellent readings given on the history of the industry and two papers read, one by Canon Armstrong, who advocates more pictures with Dickens' plots or stories taken from historical events and more educational views shown. Dr. Bridges, chairman of the New Brunswick Board of Censors, told of the mechanical workings of the picture cameras and something of the difficulties of the censors. He thought that if the right appeal were allowed the exchange manager from the judgment of four censors, there should be more than one judge on the appeal court. In the course of both papers, the members of the Club were urged to use their influence for the betterment of the programs.

Daylight Saving Is a Problem.

DUE perhaps more to the daylight saving time and the coming of warm weather than to any other reason, theatre business has showed a slight falling off during the past week, according to reports from several of the moving picture houses. The managers believe that the condition is only temporary, however, and they are firm in their expectations that many strong pictures which have been booked will hold the attendance well up to the standard. They admit, nevertheless, that the daylight saving time is a problem they must contend with.

The managers find consolation in an announcement that regulations are to be issued which will clearly define conditions surrounding the collection of war taxes.

Universal's New Branch Manager Comes from Spokane Office, Which Has Been Discontinued

W. POTTER has succeeded W. A. Mead as manager of the Seattle Universal office, the Spokane office which Mr. Potter has managed for the last four years having been closed. During the early period of his service in the Spokane office Mr. Potter handled, in addition to the regular Universal releases, "The Traffic in Souls" and the Williamson submarine pictures. On taking over the Seattle office he has added to the force already here three of his old employes from Spokane; other preparations have been made for an increased business.

It is being presented by Lieutenant Bushnell, an American who enlisted in the Canadian army at the beginning of the war and was at the front for three years. Lieutenant Bushnell lectures during the showing of the picture.

HERB. JENNINGS ISSUED TIMELY FOLDER

And One That Exhibitors of the States Could Imitate to Advantage for the Fourth of July

MANAGER Herb Jennings issued a timely folder for Allen's Bloor Theatre, Toronto, for Victoria Day, May 24, the national spring holiday in Canada. It has been quite the custom to resort to the use of fireworks as a demonstrative feature, but a plea for a sane holiday has been aroused, as for the Fourth of July, in the States. With this idea in mind, Manager Jennings urged the public to spend part of the day at the Bloor Theatre as a safe celebration.

The front cover of the folder was inscribed "Safe—24th—Sane," and the message on the inside double-page spread was addressed to mothers. It read: "Mother—Spend a pleasant and safe Victoria Day with the Little Ones at Allen's Bloor Theatre." Announcement was then made regarding the three different shows to be held during the day. A special children's matinee was held at 10:30 A. M., with "The Seven Swans," as the feature. A regular matinee was held at 2:15, and the evening performance started at 6 P. M., with Wallace Reid in "The Roaring Road." Prices for the regular matinee in the afternoon were 10c and 15c; for the special morning show children were admitted for 15c. Prices for the evening performances scaled from 15c to 25c.

The theatre was crowded from early morning until late at night.

Thief Strips Ushers' Room.

The ten young men who perform the duties of ushers at the Allen Theatre, Toront, were surprised the other evening to find that all their street clothing had been removed from the dressing room of the theatre during the evening performance.

The bright red uniforms are nice for the theatre, but not quite appropriate for street wear. Neither is underwear quite the thing for street use. Manager Ben Cronk, therefore, considerately provided taxicabs to take the young men to their homes, natty red uniforms and all. All the boys had left money and other valuables in their pockets. A bicycle was also stolen from the room. One of the ushers had worn a brand new $50 suit to the theatre for the first time.

Adds "The Trench Quartette."

In connection with the presentation of "The Better 'Ole" at Allen's Bloor Theatre, Toronto, Manager Herb Jennings provided an added attraction in a vocal feature. He organized a male quartette composed of four returned soldiers and billed them as "The Trench Quartette." He advertised the musical feature as "A Movie Extravaganza," and did "S. R. O." all during the run.

Among Independent Producers

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

Brady Makes Two More Sales on "Stolen Orders"

WILLIAM A. BRADY announces two more sales of territory on "Stolen Orders," which is one of the most active productions in the state rights field.

The A. H. Blank Enterprises, of Des Moines, has secured this picture for Missouri, Nebraska and Kansas, while James M. Minter, of the Minter-United Amusement, of Detroit, has it for Michigan.

John H. Kunsky recently showed "Stolen Orders" at his Washington Theatre in Detroit, where it drew business of a character so satisfactory that Mr. Minter, seeing the picture and observing, immediately arranged the purchase of the rights for Michigan. Both the A. H. Blank Enterprises and the Minter-United Amusements will inaugurate an extensive campaign of exploitation in behalf of this production.

Extensive Advertising Aids on "Custer's Last Fight"

THE two latest William S. Hart two-reel reissues, with "Custer's Last Fight" and the new series of single-reel Arbuckle reissues, are being rapidly disposed of by the Tower Film Corporation, and state rights buyers who have acquired rights to these subjects announce that they are receiving many requests for summer bookings.

"Custer's Last Fight" is claimed to be one of the most spectacular pictures produced by Thomas H. Ince, and Tower Film Corporation are developing an extensive promotion campaign for this subject, including a campaign book, press sheet, newspaper cuts, two styles of various sizes of posters, and attractive lobby displays of 11x14 photographs. One of the six-sheet posters is a facsimile of the famous painting titled "Custer's Last Stand." There is also a comprehensive display of advertising matter on the Harts and Arbuckles.

A majority of the territories has already been disposed of on these pictures, and it is expected the remaining territories will be taken up quickly.

Foreign Rights Are Offered on Olive Thomas Triangles

L. L. HILLER, whose offices are located in Suite 912 Longacre Building, New York, announces that arrangements have been completed by which he will act as distributor for the foreign rights to four special features produced by Triangle starring Olive Thomas which were purchased by Joseph Friedberg.

The title of the productions are "Love's Prisoner," "The Follies Girl," "Toton" and "Prudence on Broadway," and in each Miss Thomas is said to interpret roles particularly well suited to her talents and personality.

Mr. Friedberg, who secured the foreign rights to these productions, is a well-known independent buyer. All of these pictures are recent Triangle releases in this country.

European buyers who have viewed these productions are said to be confident that Miss Thomas' work will enjoy great popularity abroad.

Pioneer Now Preparing Long List of Features

THE Pioneer Film Corporation announces extensive plans have been laid to place before the exhibitor and state rights buyers a fine selection of high class features within the next few months.

The next few weeks will see the start of the exploitation of "The Sins of the Children," Harry Rapf's production of Cosmos Hamilton's novel. Hand in hand with this picture will go "The Girl from Nowhere," in which Cleo Madison makes her appearance as a Pioneer star.

Four other pictures are in the process of production. Work on "Parted Curtains," in which Henry B. Walthall plays the stellar role, is rapidly nearing completion. Preliminaries to the production of the next Walthall picture which will be handled by the Pioneer are under way at the National Film Corporation Studio at Hollywood. This picture will be an elaborate screen version of "Confession." The National plans to make this picture an equal in every respect to "Tarzan." "Confession," it is said, will contain some of the biggest as well as most sensational scenes ever attempted in photoplay making.

"The Hidden Code" is another production which will be offered on the state rights market under the Pioneer trade mark, and details of "Who Is My Husband" are being worked out in secrecy. As the title suggests this picture is going to be along sensational and spectacular lines.

Christie Wants Scripts for Two-Reel Specials

AL E. CHRISTIE has called attention to the fact that he is depending largely on outside writers for the furnishing of scenario ideas for his new special comedies. Both Al E. and C. H. Christie declare that they cannot over emphasize the fact that in producing feature comedies in two reels the story material should nearly always be of the type which has frequently been considered as typical five-reel comedy-drama material; in other words, it is the idea of the Christies to produce two-reel comedies from stories of five-reel calibre.

Mr. Christie has made a general request for stories necessitated by the increased schedule of production, including both one and two-reel comedies.

Latest Billy West Film Is Titled "Out of Tune"

The newest Billy West comedy released by Bulls Eye Film Corporation is called "Out of Tune." The principal character gets into all sorts of difficulties with other members of the orchestra. The New York franchise holders for this series, Interstate Films, booked it at several Loew houses for last week, and reports indicate that it will equal if not exceed the drawing powers of the other Billy West comedies.

Territorial sales on Bulls Eye's Napoleon and Sally series of single-reel comedies are progressing rapidly, with a few territories left to be disposed of.

Late reports from the Gale Henry comedies, a Bulls Eye proposition, is that these comedies are being booked into summer shows with the greatest success.

Pioneer Company Handling Garson Film in New York

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the Pioneer Film Corporation of the securing of rights to the Harry Garson big feature producton, "The Unpardonable Sin," featuring Blanche Sweet, for the state of New York. The deal was negotiated by Morris Rose, president of the company.

One of the first acts after securing this picture was to arrange for its presentation for a run at the Majestic Theatre, Buffalo, where it is said to have opened to big business on Sunday, June 1.

In announcing this purchase, Mr. Rose says it will be the settled policy of Pioneer to secure big feature pictures which will stand the test of long runs, and that several other pictures now in the course of preparation will be exploited in the same manner as "The Unpardonable Sin."

All Territory Now Sold on Craig Kennedy Serial

HARRY GROSSMAN, vice-president and general manager of Oliver Films, Inc., who has been on a trip to the Pacific Coast and to Texas in connection with territorial bookings for "The Carter Case," the Craig Kennedy serial featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh, has reported two more sales of territory, completing the territorial arrangements for "The Carter Case," and it will now be shown in all sections of the United States, as well as in foreign countries.

The California rights were purchased by the Consolidated Feature Film Company, 114 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, while rights for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas were sold to the Southwestern Film Corporation, 1911½ Commerce street, Dallas, Texas. The sale marked the closing of negotiations that were begun when S. M. Sanford, manager of the Dallas exchange, visited the Oliver Studio and witnessed a screening.

Mr. Grossman is now in Chicago, where the Celebrated Film Corporation is meeting with success with "The Carter Case" similar to that of the Pioneer Film Corporation in New York. The Oliver Films official is superintending a wide publicity campaign in that city, assisted by the Lubliner and Trinz and the Ascher Brothers circuits, both of which are booking the serial in their theatres.

Reports from all territories are to the effect that "The Carter Case" is enjoying wide popularity and that exhibitors are following the example of the several hundred theatres playing the picture in New York. Enthusiastic reports have been made to Oliver Films, Inc., from Boston, Philadelphia, Washington and other important distributing centres.

Mr. Grossman will return to New York within the next few days, and is expected to make several interesting announcements concerning the name of the next serial to be produced and the stars, also concerning the plans of the company for increased production.

Arthur Hyman to Handle S-L Film as Road Show

ARTHUR S. HYMAN, purchaser of "Virtuous Men" for Indiana, Michigan and Illinois, recently commented upon the many exploitation angles of the S-L production. Mr. Hyman, who exploited "Hearts of the World" and other big productions for his territory, has completed arrangements to present "Virtuous Men" as a road show, and five companies will start out in July through his territory.

"Possessing a wonderful title which can be exploited to the limit, it also has a variety of 'thrill' scenes and an excellent star, a great supporting cast in which several stage names of prominence appear, mob scenes containing great numbers of people and settings of beauty and distinctiveness," says Mr. Hyman. "All of these factors can be profitably exploited in presenting this picture as a road attraction. It is my intention to exploit the S-L production even bigger than I did 'Hearts of the World'."

Mr. Hyman is said to be making arrangements to purchase a further block of territory for "Virtuous Men."

This production is to tell a big and vital story on a theme of universal interest. Sales are being handled by Film Market, Inc.

Pioneer Announces Opening of Branch in Buffalo

THE Pioneer Film Corporation has opened an exchange in Buffalo at 407 Iroquois Building. Heretofore all business in the western section of the state has been handled from New York, but recently the call for Pioneer pictures has grown to such dimensions that the executives decided to open an exchange in Buffalo.

The full line of Pioneer pictures is available at the Buffalo office, together with the many novel and effective advertising aids. The opening of the Buffalo office is the first step in Pioneer's plans to place exchanges in a number of exchange centres.

Jerry Abrams is now on the road, and has disposed of the territorial rights to "The Boomerang," "Sins of the Children" and "The Girl from Nowhere." The rights on the latter production for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia were sold to Apex Pictures, of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Abrams will look over the field with the possibility in view of establishing additional exchanges.

Fortune in Gold Sought by Outing-Chester Expedition

GET on the trail of all those millions the Incas paid Pizarro," were the instructions given the Outing-Chester cameraman sent into Peru, "and fifty-fifty on all the gold you uncover."

So, as pictured in "Piking After Pizarro," the new Outing-Chester release, the cameraman journeyed down to the coast, up into the interior, over the Andes, and then sadly all the way back. They are still getting gold down there, but it takes a lot of work to do it, and all the mines seem to be well known and tightly owned.

But it makes a good picture anyway, and the real purpose of a cameraman is to camera, not mine.

Katharine Hilliker has taken excerpts from the cameraman's letters on the trip and incorporated them in the titles, and so the audience will follow the emotions, the hopes and fears and final disillusionment of the searcher as he cranks on his way.

Novel Camera Device Used in "Carter Case" Episode

A NOVEL device in the shape of a minature motion picture camera operated by the effect of light on a seilenium cell is used by Craig Kennedy to trap one of the criminals in the ninth episode of "The Carter Case," the Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey screen version of the Craig Kennedy scientific detective stories. The name of this episode is "The Camera Trap."

Continuing his search for the valuable secret papers belonging to the Carter estate, Kennedy encounters further opposition from Avion and his emissaries. A portion of an important diagram is taken from one of the emissaries whose act of securing it was recorded by the motion picture camera. Pursuing this man, Kennedy is led to the cage in the mine shaft and precipitated to the bottom. In the meantime, Anita is again captured by the chief emissary.

The tenth episode is entitled "The Moonshiners," and the succeeding chapter is "The White Damp."

HUGH FORD, who directed "Secret Service," the big Paramount-Artcraft special in which Robert Warwick is starred, and which was adapted by Beulah Marie Dix from William Gillette's play of the days of the Rebellion, has introduced a feature which promises to be decidedly interesting as a reflection of the bravery and forced gaiety of the people of Richmond at a stressful period of the Civil War.

A bazaar is shown with the folk of the city gay in the face of possible capitulation later to the Northern forces lying outside their gates. The same spirit that actuated the aristocrats during the French revolution is exhibited; everyone in holiday attire, laughing, smiling, apparently happy, yet with the inner consciousness awake to the fact that tomorrow might bring disaster; often times with little to eat, but with a laugh on their lips—a species of bravery and courage that has seldom been equalled in the history of the country. Indeed this nobility of spirit is shown throughout the story.

Edwards Shifts to Western Drama.

When J. Gordon Edwards was selected by William Fox as director for William Farnum in "The Lone Star Ranger," based on Zane Grey's novel of that name, exhibitors who had followed this director's productions looked forward to something unique in Western effects.

The Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation says that these hopes are to be more than realized: that Director Edwards has shown an amazing and intimate knowledge of the details of cowboy life, and has astounded some of the cowboys with his comments.

Report Big Business on Artcraft Special.

The Paramount-Artcraft special, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," picturized by Hugh Ford from Hall Caine's well-known novel of the same name, is proving as good a drawing card in the Illinois territory as any Famous Players-Lasky production that ever played there, according to reports to the home office. Manager Burford, of the Strand Theatre, Aurora, Ill., and the manager of the Princess Theatre, Joliet, Ill., in both of which places the special has had a run, were so pleased with the results that they wrote in to the Chicago branch of Famous Players-Lasky about it.

Producers' and Distributors' News

Strong Cast Selected for New Viola Dana Picture

METRO has succeeded in casting the supporting roles for Viola Dana's next starring vehicle, which is to be a screen adaptation of Henry Altimus' story, "The Microbe," recently published in Ainslee's magazine.

For the part of Miss Dana's leading man, a powerfully dramatic type requiring an actor whose histrionic ability is second to none, Metro has secured the services of Kenneth Harlan. His part in the production will give him the strongest role of his career as an actor, that of the writer in the story, De Witt Spence, whose downfall and regeneration are influenced by the child of the streets, "the microbe," as he fondly calls her.

The part of Robert Brereton, the writer's friend, who succeeds in separating Spence and the girl of the streets, is in the hands of Arthur Maude. Mr. Maude is one of the screen's most recent acquirements from the stage.

Ned Norworth, a popular supporting player of many successful screen dramas, is the last of the male principals to be engaged to support Miss Dana, and Metro is confident that each of these parts is in able hands.

The comedy balance of the story will be left to Lucy Donahue, a character comedienne of the first water, who will play the part of the housekeeper, wherein she will be given ample opportunity to display her quaint humor as a relief against the sterner moments of the play.

The last of the principals is Bonnie Hill, a beautiful and talented young actress who leans toward the "heavy" types of parts.

Two Big Circuits Book Universal's "Destiny"

REPORTS that "Destiny," Universal's new Jewel production starring Dorothy Phillips, was being booked by the exhibitors throughout the country have been coming into the Broadway office and these announcements were given a decided boost recently when it was announced that the United Booking Office and the Fox Circuit of theatres in the New York district had booked "Destiny" for a total of 114 days.

Many of the big exhibitors in the New York territory attended a private showing of the picture recently in the Universal projection room, and praise of the production was unanimous.

"Destiny" is one of the big pictures Universal is to release during its anniversary month of June. Allen Holubar directed the production. Among the prominent of the supporting cast are William Stowell, Harry Hilliard, Stanhope Wheatcraft, Walt Whitman, Gertrude Astor and Allen Sears.

"Quick! Make Me Your Prisoner!"
Says the immaculate one to Robert Warwick in his Artcraft, "Secret Service."

"Upstairs" Is a Radical Change for Mabel Normand

THOSE who remember the extreme and delightful humors of Mabel Normand in her previous pictures will have the additional pleasure of seeing the Goldwyn star in an entirely different role in "Upstairs," which will be scheduled shortly for release. In her new character the star who has so often made exhibitors and the public laugh, plays a part in which drama and comedy are intermixed rather than burlesque attitudes.

Indeed Miss Normand has tempered her usual character part with a bit of the "straight" heroine, and she is here provided wtih opportunity to prove that her genius as an actress is not confined merely to antics and burlesquerie.

Her role will give her plenty of chance to portray humorous and primitive emotions. "Upstairs" is a rattling, romantic tale of adventure and love-making, in which Miss Normand plays the part of a girl, who, for a few brief, nervous, filled-with-adventure hours, partakes of life "upstairs"—she, whose grammar was mostly picked-up "downstairs."

Novel Dancing Bit in Capellani Film.

One of the many interesting "bits" incorporated into "The Unknown Dancer," the new Capellani production in which June Caprice and Creighton Hale are co-starred, is a novel exhibition dance given by Jessica Brown, a feature dancer now appearing in "Come Along," a current Broadway musical comedy hit. The dance is said to be Miss Brown's own original creation and is a combination of the classical Grecian mode of terpeschore and the present day "jazz" dance.

Pathe to Release Perret's "The Thirteenth Chair"

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC. announces that it will distribute as a special feature, Leonce Perret's screen version of Bayard Veiller's melodramatic success "The Thirteenth Chair."

Mr. Veiller brought to the making of what has been called "a master mystery play," an amazing ingenuity and craftsmanship. Leonce Perret has taken this story and brought forth a picture which retains every feature of the original play, and has the added values furnished by the screen to enhance it.

In his adroit construction of this melodrama, Mr. Vellier presents an interesting murder case, without too persistent explanations of preceding events; then in the presence of the audience, introduces a second murder, obviously linked with the first and proceeds to find the slayer, endeavoring to prevent even the most astute onlookers from guessing the solution until he is ready for its disclosure in the last few minutes of the final act.

A more thrilling climax could not well be devised than that of the first act when, following a shriek in the darkness which prevails while a clairvoyant, who has been summoned to a gathering at the end of a dinner party, goes into a trance to call the spirit of a deceased man in order to unravel the mystery of his murder—a crime of which a young girl present is suspected—the lights are flashed on, and upon the floor lies the lifeless body of one of the guests, stabbed in the back! Who committed the murder? That is the question that keeps the audience guessing.

Two Weeks Pre-Release for "Oh Boy" in Chicago

"OH BOY," Albert Capellani's rendition of the Elliot Comstock and Gest musical comedy success by G. P. Wodehouse, Guy Bolton and Jerome Kern, starring Creighton Hale and June Caprice, will have an auspicious introduction to the amusement going public in a pre-release of two weeks at the Ziegfield Theatre, Chicago, beginning June 7. Special settings have been designed, and the pictorial feature of the original story will be supplied by a chorus of twenty selected beauties. An orchestra of fifty-six pieces will render the original music of the opera.

"Oh Boy" will meet the eyes of the dweller in Chicago at almost every turn, for special displays will be made in the show windows of stores, which will utilize the title while exploiting some particular line of merchandise. These window exhibitions will be tied up with big newspaper advertising on the part of the management of the Ziegfield Theatre.

Salisbury to Star in McCulley Story.

A powerful story of the Northwest country has been purchased by Universal for screen production. It is "The Brute Breakers," by Johnston McCulley.

Monroe Salisbury will be cast in the leading part of this new story. He will portray the character of a man who tames the bullies of the northern logging camps.

Robertson-Cole Names Its Pictures for Summer

IN spite of the rapid approach of summer, which usually brings dull times for theatres, Robertson-Cole officials announce that they are looking forward to no material let-up in their production activities, nor Exhibitors Mutual in their selling efforts.

Working in conjunction with the officials of Exhibitors Mutual, through which all its pictures are released, Robertson-Cole has formulated a plan which will insure the exhibitor an unending stream of high class pictures during the trying period between now and the fall.

Robertson-Cole has now definitely decided that the following productions will be released through Exhibitors Mutual in the course of the summer:

"Sessue Hayakawa, in "His Debt"; Billie Rhodes, in "In Search of Arcady"; Henry B. Warner in the first Superior Picture, "The Man Who Turned White"; Bessie Barriscale, in "Tangled Threads"; William Desmond in "Bare-Fisted Gallagher," succeeding "The Mints of Hell," a big snow picture which will make an ideal summer attraction; "Better Times" second of the Brentwood series by King W. Vidor, creator of "The Turn in the Road"; and Beatrice Michelena in "The Deadline."

These offerings comprise but a part of the list of exceptional attractions which Robertson-Cole plan for summer distribution through Exhibitors Mutual.

Then there are "The Love Call," with Billie Rhodes; Henry B. Walthall in "Modern Husbands," Beatriz Michelena in "Just Squaw," Bessie Barriscale in "Josselyn's Wife," and William Desmond in "The Mints of Hell," which are now producing big results wherever they are exhibited.

There is a strong mixture of lighter vehicles for the Robertson-Cole stars, with a heavier vein of drama, making a combination of offerings that is destined to satisfy the most varied type of audience.

AN unusual use of the spotlight is responsible for the blush that appears on Tom Moore's cheek in his new Goldwyn picture, "The City of Comrades," a picturization of Basil King's Saturday Evening Post serial.

Tom Moore, as a regenerated "down-and-outer," is on the verge of declaring his love for Seena Owen, the girl who has been responsible for his redemption. She is seated beside a table; Moore is on a settee near a large curtained window. A few commonplaces are exchanged; the girl gives him the necessary opening for an avowal of his love. He is about to follow the dictates of his heart, when a sudden realization of his former degradation renders him speechless. He gulps once or twice, tries to speak, but shame has tied his tongue. He turns his head away; the girl knows that the big moment has passed, and tries to lighten his embarrassment.

In the acting of this scene, shame is mirrored on Moore's cheek, which is shown in profile, just as vividly as though a touch of "darkener" had been quickly applied during its taking. The star's acting has much to do with the effect obtained, but cameraman George Webber had a weak pin-hole ray from a spot play upon Moore's countenance until the moment when his repressed emotion reached a climax. Then the light was shut off; and the slight shading of his cheek, timed perfectly with the acting, brings the man's sense of shame to the observer with a power out of all proportion to the simple methods used in portraying it.

Moreno-Holloway Serial Near Completion.

"Perils of Thunder Mountain," Vitagraph's aptly-named adventure serial, which has already set a new high mark for Vitagraph bookings of that description, is not remaining stationary around the mark achieved, but is taking an occasional spurt beyond its own unique figures.

The Antonio Moreno-Carol Holloway serial company, which is making the picture will return to Truckee, Cal. to stage the concluding episodes. While the opening scenes of this play, taken in the same region, evidenced a wintry aspect, the final scenes will show the same locations grown green and under the gentle influence of spring.

Plan Big Advertising for Select Film in Chicago

SELECT announces that the showing of Olive Thomas' first Selznick Picture, "Upstairs and Down," in Chicago, will be accompanied by a big advertising campaign. Fred C. Aiken, Select's Chicago branch manager, has already completed plans for two units in the big campaign, and other arrangements are now in the works.

Mr. Aiken's first step in the Chicago exploitation of "Upstairs and Down," was to interest the management of the Paradise Dancing Academy in a plan whereby it is to hold an "Upstairs and Down" night on the evening of June 12. Mr. Guyon, the owner and director of this amusement corporation, is one of Chicago's biggest advertisers, and he has a contract for two one-sheets on every elevated station platform in that city. In connection with the "Upstairs and Down" night at the Paradise, the arrangements include an agreement by which Mr. Guyon will advertise Olive Thomas, "Upstairs and Down," and the Selznick Pictures Corporation on every one-sheet at his disposal. An additional line will give the names of the first run theatres where "Upstairs and Down" is booked for Chicago engagements.

On the evening of the "Upstairs and Down" Night at the Paradise, there will be distributed 1,000 photographs of Miss Thomas, on the backs of which will be printed the name of every theatre in Chicago and vicinity where "Upstairs and Down" will be shown.

Other plans for additional advertising made by Mr. Aiken include an arrangement whereby several of Chicago's leading restaurants and cafes will use photographs of Miss Thomas for menu cards.

Sherry in "Tiger Lily" Cast.

J. Barney Sherry, the character actor, has returned to the American studios, following a flying trip to Los Angeles to appear in some scenes with Dustin Farnum. The latter was being delayed in pushing through one of his productions, pending Sherry's arrival to continue a performance he had begun, and through courtesy of the "Flying A," Sherry had leave of absence to finish the job. Now he is once more appearing as "Philip Remington" in support of Margarita Fisher in "The Tiger Lily."

Announce Remainder of Cast for May Allison Film

AS recently announced by Metro, Beauty, Truth and Love have been brought together in a reunion as it were, with the production of the story for May Allison, called "Free," and published in the Saturday Evening Post from the pen of Wallace Irwin.

The same Beauty, Truth and Love who made such a lasting impression in Henry W. Savage's stage production, "Everywoman," with May Allison as Beauty, Kathleen Kerrigan (J. Warren Kerrigan's sister) as Truth and Pel Trenton as King Love are all together again in Metro's "Free."

Besides these players are many well-known screen artists among whom the name of Alfred Hollingsworth stands out prominently. Mr. Hollingsworth has a strong part in this story of the test of Bolshevism.

The other principals are Howard Gaye, Lois Woods and Caroline Rankin, all of whom have their own following on the screen and who will be seen in well-fitting roles in this piece.

The story was converted to the pictures by George D. Baker. "Free" is a story of the masses, the same "four million" of the late O. Henry fame, with several millions added since the demise of the distinguished writer. Herbert Blache is the director.

Exhibitors Acclaim "A Bachelor's Wife."

Strong praise is being received from theatre owners for "A Bachelor's Wife," American's newest offering starring Mary Miles Minter. They are enthusiastic not only over the production itself, which takes rank as a special attraction—but over the well-chosen title. They are unanimous in declaring the title a drawing-card by reason of the way in which it piques curiosity.

Hattie Delaro in "April Folly" Cast.

Hattie Delaro is in the cast of Marion Davies' new starring vehicle, "April Folly," now being screened at the Biograph Studio. Miss Delaro has forsaken the path of grandes dames and "maternal women" to play a woman of uncertain age and temper. Miss Delro was the original American "Pitti-Sing" in "The Mikado."

Goldwyn Starts Summer Drive on Extra Productions

WITH the summer season well under way the sales forces of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation are launching a determined campaign to establish new booking records on the successful extra productions released by the organization.

Goldwyn's Service Department, working in co-operation with the Goldwyn resident managers throughout the country, has collected data and reports from exhibitors, showing the long runs and special exploitation which have been given the extras by large and small showmen everywhere.

"The Eternal Magdalene," a powerful dramatization of Robert H. McLaughlin's stage success, leads off in the summer drive for more bookings. A carefully planned, direct-mail campaign, giving exhibitors' own reports on the worth of this production, is now in execution in the Goldwyn exchanges. New pointers on exploitation, collected from the campaigns and specimen newspaper advertisements submitted by exhibitors, are included in the campaign.

"The Border Legion," Zane Grey's melodrama of the West, is also the center of energetic sales effort.

Other extras are "Eyes of Truth," an Oriental drama with Lady Tsen Mei; Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset;" "For the Freedom of the World;" "The Manx Man," and the Selexart Trio of Extras comprising "Honor's Cross," "Social Ambition" and "Blue Blood."

Capellani Reports Rapid Progress on "The Gutter"

RAPID progress is being made by Director Albert Capellani in the filming of Dolores Cassinelli's initial starring vehicle for the Albert Capellani Production, Inc., temporarily titled "The Gutter" and it is expected that the coming week will find the production ready for final cutting and titling.

The office of the Capellani Productions has just received from France about 400 feet of negative taken in the Montmartre district of Paris and showing exterior views of this picturesque Bohemian quarter. All the interior sets for the Montmartre scenes have been erected at the Capellani Studio in Fort Lee under the personal supervision of Mr. Capellani and Mr. Mennessier.

The largest of these interior sets is a reproduction of a Montmartre cabaret. The action filmed in this set is of a spectacular nature and brings together a curious mixture of types—sensuous Parisienne grisettes, wiley Apaches, roistering and unconventional gayety of night life in a Montmartre cabaret.

"The Gutter" is adapted from "Le Ruisseau," a successful French stage play from the pen of Pierre Wolff, the noted French playwright and novelist.

Heading Miss Cassinelli's supporting company is Vincent Serrano, and included in the cast are Franklyn Farnum, Marie Chambers, Helen Lowell, Paul Doucet, May Hopkins and Albert Roccardi.

Iowa Exhibitor Holds a Harold Lloyd Comedy Week

THE Harold Lloyd comedies, after having become firmly established in the big cities, are now meeting with a rapidly widening appreciation in the smaller centers.

Walter F. Davis, manager of the Herrold Theatre, Herrold, Iowa, recently put on a "Harold Lloyd" week and reports, even at that, his patrons did not seem to get enough of it.

W. W. Freeman, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Great Falls, Mont., after laughing heartily over the first of his comedy showings, wrote: "We are willing to pay more for good comedies such as Harold Lloyd appears in. Every last man, woman and child hereabouts has just gone nutty over him."

And in Charleroi, Pa., where Michael Rosenbloom is manager of the Majestic Theatre, is another Lloyd follower, who declares that, as a curative, Harold has certain overwhelming advantages beyond the doctors; and that, as a matter of fact, even the doctors themselves, take the Lloyd cure.

Universal City Actively Producing New Pictures

WITH the Broadway office of Universal hitting the 100 per cent. efficiency mark, and the entire Universal sales force marking up records daily, in view of the celebration month, the entire staff of players, directors, writers and cameramen of Universal City, Cal., have joined in the efficiency spirit and are busy on new productions or completing others.

Allen Holubar and Jack Ford have practically completed their latest productions. Holubar is now filming the latter parts of Dorothy Phillips' picture "The Right to Happiness." Ford has about completed "A Man of Peace," in which Harry Carey is starred. Peggy Pearce is in the leading female role in this Carey production.

William S. Campbell, the Universal comedy animal producer, has resumed work on the two reel comedy which is being produced under the title of "Wild Lions and Loose Bandits."

At an outlay of several thousand dollars a complete Turolean village was erected at Universal City for a setting in Eric Von Stroheim's premier screen play, "The Pinnacle."

Marie Walcamp, having completed the serial "The Red Glove," left with her director and a calvacade of cowpunchers, for Sonora, Cal. This locale will be used for the settings of a number of the Tempest Cody series of two reel Western dramas to be made by Miss Walcamp.

Pete Morrison, Universal's Western star, is at present working on a Western drama written by William Pigott. It is called "A Fortune at Stake."

Al Santell is directing the new Neal Burns and Josephine Hill comedy titled "Babies is Babies." A sextette of infants are used in the production, three Caucasians, two pickaninnies, and one slant eyed Japanese babe.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have just completed "Heart Troubles," and have starter work on "Watch Your Step, Children."

"An Innocent Adventuress" Is Vivian Martin's Latest

A UNIQUE plot is promised in "An Innocent Adventuress," Vivian Martin's new Paramount picture, which is released June 8. The story was written by a newcomer to screen literature, Clara G. Kennedy, who also did the continuity. This is Miss Kennedy's first attempt to write for the screen. Robert G. Vignola directed.

Miss Martin plays a kind-hearted young girl who, to save friends of hers from what she thinks is bad news, steals a letter from their mailbox. Later she learns that theft of mail is felony, and she instantly thinks she is suspected.

Lloyd Hughes has the leading male role, that of the young crook. Others in the cast are Edythe Chapman, Gertrude Norman, Jane Wolff, Tom D. Bates, Hal Clements, James Farley and Spottiswoods Aitken.

In this photoplay patrons will have an opportunity to see some of the most remarkable animal acting ever transferred to the screen. Togo, a dog with astonishing intelligence, makes his Paramount debut and he has one of the biggest roles in the play.

Cutting New Minter Picture.

"Yvonne from Paris," the story of a French dancer, by Joseph Franklin Poland, in which Mary Miles Minter soon will be presented by the American, has undergone its second cutting and is almost down to footage, according to reports from Santa Barbara. The film is on the list of "Flying A" releases for July.

Sidelights and Reflections

IN A BOOK by J. C. Snaith called "The Undefeated," the author has a line that sums up the necessity for sound principles in the pursuit of any art—even that of the moving picture: "Some say technique doesn't matter, but there's nothing permanent without it.

The personal opinion of a reviewer concerning a picture isn't worth the paper it is typewritten on. It is required of him that he ignore his own likes and dislikes and busy himself with a statement of the good qualities which his training for his work shows him to be in the picture. It is further required of him that he keep always before his mind that his verdict must be a composite one and that it must be acceptable to as many varieties of taste as possible. Neither is he called upon to decide for the exhibitor what pictures to book, but to put that person in possession of every available fact about the releases and let him use his own judgment.

Half in jest the writer once suggested that it might be a good plan to run three classes of reviews and let the exhibitor take his choice; there is often such a difference of opinion among picture theatre managers on the merits of fifty per cent. of the pictures. The one night stand manager with his peculiar local conditions to contend with seems to require even more thorough information about a picture than the longer time exhibitor, although the former, when he does show a picture which displeases his patrons, has the satisfaction of knowing he is not going to repeat it.

Attention was directed in this column last week to the engagement of D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" in New York and mention was made of the scale of prices. Three dollars is being obtained for the highest priced seats, and the theatre is playing to capacity business. The picture has also opened in Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago and has repeated its New York success.

"Broken Blossoms" is not a long picture, but its intensity and the manner of its presentation make it a full evening's entertainment. Nothing is allowed to detract from the spectator's enjoyment of the photoplay. The house is seated before the lights dim slowly and the first notes of the music are heard. From then on the story unfolds without interruption. No one gets up and goes out or breaks in on the absorbed attention of the spectators by walking down an aisle and dropping into a seat. Three dollar movies under such conditions are well worth the price. The screen is working out the proper classification of its product.

"Trixie From Broadway"

Five-Reel American-Pathe Subject Features Margarita Fisher as Chorus Lady.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT IS usually the hero who goes West and meets with numerous character-changing experiences, generally for the good. In this story, written by Agnes C. Johnston, it is the heroine who undergoes the metamorphosis. She is first discovered as a chorus girl, who ignores a sporty Broadway admirer and marries a Western man. In the West she develops some very unhappy symptoms, criticising her home life and general surroundings. But the course of events tames her spirit, and she learns in time to appreciate her husband and her home.

The main situation in this is a little too hard to command full sympathy; the wife is so utterly without ordinary womanly instincts, and the husband abuses her because he misunderstands her. The fire scenes at the close are realistic, but the hand-to-hand fight between Trixie and Gertie Brown seemed overdone.

As a whole the story is a better one than the last in which Margarita Fisher appeared, but it is rendered so largely by the scenes following the fire, in which Trixie wakes up in her real home. These scenes have the effect of softening the entire story and do much to leave a pleasing impression with the spectator.

The Story.

Trixie Darling, a chorus girl, is admired by Broadway Benham, a sporty individual who is fond of the "chickens." But Trixie shies off and decies to marry a Westerner named John Collins. The latter is perfectly happy with his bride until he overhears some envious chorus girls say that Trixie married him for his money.

On their arrival in the West, Collins takes Trixie in an ancient automobile to a tumble down shack, which he describes as their home. Trixie turns up her nose at everything and becomes very discontented. Later when Broadway Benham turns up at the head of a new musical show, playing one-night stands, Trixie decides to do her old dance act. But Collins follows her to the theatre and takes her bodily from the stage while she is doing her act.

Gertie Brown, a neighboring girl who formerly loved Collins, is jealous of Trixie. She leads an indignation meeting against Trixie, but the latter appears at the meeting to defend herself. Trixie and Gertie engage in a hand to hand fight, during which a lamp is upset and a fire started. Trixie saves Gertie's life, almost at the cost of her own. When she regains consciousness it is in a sumptuous home, which Collins says is the real one he had intended for her.

Lewis Getting Ready for Fourth Select Picture

ARMED with fishing tackle and an untouched motion picture script, Mitchell Lewis, star in Select Pictures, and his entire company, left Los Angeles Saturday, May 31, for the Columbia River, Washington, with the dual objective of an unprecedented trout fishing season and the filming of his fourth attraction for Select. Mr. Lewis' latest Select Picture, "Jacques of the Silver North," will be released this week.

Mr. Lewis' coming production, the title of which has not yet been announced, will require about three weeks of location work in the district around the head of the Columbia River. A number of mountain scenes are also necessary, but it is believed that the Select star will return to the Yosemite Valley district to obtain these shots. The studio work will be done in Los Angeles.

An announcement of importance in connection with Mr. Lewis' next picture is the fact that Robert Bradbury will be his director. Mr. Bradbury was last week appointed to the position of director general of the Mitchell Lewis Producing Company.

The name of the story, the author, and the cast has not yet been announced, but it is known that it will be an out-door picture presenting Mr. Lewis in the type of screen character which he has made famous.

Director Seitz Plays Heavy Role in New Pathe Serial

JUST to prove that he can act as well as tell others how, George B. Seitz, head of George B. Seitz Productions, Inc., and director of the coming Pathe serial, "In Secret," starring Pearl White, stepped into the firing line recently and assumed the role of the principal heavy in one of the closing episodes.

The serial has the unique distinction of having a different villain in each of the fifteen episodes. The part played by Mr. Seitz called for exacting delineation of emotional facial expression, which was shown for the greater part in close-ups and semi-close-ups, as well as some finely timed action.

Mr. Seitz is one of the few directors who has never had acting experience. He knew exactly what he wanted, however, and without makeup, he stepped into the scene. For a large part of the action, he worked alone on the set, the business being of the tense gripping sort that would naturally be expected of a man who has just committed a murder and who is still in the apartment with his victim, momentarily expecting discovery.

Popular Comedy Players in "It's Easy to Make Money"

IN "It's Easy to Make Money," with Bert Lytell as the star, Metro has a story with the comedy element uppermost, for the star has been surrounded with a cast of supporting players whose forte is comedy-drama.

The leading woman with Mr. Lytell, Claire Anderson, is a newcomer to the Metro ranks. Miss Anderson is a Detroit girl.

Frank Currier plays the role of Lytell's father, ol' man Slocum, who thinks his son good enough for any girl.

In the role of the bank president who attempts to foreclose on the hero's sweetheart, Frederick Heck makes a genuinely disliked villain. Ethel Shannon has a refreshing light comedy part of the banker's daughter whose first shot with Cupid's arrow misses fire when aimed at the star. Edward J. Connelly is another member of the cast who has an important role.

The two remaining principal parts are in the hands of John Cossal and Bull Montana, Mr. Cossal's part being that of a man of the law. Mr. Montana portrays a "heavy" role. The production is being directed by Edwin Crewe.

Receives Print on "Happiness a la Mode."

Select announces that the print on Constance Talmadge's coming Select picture, "Happiness a la Mode," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, has been received from the Coast studios. It is also reported that two more pre-release runs on this attraction have been booked. These latest pre-release dates, one of which is in Boston and the other in Indianapolis, follow the pre-pre-release at the Zeigfeld Theatre, in Chicago, and the pre-release run at the Bijou Dream, in Chicago, which were announced last week.

Holmes Finds Reasons for Divorce in "Upside Down"

HAVING firmly asserted their intent that each Taylor Holmes picture in the Triangle star series of this former legitimate comedian shall be equal to if not better than its predecessor, the executives who viewed the star's latest offering at a private showing express their satisfaction with reference to "Upside Down," just received from their film editing department.

In selecting the script for "Upside Down," scheduled for release June 22, "Lovely Reason," a story by George Agnew Chamberlain, was the choice, not alone because of the author's popularity, but because of the story's unusual appeal and the enthusiasm with which it was received when it was published in a popular magazine a short while ago.

Taylor Holmes, as Archie Pim, a man infatuated with his own wife, is struck speechless when the lady, Anna Lehr, declares that she must be freed from the bonds of matrimony, that she may develop her individuality. She simply compels poor Archibald, the most faithful husband in captivity, to furnish her a "reason." The husband is completely at a loss, but, once forced along the way of the transgressor, he discovers his task becoming wonderfully congenial. And before the end of the picture, in which he turns things upside down generally, Holmes, or, rather, his director, Lawrence C. Windom, is said to have supplied twenty of the lovliest "reasons" for divorce that man ever set eyes upon.

"Bishop's Emeralds" Heads Pathe Program for June 8

PATHE program for the week beginning June 8, is unusually strong in special and in serial quality; for the first of the Virginia Pearson Photoplay productions, "The Bishop's Emeralds," is given and one of the most thrilling episodes of "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland, now on a visit to the East, and George Larkin. Captain Houghton Townley's dramatic and emotional story, portraying high society life in England, has been splendidly adapted by Miss Pearson.

"Danger Ahead" is the title of the eighth episode of "The Tiger's Trail." Belle Boyd, the heroine, played by Ruth Roland, has been left in the flooded mine, and the villain, Randolph Gordon, has poured oil on the water and set fire to it.

Pathe Review, No. 11, in showing "What the Eye Misses," by Novagraph slow motion pictures, presents a series of ice skating views which are unrivaled in photography. There are many who often have marveled at the skill of ice experts on their knife-like runner of steel. Herein you may see just how the most amazing ice stunts are done.

The Harold Lloyd comedy, "Pistols Before Breakfast," has been characterized as "a rapid fire of explosive laughs." It is a brisk satire on the use of firearms in the motion picture, and the comedy spirit is admirably expressed by Lloyd and Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard.

The Story.

Nora Nola, the heroine of "The Final Closeup," is a poor shop girl who faints from the heat when there is a reporter near, is told to take a vacation. The reporter, Jimmie Norton, son of a millionaire, gets her address and sends her two hundred dollars for the vacation. She goes to a fashionable seaside hotel and is very unhappy until Jimmie happens to come to the same place as a baseball idol, and pays her some attention. He is recalled home because of family illness, at a time when Nora is accused of looting the bath houses, though there is no evidence against her. A jealous society girl attempts to plant evidence in Nora's bedroom, but is discovered by Nora and made to confess. Nora's own money, however, has been stolen, and she is forced by a cruel hotel proprietor, to wash dishes to pay for her keep. She overhears the plan of the real thief to rob the hotel safe and secretes herself there and catches him just as Jimmie happens to arrive with his father, saving thousands for the hotel and winning the heart of the millionaire father at the same time. She and Jimmie embrace in "the final closeup."

"Tangled Threads"

Bessie Barriscale and Ben Alexander Bring Stirring Realism to Robertson-Cole Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE creation of the character of Mrs. Wayne by Bessie Barriscale in the Robertson-Cole production, "Tangled Threads," distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, is one of the best examples of the dramatic art that the screen has presented. The role defined by the author and further enlarged upon by the star and her director, embodies the highest type of womanhood. The character of Mrs. Wayne wins the sympathy of the spectator in the opening scenes and holds it to the close of the picture. Ben Alexander is, as always, the genuine little boy, imparting to the role of "Sonny-Boy" the delightful characteristics of happy childhood.

The production as a whole has been skilfully directed. The numerous dramatic situations of the picture have been carefully handled. In other words the picture is an example of what can be done with an ordinary story in competent hands. Contrasting characters, such as the vamping Rita Kosloff, played effectively by Rosemary Theby; John Rutherford Wayne, played by Nigel Barrie, and Philip Northrop, played by Thomas Holding, are handled in such a way as to inspire disgust with the insincere and looser methods of life. Henry Kolker, as Doctor Macgregor, upholds the better type of manhood in a dignified manner. The picture is unusually strong in human interest.

The Story.

A rather unusual attribute of "Tangled Threads" is the fact that the story follows the lead of its title. It tells of how Mrs. John Rutherford Wayne, a particularly noble and lovable character is forsaken by her husband for Rita Kosloff, a Russian beauty of the fast set. A supposed friend of the family, Philip Northrop, assumes the duty of telling Mrs. Wayne of her husband's unfaithfulness, and also takes her to a cabaret to witness the truth of his statement. At the same time he takes advantage of her trust in himself to place a greater barrier between wife and husband. She has heard that when a man is too sure of a woman his interest in her lags; and when she asks Northrop to pretend love for her in the presence of her husband, in the hope of inciting a jealousy that will cause him to return to her, Northrop sets the stage to suit himself.

He invites her to his apartment under a false pretext of meeting some friends for a theatre party, and when his chauffeur brings Wayne to the apartment at Northrop's order, he grasps Mrs. Wayne in his arms and holds her there until her husband enters.

Glad of the chance to press a divorce suit, Wayne loses no time in doing so, and wins with it the custody of the little boy. Wayne marries the Russian and lives to rue it. Finally the child is taken sick, the second Mrs. Wayne refuses to care for him, and his own mother, now a nurse, is called in. The death of Rita on a joy ride with Northrop opens the way for a reconciliation of the Waynes.

First Miller Picture to Be Viewed in Two Weeks

THE first Charles Miller special, produced under the Charles Miller Productions, Inc., for release by Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, and vice-president of the Miller Company is completed and Director Miller and Albert Cowles, his assistant, are personally attending to the editing, cutting and assembling of the film which will be ready for a private review showing within the next two weeks. It will be shown in six reels.

For the portrayal of the principal roles in his first production for the Hall program of independent releases, Mr. Miller had the services of Herbert Rawlinson, Stuart Holmes, Florence Billings, Charles E. Stevenson, Warren Cooke, Vinton Friedley, Regina Quinn and Ernest Torrence —all known for work of character and finish in the screen's best productions. Edward Earle, who has served behind the camera for the screen's best directors, and who, in point of time, is one of the oldest cameramen for the silent drama, is responsible for the photography.

Adventure and romance are the predominating notes struck in the production. The story encircles eight principal characters. Standing out a little from the others is the character of Torrence Redmond, a descendant of an adventurous and romantic race, who seems predestined to be one or both through his life. The underhanded methods employed by an unscrupulous uncle to place a rich relative's grandson in disrepute, that he may acquire a fortune, gives Terrence Redmond his cue for a series of adventures and romantic exploits that run through the picture. Four fistic encounters between the hero and the villain serve as the four big punches of the picture.

Mr. Miller will announce the title for his first special next week, and says that he hopes to have his picture ready for a private showing within two weeks.

New Anita Stewart Film Announced.

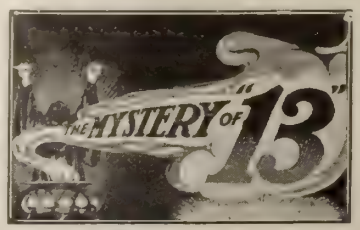
Louis B. Mayer has announced that the next de luxe production with Anita Stewart as the star will be "The Human Desire" in six reels. It will mark a complete change in theme, atmosphere and treatment from the three big Stewart plays already released. This production deals almost entirely with the poorer and middle class of people. Its theme is the overpowering impulse of every living being to propagate its kind.

While pure mother love is the dominating emotion of the play, there is no lack of thrills and tense situations. A striking scene depicts the demolition by lighting of a massive Italian convent. Then there is a most realistic shipwreck. The locale of the piece is Italy, which supplies some wonderful shots, and New York City. The picture will be released the latter part of June.

Bennison's "High Pockets" Is Best Western of Series

THE fifth and most powerful of the Western dramas in which Louis Bennison, the cowboy with the gun and smile that win, is "High Pockets," Betzwood picture soon to be released by Goldwyn. Those who have seen the production at the private showings it has been accorded, declare it the top-notcher of the series.

This latest picture is one on which neither time nor money was spared in the production. Its cost was more than any of the other Bennison films, while over three months was devoted to completing it. The photography is rich in Western scenic effects. Against the colorful background which has been created is the dashing life of the ranger.



Sunday Opening in New York a Help to Robertson-Cole

WITH many New York cities and towns taking advantage of the Sunday opening option law which was recently signed by Governor Smith and voting for Sunday exhibitions of motion pictures, an entirely new field has been opened to film distributors. Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors Mutual are taking the fullest advantage of this situation, and in many towns where, because the theatres had been booked solid by contracts, Sunday opening has enabled Exhibitors Mutual to break in with Robertson-Cole productions where heretofore they have never been shown.

Joe L. Merrick, assistant sales manager of Exhibitors Mutual, has just returned from a tour through upstate New York, looking over the Sunday opening situation, and his report has proved most gratifying to Robertson-Cole. Mr. Merrick also visited New England.

He reported that in the Albany territory nine towns have been opened since the Governor signed the local option bill allowing motion pictures to be shown on Sundays. Each one of these towns opened with a Robertson-Cole production.

In the city of Buffalo alone, Mr. Merrick said, out of sixty theatres he found that forty-two were at present playing Robertson-Cole attractions, a record which speaks highly of the efficiency of the Buffalo exchange of Exhibitors Mutual and of the drawing power of Robertson-Cole attractions.

The same conditions existing in upper New York state were in evidence in all the Eastern branches he visited, Mr. Merrick said.

"Conditions certainly were bright wherever I went. In spite of the approach of the summer season, I do not look for any diminishing of our activities. Robertson-Cole productions are building up a reputation for us that is the best bulwark against summer dullness."

Augustus Thomas Drama Deals with World Unrest

W. W. HODKINSON announces the completion of "The Volcano," starring Leah Baird, the second in Augustus Thomas' series of Harry Raver Four Star productions for Hodkinson distribution.

"The Volcano" suggests in its title the theme it deals with—that of a world unrest in which the seething mass of mankind, suppressed for centuries, is struggling to escape through the crater of chaos.

Mr. Thomas has chosen the lower East Side of New York for the locale of his play, because in that district are concentrated the forces of foreign propaganda directed from abroad, whose efforts to incite discontented native and foreign born elements in the population to anarchistic outbreaks, attacks on life and property, have engaged the attention of the United States Secret Service authorities during and since the war.

The production displays the long-haired emissaries of Russian communism at their work in the heart of New York's most crowded districts and brings out, through one of those skillfully woven love episodes for which Mr. Thomas' drama is famed, the subtle processes through which these paid propagandists work to influence American born elements among ill-paid and overworked classes. Augustus Thomas has gone close to the heart of a great human problem in the production.

The actual plot has to do with Ruth Carroll, a little schoolteacher of the lower East Side, whose grandfather, a Civil War veteran, is her sole guardian.

"Too Many Crooks"

Gladys Leslie Is a Clever Crook Vamp in Amusing Vitagraph Feature.

Reviewed by William J. Reilly.

THERE is a new lilt to the melody in Vitagraph's newest Gladys Leslie picture, "Too Many Crooks." It will please anyone who likes originality of story, and the originality-likers make up the overwhelming majority in any gathering. Gladys Leslie, who has had such soft Southern roles as "Miss Dulcie from Dixie," takes the part of a baby vamp in "Too Many Crooks." She is "Boston Fanny," one of a number of crook characters being studied by a society girl writer, and a little vamp, who, while out vamping, always takes such things as watches and tiepins, to remind her of the romance of the occasion.

Miss Leslie makes a decided success in her new personality, helped by a wickedly nice pair of eyes. She can take liberties with her eyes in this picture which would be out of place in her other productions, and she evidently welcomed the freedom of her new vamp role. Ralph Ince directed and injected some startling comedy incidents in an unusual way. Anders Randolf is hardly recognizable as Frisco Jimmy, premier burglar, while The Walrus, Benny the Chipmunk, and Percy are well flavored parts by George O'Donnell, Cecil Chichester, and John T. Wade.

The Story.

Charlotte Browning, a society girl anxious to write a real crook play, invites a number of notorious criminals to her home for a house party of indefinite length. This is the start of Vitagraph's feature, "Too Many Crooks." She secures the types for purposes of study through Bidwell Wright, supposed to be a highbrow criminal himself. Her "research" in character is continually broken up by such episodes as the garden party, at which Benny the Chipmunk picks the pockets of every male guest present.

The crooks all suppose that they are at the house for the purpose of forming an international family of thieves, headed by Charlotte and her father. Charlotte's father, an elderly gentleman, is vamped by Boston Fanny, a clever "con" woman, who takes all his cash and jewelry, besides his heart. The crooks employ their various talents throughout the neighborhood of Charlotte's home, and bring her the loot for division. She is finally compelled to tell them her purpose in inviting them, and, angered, they start reprisals on her father's property. Bidwell Wright saves the day, gets the crooks back to their haunts, and then reveals himself as a thoroughly honest lawyer, who is now ambitious to help in the completion of Charlotte's play.

Tell how she vamped a nice old gentleman and nearly married him. You can get a stir by advertising a play with an honest lawyer. Sketch the story briefly and play up the situation, which should get interest. If you want to use a teaser first try: "By (playing date) there will be too many crooks in this town. What shall we do about it. See announcement of mass meeting later." Run that three days, then show the connection.

"The Weaker Vessel"

Six-Reel Universal Subject Features Mary McLaren in Entertaining Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is a welcome flavor of originality in this Universal subject, entitled "The Weaker Vessel," written by Elmer Ellsworth. It has a very delightful human touch and some splendid humorous moments. At least three characters have been presented with rare skill, including Abby Hopkins by Mary McLaren, J. B. Hanks by Johnnie Cooke, and J. Booth Hunter by Thurston Hall.

The story moves off quietly, picturing the rather drab home life of the heroine, Abby Hopkins. She is the daughter of Matthew Hopkins, who runs a local newspaper at a loss, and is anxious to have the girl marry. John Mackay is also entitled to a word of praise for his lifelike picture of the father. The girl is practically pushed into a wedding with J. B. Hanks, who has already been twice married, and who assures Abby she is quite worthy of being his third wife.

The girl leaves him on the night of the wedding and goes to the city, where she becomes a waitress and meets a struggling actor, with whom she subsequently falls in love. None of the events are of the ordinary, obvious type, and this does much to carry the interest from beginning to end. The number is one of unusual merit.

Three Strategic Centers Sign for Vitagraph

SEATTLE, Denver and Utica are three strategic centers of population which now are supplied regularly with every production turned out by Vitagraph's two plants—the original Brooklyn studios and the ever more active West Coast institution at Hollywood.

Seattle was the first to sign, but hardly had it closed for complete Vitagraph service when Denver followed suit, with Utica a close third.

Vitagraph products always have gone strong in Seattle, all units included, but it remained for Von Herberg & Jensen to put on the final stamp of approval by signing up all the Alice Joyce pictures and also the Larry Semon comedies, thus practically completing the program.

The significance of this contract may be better appreciated when it is stated that Von Herberg & Jensen practically control Seattle, so far as motion pictures are concerned.

Pioneer Concern Signs Up.

Denver is put on the all-Vitagraph map through the enterprise of Brown & McGeehan. The contract just closed between the great pioneer picture producing concerns and these powerful managerial magnates of the Rocky Mountain metropolis insure the showing of the Vitagraph product, including the serious, the serial and the silly, so to speak, at the Isis, the Rivoli, the Strand and the Plaza—the nucleus of the Brown & McGeehan holdings.

The Brown & McGeehan contract increases the circulation of the Vitagraph product to a degree never before possible under shutout clauses in the contracts of certain rival producing concerns.

Utica Makes Radical Change.

A notable example of the evergrowing popularity of Vitagraph pictures is the action taken by the Majestic Theatre, of Utica, heretofore a combination vaudeville and picture house. Hogan Brothers, managers of this theatre, had ample opportunity to compare the relative merits of the various brands of pictures they exhibited during this long period. Therefore, Mr. Kendrick and the sales promotion department of Vitagraph were elated this week when one of their traveling representatives succeeded in signing up the Hogan Bros.' house as an all-Vitagraph first-run theatre with their abandonment of the combination policy.

Naturally, such a radical move carries with it the danger of jeopardizing a long established business founded on a certain policy. But Hogan Brothers closed the Vitagraph contract with every confidence in the world that their business standards would not only be maintained but would be increased to any degree their capacity permits.

Wallace Reid in One of O. Henry's Best Stories

WALLACE REID'S new Paramount picture, "You're Fired," which is scheduled for release June 8, promises to be one of the best pictures in which the star has ever appeared, for the story from which it is adapted ranks high in comedy, drama and action.

"You're Fired" is an adaptation of O. Henry's story entitled "The Halberdier of the Little Rheinschloss." The film title however, is more expressive of the story than the original. The hero of the picture, a young man who, since he belongs to the idle rich class, has never worked in his life, undertakes to earn his living for three months, in order to prove to his father-in-law to be that he is a worthy husband for the daughter.

Those who are familiar with the original story will remember that it ranks among the best of the author's work, and contains a great deal of dramatic suspense as well as unusual comedy twists. Slight changes have been made in the adaptation in order to strengthen the situations, but in general the story will be presented just as it was written. Clara G. Kennedy did the adaptation.

Wanda Hawley is Mr. Reid's leading woman. Others in the cast are Lillian Mason, Theodore Roberts, Henry Woodward and Raymond Hatton. The scenario was written by Edith Kennedy and James Cruze directed.

Five Mid-Summer Pictures Started by Metro on Coast

MAXWELL KARGER, Metro's director general of production, returned from New York last week to the Hollywood studios, Cal., where a number of midsummer productions await his attention, including one release each of five of the stars, Viola Dana, May Allison, Emmy Wehlen, Bert Lytell and Hale Hamilton.

All of these All Star Series offerings of Metro depend principally on their comedy merits with the exception of the new story for Viola Dana, "The Microbe," which, contrasted with the others, appears to be one of the heaviest five-reel dramas ever offered with this actress in the stellar role.

The order of release for these five plays has not yet been decided upon, but in order of their production, May Allison's Bolshevistic comedy, "Free," will be one of the first. "Free" is the name of the original short story by Wallace Irwin as published in the Saturday Evening Post, and adapted to the screen by George D. Baker.

Next in order to be completed should be Bert Lytell's comedy of jail and finance cleverly linked in "It's Easy to Make Money," from the original story of John H. Blackwood, and converted to the silent drama by Finis Fox. Edwin Carewe, who produced Mary E. Wilkins' (Freeman) "False Evidence" with Viola Dana, is guiding Mr. Lytell in this novel plot.

"A Favor for a Friend" is the name of the original story by Lieutenant-Adjutant Luther A. Reed, written especially by him for Emmy Wehlen, erstwhile musical comedy prima donna, whose last splendid performance was in Metro's "The Amateur Adventuress." Mr. Reed has adapted his own story to the screen, and John Ince with Arthur Martinelli at the camera, directs the star.

The comedy vein in the series is interrupted by the powerfully dramatic story of Viola Dana's "The Microbe," converted to the silent drama from Henry Altimus' short story published in Ainslee's Magazine for May, and which was secured by Metro.

The last of the midsummer releases stars Hale Hamilton, who, as an author-star, makes a bid with his own original story entitled "His Brother's Keeper." Hamilton will appear in a dual role.

Plan Cutouts for Warner Film.

Max Levey, manager of the Chicago branch of Exhibitors Mutual, is planning some unusual "stunts" on his own account, for the first Robertson-Cole Superior Picture, "The Man Who Turned White," starring H. B. Warner.

Levey is planning a set of lifesize cutouts in which Warner will be seen in Arabian garb and his face browned by the desert sun.

There will be a flasher concealed in the cutout, and every little while the light will flare up and the face of brown turn to pure white.

"The Haunted Bedroom"

Paramount Presents Enid Bennett in a Mystery Story of Fine Atmosphere and Strong Interest.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE spirit of romantic adventures, so dear to the heart of those who love a good story, is not only held but intensified in the picturing of the Paramount release, "The Haunted Bedroom." There is an abundance of storm effect, a ghostly atmosphere prevading the quaint old Southern house and interest is sustained by the superior play construction of C. Gardner Sullivan. To this rare combination of values is added the usual fine typing to be found in the picture supervised by Thomas H. Ince. The cast is flawless.

Enid Bennett is in a role that suits her. She not only appears to better advantage in the part of an intelligent American girl, but the opportunities afforded by such a role call out her spiritual resources. She is developing rapidly and shows it when she is given the right sort of characterization to interpret. The story is not emotionally intense, but it is picturesquely so, and holds attention so well that it may be put down as a true entertainment on any exhibitor's program.

The Story.

The haunted bedroom in the Paramount picture of that name, gets into the newspapers, and Betsy Thorne, New York Reporter, is sent to unravel the mystery of a man's strange disappearance there. On arrival at a railroad station in one of the Southern states, she learns from a conversation between the native sheriff and an imported detective, that reporters are barred from the house and grounds where the mystery has taken place. By good fortune, she comes upon a new maid sent down from Richmond, and so frightens the servant that she gains a chance to act in her place. She finds an extraordinary state of affairs, and is nearly terrified out of her senses the first night.

Hiding in the chapel room during the night, she sees a ghostly figure come from the grand organ. The house is roused by her screams when she flees from the room, and she is forbidden to go there again by the sister of the missing man. On the following night, during a storm which illumines the family graveyard, she is locked in her room, but she escapes by the window only to again see the ghostly figure in the graveyard.

She enlists the aid of an old colored man and both, badly scared, make an investigation which starts from a peculiar chord played on the organ. It is found that certain keys open a secret door in the organ and lead through a secret passage to a family tomb, where she confronts the ghost and solves a mystery which has baffled the detectives, laying bare the stratagem of two expert crooks and exonerating a young man falsely accused, in whom she has become deeply interested.

AN all English cast and English locale are employed in the Triangle adaptation of Oscar Wilde's famous drama, "Lady Windemere's Fan." The story of English society life is presented truthfully and attractively. This is one of the picture's strong points. The casting of the play for the picture production has been handled with infinite care. For instance Lord Lorton, one of Mrs. Erlynne's old flames, a fussy, good-natured, lovable type, the typical old-fashioned lady's man of the drawing rooms of more than a decade ago, is especially well done.

The obedient daughter of the Duchess of Berwick, who does little more than walk about and do exactly as "mamma" tells her, is so well impersonated that the screen character carries with it a note of satire for the social conventionalities of old England. Mrs. Erlynne, striving to guide the destiny of a daughter deserted by her in infancy, and Lady Windemere, the daughter, are both given graceful and appropriate portrayals. Lord Windemere and Lord Darlington, and also the Duchess of Berwick, are characters well presented. The production as a whole is well made and true to the ideals of English drama. It contains the elements of a good box office attraction.

The Story.

The story of "Lady Windemere's Fan" is a clever tale of English society. Mrs. Erlynne, a former social favorite who has sinned against polite society to the extent of leaving a husband whom she has believed to be unfaithful, and an infant daughter, years later takes a decisive step as a means of protecting her daughter, who is now Lady Windemere. Realizing that her daughter, young and beautiful, stands on the same unsteady social platform where she herself once stood, she determines to make a supreme effort to again enter the London set.

She appeals to Lord Windemere, who refuses at first to do anything further

Betzwood Wants Stories as Vehicles for Star

THE Betzwood Film Company, producers of Louis Bennison films, released through Goldwyn, is in the market for three big stories for its smiling cowboy star. Ira M. Lowry, director-in-chief for Betzwood, wants recognized book or stage stories, the bigger and more widely known the better. Stories that have made a reputation in book form or on the stage are desired at once for picturization.

The first series of Bennison productions now has been completed. Four—"Oh! Johnny!" "Sandy Burke," "Speedy Meade" and "The Road Called Straight"—have been released. Two are still to come—"Lord Jim" and "High Pockets." The latter has been set for nation-wide release on July 1. "Lord Jim" is to follow.

It is for the second series that Betzwood needs the new stories. Bennison is all ready to resume work in the big plant at Port Kennedy, Pa., as soon as suitable vehicles are found. It is announced that manuscripts intended for Bennison should be addressed to Mr. Lowry at the Philadelphia offices of the company in the Real Estate Trust Building.

Bennison is going ahead with a new picture contract, although the five large stage producers in New York have sought him to be starred in new fall productions. One of them is trying to arrange to have him open in September in a stage production, returning to Betzwood for his work before the camera as the need arises. It is possible this will be agreed to.

Allen Holubar Completes "The Right to Happiness"

WHAT has been pronounced by critics who have seen it as one of the most spectacular of the dramatic screen photoplays of the year has been completed at Universal City. It is the new Dorothy Phillips super-production directed by Allen Holubar.

Exhibitors are promised a picture of extraordinary interest, apart from its theme, in that the cast includes four of the members of the cast of "Heart of Humanity." They are Dorothy Phillips, William Stowell, Robert Anderson, and Margaret Mann.

"The Right to Happiness" was written by Holubar himself and put into continuity by the director and Olga Linek School.

This production was more than three months in the making and in the cast besides the four previously named are Hector Sarno, Henry Barrows, Winter Hall, Alma Bennett, and Stanhope Wheatcroft.

The scene of a terrible Russian pogrom is a feature of the drama which deals with American labor and the root of the Bolshevik propaganda. Hundreds of extras are cast as Bolsheviki and American workmen producing scenes that abound with realism.

"Too Many Crooks" Vitagraph's Next.

"Too Many Crooks," starring Gladys Leslie, and with Jean Paige prominent in the supporting cast, is announced as Vitagraph's impending star release. It will reach the screen June 16. Advance showings viewed this week at one of Vitagraph's home office projection rooms justify every favorable anticipation Leslie fans may harbor in regard to this production, say those who were present.

The play is based on a magazine story of the same name by E. J. Rath, which was published in All-Story Weekly. Ralph Ince is said to have scored a typical Ince triumph in the staging of the new production. Aside of Misses Leslie and Paige, there are seen in the cast Huntley Gordon, Anders Randolf, T. J. McCraine, James Dent, Cecil Chichester, George O'Donnell, John T. Wade and James Gaylore.

Morey in Virile Play of Northwest.

Harry T. Morey's "Beauty Proof" has been set for June 23. Mr. Morey in this story of the Canadian Northwest takes the part of Corporal Steele, a man and man-hunter attached to the mounted police of that region, and the picture, as is usual with Morey subjects, has been directed by Paul Scardon.

"Beauty Proof" as a document impressed the scenario staff of Vitagraph as an ideal Morey medium, being instinct with virility and the scenes being laid in God's own untrammeled country.

In support of Mr. Morey will be seen Betty Blythe, George Majeroni, Denton Vane, Robert Gaillard, Tenny Wright and Bernard Siegel.

The Dan Russells in Rainbow Comedies.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Russell, former vaudeville comedians, who have been working on the L-Ko lot for the past six months, will be featured shortly in a clever routine of comedy along situations devoid of slapstick episodes. Their comedies will be directed by William Watson, and they will be released under the Rainbow Comedy banner.

Famous Players Start Big Summer Production

MONDAY, June 2, marked the beginning of three big productions at the Famous Players-Lasky Studio in Hollywood. On that day Cecil B. De Mille took up the megaphone to direct for Artcraft the J. M. Barrie play, "The Admirable Crichton."

At the same time Bryant Washburn started work on his next Paramount picture, an adaptation of the George Broadhurst farce, "Why Smith Left Home." Donald Crisp is directing.

The third picture started Monday is "Huckleberry Finn," the Mark Twain classic which Julia Crawford Ivers put into scenario form. William D. Taylor, who directed Jack Pickford in "Tom Sawyer" and "Huck and Tom" for Paramount, is in charge of the new production. "Huckleberry Finn" must not be confused with "Huck and Tom," which was virtually a continuation of the "Tom Sawyer" picture.

Ethel Clayton Returns from Japan.

On June 9, William C. DeMille, who has just finished the production of "Peg o' My Heart," with Wanda Hawley in the title role, will take up the direction of Ethel Clayton, who is scheduled to return to Hollywood this week after a vacation trip to Japan to begin work on her second year's contract as a Paramount star. The picture to be started Monday is "Miss Hobbs," Jerome K. Jerome's play in which Annie Russell achieved one of the greatest successes of her career on the legitimate stage.

Wallace Reid, Paramount star, will also start Monday under the direction of James Cruze in "The Lottery Man," adapted from Rida Johnson Young's play in which Cyril Scott triumphed on Broadway several seasons ago.

Houdini Filming Mystery Play.

Immediately following the completion of "Told in the Hills," which will be within a few days, Major Robert Warwick, under direction of Hugh Ford, will start work on "In Missouri," one of Augustus Thomas' greatest dramas.

Meanwhile, Marguerite Clark is well along in "Widow by Proxy," under the direction of Walter Edwards at the Morosco Studio, and Houdini has a good start on his mystery picture written by A. B. Reeve and John Grey, and which Irvin Willat is directing at the Lasky Studio. Ann Forrest appears opposite Houdini as leading woman.

"Oh! You Women!" Packs Them In.

"Oh! You Women!" the John Emerson-Anita Loos-Paramount-Artcraft special, is meeting with success wherever it is being shown. Letters and telegrams are daily coming into the home office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at New York commenting on the hit the special is making.

C. W. Deibel, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, telegraphed to George Erdmann, of the Famous Players-Lasky office at Cleveland as follows:

"Congratulations on 'Oh! You Women!' One of the best films we have ever played. Packed them in."

than to loan her money to make the necessary fine appearance. Her daughter, in ignorance that her mother is even alive, listens readily to the gossip caused by Lord Windemere's frequent visits to the apartment of Mrs. Erlynne, who has finally won his sympathy, and accepts the attentions of Lord Darlington, an unscrupulous aristocrat. She is about to elope with him from his apartment, when Mrs. Erlynne steps into the breach.

On the unexpected arrival at Darlington's apartment of Lord Windemere and other members of his club, Lady Windemere disappears from view and leaves her fan in the chair. Mrs. Erlynne covers the situation by saying that the fan had been loaned to her, and that she had come to Darlington's apartment looking for Lord Lorton. The truth of the matter finally comes to light, and all parties are restored to the path of happiness.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Excellent Screen Adaptation of Oscar Wilde's Well Known Stage Success.

Capable Portrayal by an English Company of a Well Known English Stage Play, the Work of a Famous Author.

Interesting Story of English Society, Which Sparkles With Wit, and Is Alive With Clever Characterizations.

The Story of a Woman Who Sought to Save Her Daughter from The Social Trap into Which She Herself Had Fallen, and How a Fan Almost Brought Her Efforts to Naught.

Advertising Angles: Play up this production as a notable addition to the classics of the screen, but do not lay such emphasis upon the classical side that people get the idea that the play is not interesting. Tell that it is one of Oscar Wilde's best satires on English society life, and then play up the angle of the mother, outside the pale of the "best" society, who forces her way back to prevent her daughter from repeating her own errors of judgment. Make an especial appeal to literary societies and the better read portion of your clientele. You should be able to get a window hook-up with fans, but do not try to put this over with stunts. Make your bid on the fame of the play.

"Through the Toils"

Five-Reel World Picture Presents Montagu Love in Dual Character Role.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN this five-reel picture, "Through the Toils," Montagu Love has two parts, both that of novelists, one young and the other old. The plot carries a rather interesting bit of villainy on the part of the older novelist, who lures the younger into a love affair with his ward, for the sole purpose of breaking off the match and watching the lovers suffer. But in the end love triumphs, and the younger writer wins the girl.

The story, which was written by Koby Kohn, has the flavor of an old-fashioned novel. It proceeds in a narrative style until toward the close, when certain melodramatic moments occur. The love affair, in which Ellen Cassity makes an attractive heroine, seemed to lack a certain convincing element, which was necessary to bring out the full force of Moffat's diabolical plot. Montagu Love, as Moffat, was more satisfying than he was in the role of the lover, as he seemed to throw more real effort into portraying the first role.

The subject is one that skims the surface pretty lightly most of the time, but the story possesses considerable real interest.

The Story.

Noel Graham is a young novelist living in the village of Mondon. He has numerous pet animals, but seems to have small interest in the feminine sex. In the same village lives a veteran novelist, Lewis Moffat, whose forte has been writing impassioned love stories. One day Noel goes to the Moffat home in search of a lost puppy, and discovers that Moffat's ward, Rhona Allerton, had brought it with her.

Moffat, who is at the moment trying to write a new love story of the passionate type, conceives the diabolical scheme of bringing Noel and Rhona together as lovers and then tearing them apart, in order that he may analyze their suffering. The scheme works very well, for Noel succumbs readily to Rhona's beauty and soon gains her promise to marry him. But Moffat then seeks to arouse Noel's jealousy by introducing a rival into the affair, named Walter Tressler.

Moffat succeeds in separating the lovers, both of whom are broken-hearted over the situation. Moffat proceeds with his novel, and after Rhona has gone, induces Noel to help him. In the end Noel learns the truth from the butler, whose life he saves. He tears up the novel on which he helped Moffat work, declaring it to be untrue to life. Moffat dies, and later, Rhona returns and marries Noel.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Montagu Love in Dual Character Role of Two Novelists, The One Young, The Other Old.

Odd Photoplay in Which the Star Enacts the Roles of Both the Hero and the Designing Villain.

How a Novelist Deliberately Planned and Wrecked a Love Affair to Obtain Material for His Story, Only to Have the Tables Turned on Him in the End.

Advertising Angles: Play up Love in his dual role, and hinge a part of your appeal on his playing of the strongly contrasting parts, working such lines as: "Do you like Montague Love better as a young or an old man? See him play both ages and decide for yourself." For the story angle play up the cold-blooded elderly novelist, who deliberately plans to have two young people fall in love that he may study their sufferings when they are forced apart. This is a strong point that should make for interest.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, two six-sheets, two eight-sheets and one 24-sheet. Eight 8x11 black-and-white, eight 11x14 colored, and two 22x28 colored lobby displays. One two-column cut, two one-column cuts. Slides, press sheets and music cues.

Capellani Gets Film Rights to "A Damsel in Distress"

THE picture rights to "A Damsel in Distress," a story by P. G. Wodehouse now running serially in the Saturday Evening Post, have been acquired by the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc.

June Caprice and Creighton Hale will co-star in the film version of the story under the direction of George Archainbaud, while the production will be personally supervised by Albert Capellani. Philip Masi, recently discharged from the United States Aviation Corps, will assist Mr. Archainbaud in the direction of the production, while Lucien Tainguy, erstwhile cinematographer in the United States Signal Corps, will be responsible for the photography. Director Archainbaud is now engaged in assembling a supporting cast.

"A Damsel in Distress" is described as a light, frothy romance, plentifully seasoned with comedy complications and throwing some sharply barbed but good-humored shafts of satire at the English social fabric with its caste system. The action of the plot revolves around a young American playwright and a pretty, venturesome daughter of English nobility whom he rescues from the consequences of an indiscret escapade under cover of a London fog. Employing Yankee pluck, nerve and ingenuity, he attempts to span the social gulf between himself and the girl with whom he is in love, and meets with many highly amusing adventures before he attains his objective.

Advance Bookings Noted for New Fairbanks Film

ALTHOUGH United Artists' Corporation will not release its first production, a Douglas Fairbanks picture, until September, there is considerable advance write-up to date, with the actual release of the picture still many weeks off.

In addition to the theatres mentioned last week as having secured an early run of the Fairbanks picture others have been added to the list during the past few days. Messrs. Balaban and Katz were both in New York and arranged for a run of the production at their Riviera and Central Park theatres in Chicago. C. E. Beck has also acquired it for Chicago's Castle Theatre.

A. G. Talbot, managing director of the American Theatre in Denver, personally arranged for his run of the picture at the United Artists' Corporation offices in New York, and returned to Denver with the production scheduled for an early September showing at his house. H. F. Jans' Goldwyn Theatre in Newark, N. J., is one of the houses that have already secured the Fairbanks picture.

Montagu Love Changes to Comedy in New World Film

MONTAGU LOVE, having essayed all sorts of character parts, has started a new picture which bears the title of "Broadway Sinner." It will be directed by Harry O. Hoyt. In his new play Mr. Love will endeavor to show his versatility by delineating a comedy character. It may be of interest to exhibitors to know that when Mr. Love started out on his career as an actor in England he was originally cast for comedy types, and it was in this line of work that he won recognition as an artist of no mean ability. His first role in America was a comedy one. The story was written by Forrest Halsey.

George Bunny, a brother of the famous comedian, plays an important role in support of Mr. Love.

"Broadway Sinner" will be released on World program during the month of July.

"Our Teddy" Draws Most When Billed as Thriller

FOR the benefit of exhibitors who have booked or are planning to book "Our Teddy," the authorized Roosevelt picture, McClure Productions, Inc., has made a careful investigation of the methods used to date by different showmen throughout the country to put the picture over and of the results obtained in each case.

Statistics show conclusively that by far the biggest box office returns have rewarded exhibitors who have billed "Our Teddy" as a red-blooded movie drama and played up the romance and thrills in it. In every instance where an exhibitor put over a "stunt" with the picture he scored a huge success. The Brinkerhoff cartoon showing Roosevelt in action in several different fields has proven the best publicity aid used by exhibitors, because it shows at a glance the character of the picture and dispels any idea patrons may have that "Our Teddy" is a cut and dried biography.

In some conservative communities exhibitors are billing the picture as a motion picture biography of Theodore Roosevelt, and the prestige of the Colonel's name and the general excellence of the picture is putting it over. But the McClure analysis does not recommend this as the proper way to advertise the film in the majority of cases. Movie fans are human. They want action. The exhibitor who emphasizes the action in the play rather than its biographical quality is bound to attract the crowds.

Rothapfel Program Goes Big at the Park Theatre

THE Rothapfel Unit Program, now on its second week at the Park Theatre, continues to show to big business, despite the unprecedented hot spell that visited New York the first week of its run. The box-office reports have been so encouraging following the high praise from the New York daily and trade press, that Frank G. Hall, vice-president of Rothapfel Picture Corporation, who is handling the distribution of the Unit Program, has every confidence in its success throughout the country.

Harry P. Diggs, manager of the Park Theatre under Mr. Hall's summer lease, in commenting upon the Program's success during the first ten days of its run, said: "Mr. Hall, Mr. Rothapfel and myself entertained every expectation of success for the Unit at Park Theatre. I had heard that the Park was considered too far uptown to assure a successful run for motion picture entertainment as a special. Others may have found failure where success was expected, but I wish to state that despite all the 'bugaboos' attributed to the Park as a motion picture house, it has failed to live up to its reputation during the run of the Rothapfel Unit.

"It isn't the theatre or the location that governs the success or failure of a production—it is the picture and the service that is given. In the Rothapfel Program I think that Mr. Hall is giving to the public something new, something worth while and a form of entertainment that is artistry from introduction to final."

Hampton Film Reveals Aid of Author's Hand to Picture

WHEN exhibitors have seen Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners" converted into a motion picture they will still better understand what the participation of the author of a story in its screening and production means in the improvement of motion pictures. This subject is the first Benjamin B. Hampton production of Great Authors' Pictures, Inc.

"The Westerners" represents the joint attention of Mr. Hampton, Stewart Edward White, the author; Edward Sloman, the director, and a technical organization which has been in the making in California since December, an organization drilled to do big things intelligently and well.

Several years ago Mr. Hampton foresaw an evolution ahead in motion pictures. Out of a long-time friendship with Rex Beach there came into being Rex Beach Pictures, with Mr. Beach giving personal supervision to the production of his own stories. This company was a Benjamin B. Hampton creation.

Already Mr. White's "The Westerners" is ready for pre-release, and one of Mr. Churchill's biggest novels is ready to go into production.

Oscar Apfel Starts Second in Series of World Plays

HAVING finished "Phil-for-Short," with Evelyn Greeley as the star, his first production under his three years' contract with World Pictures, Oscar Apfel has started on his second, "Bringing Up Betty," a Charles Sarver story, with Miss Greeley in the stellar role.

Miss Greeley will have in her support Ben Johnson, one of the best actors on the "legitimate" stage. He appeared in a great number of Clyde Fitch's plays, having been a special favorite with this gifted author. He appeared under the management of Wagenhals and Kemper; Charles Frohman, with E. H. Sothern, supported Ethel Barrymore in several of her biggest dramatic successes.

ARGUS CRYSTAL BEAD SCREEN

THIS new type of screen, and the results it assures, cannot be classed with any other—it is entirely different, and better. The screen is made of tiny crystals which look like very small pearl beads. The beads absorb and reflect light from the projection machine in such a way as to give greatest depth of focus, color, realism and charm to the pictures. It eliminates "fade-away"; insures bright, clear pictures when viewed from almost any angle, and will make every seat in your house a good seat. The Argus Screen may be washed with warm water without streaking—it will last for years.

Use of the Argus Crystal Bead Screen in your theatre—making your reel life more real—will cause your patrons to appreciate the pictures more; secure favorable comment; the people will go to the "movies" more often; and they will prefer your theatre because of the better projection

While comparatively new, the Argus Crystal Bead Screen has already been installed in many high-class picture theatres. Usually an exhibitor will arrange for one after seeing the actual results in comparison with ordinary screens.

It is a wonderful screen, and offers you a wonderful opportunity to get much good free publicity, better attendance and more profit.

Be the first in your locality to adopt this progressive idea. It will pay you well. Just fill in and mail the coupon below for further information and details.

Just a few comments from exhibitors who are using the Argus Crystal Bead Screen:

"My patrons are unanimous in their praise of the clearness of my pictures. I consider the purchase of the Argus Screen the best investment I have ever made."

"Our electrical engineers tested this and several other screens and decided in favor of the Argus screen as being by far the best."

"I have tried quite a number of different curtains at all prices. In fact, this is the fifth curtain we have installed in our theatre, so you may realize that the best is none too good for our patrons. The Argus Screen is satisfactory in every respect."

"We installed an Argus Bead Screen six months ago and have since washed this screen with warm water and flushed it thoroughly with hose, and it is just as good today as when it was installed. We think it is the best screen that money can buy. Projection cannot be beat. Buying of this screen is money well spent."

"We cheerfully and heartily recommend the Argus Screen to the Moving Picture Exhibitors in general on account of its 80% more clear efficiency."

THE RIGHT KIND OF CARBONS FOR THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

The projectionist wants high-class carbons—the same as any man wants good tools to work with.

Give him the right kind of carbons and he gets the right results on the screen.

—He is not annoyed with continuous adjusting of the arc trying to correct troubles.

—No noise, no "ghosts," no uneven lighting helps to put the picture across in good style.

—With good projection he saves the reputation of the house—saves the carbons the longest—saves his temper.

That's what good carbons mean.

That's what the Columbia-Silvertip combination means on Direct Current projection.

And by the way, there's another mighty good combination on the market—for Alternating Current work—White A. C. Specials.

"The Real Show All Right"

"You've Got Us to the Life," Said "The Lost Battalion" Private

"That's the Argonne, all right," he said, as he looked at THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL's great "Lost Battalion" picture. "Say, you can almost hear Whittlesey telling the Hun to go to hell, can't you?"

The Ladies' Home Journal
THE FAMILY MAGAZINE OF AMERICA

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL CHARLES W. WHITTLESEY
308th Infantry: Pittsfield, Massachusetts

THERE are times when "Go to hell!" is excusable. The profane expression "Go to hell!" is excusable. The American people will not forget the story of Colonel Whittlesey and his "Lost Battalion." The incident will go down as one of the most honorable in our history. In the very heavy fighting in the region of the Argonne Forest, Colonel Whittlesey and 463 officers and men under his command were ordered to take an advanced position northeast of Binarville. Here they were surrounded by a superior force of the enemy, and were cut off from their division for five days, October 2 to 7, 1918. In spite of repeated efforts made to assist the party, including attempts to drop food from airplanes, no rations or other supplies reached Colonel Whittlesey's command during this time. On the fourth day Colonel Whittlesey received from the enemy a written proposal to surrender, which he rejected with the retort "Go to hell!" Although he and his men were suffering from hunger, were apparently at the mercy of the foe and half his command were either [illegible]. We hope that some day some American writer will make a book for boys out of this heroic episode. We can think of no story in our National annals more likely to inspire the hearts of youth.

A ROLL OF VALOR THAT STIRS THE BLOOD

NOT LONG AGO the Secretary of War was asked by one of the Government publicity committees to cable General Pershing and ask him if he would select one hundred typical stories of American heroism during the war. Some three weeks later, General Pershing cabled the Secretary that he had assembled his board of officers [illegible]

A hundred thousand dollars has just been spent by The Ladies' Home Journal in full-page newspaper advertisements throughout the nation, in which Lieutenant-Colonel Whittlesey and the Lost Battalion are featured big. The Journal prophesies that some American writer will make a book out of the heroic episode. It adds: "We can think of no story in our national annals more likely to inspire the hearts of youth."

THE MAC MANUS CORPORATION HONORABLY PROCLAIMS IT HAS ANTICIPATED THIS PROPHECY WITH AN AUTHENTIC PHOTOPLAY OF "THE LOST BATTALION." IT HAS MADE A LIVING BOOK IN WHICH LIEUTENANT-COLONEL WHITTLESEY AND MAJOR-GENERAL ALEXANDER AND SURVIVORS OF THE LOST BATTALION APPEAR IN PERSON, AND RE-ENACT THE MOST DRAMATIC CHAPTER OF THE GREAT WAR.

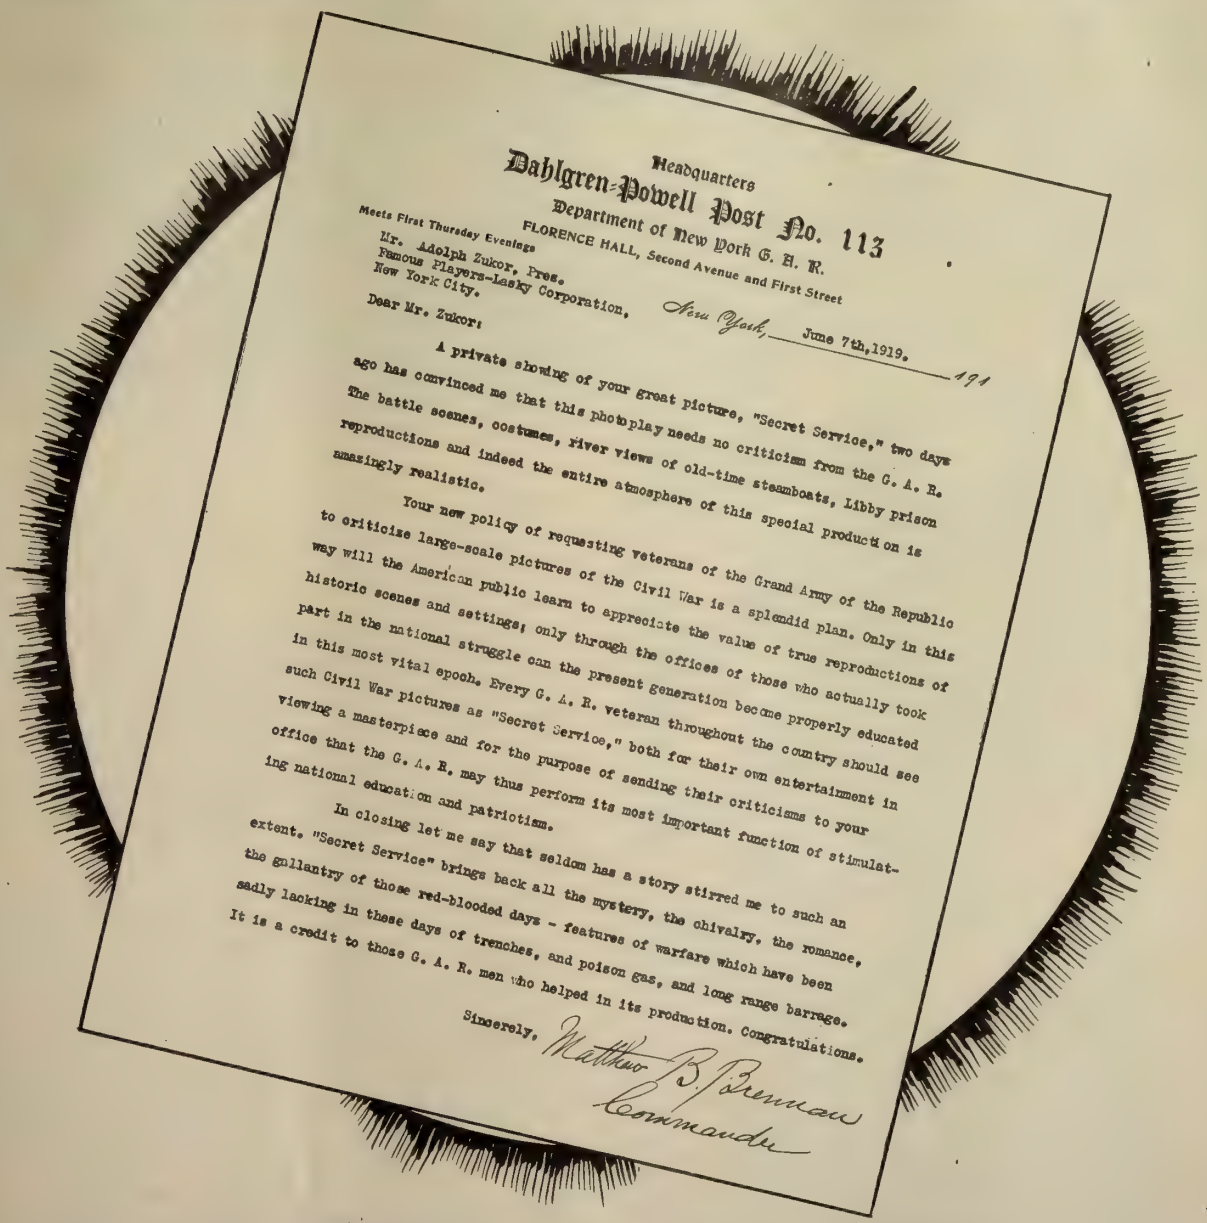
TWO MILLION COPIES

Here's what the G. A. R. thinks of "Secret Service"



Headquarters
Dahlgren-Powell Post No. 113
Department of New York G. A. R.
FLORENCE HALL, Second Avenue and First Street
Meets First Thursday Evenings

Mr. Adolph Zukor, Pres.
Famous Players-Lasky Corporation,
New York City.

New York, June 7th, 1919.

Dear Mr. Zukor:

A private showing of your great picture, "Secret Service," two days ago has convinced me that this photoplay needs no criticism from the G. A. R. The battle scenes, costumes, river views of old-time steamboats, Libby prison reproductions and indeed the entire atmosphere of this special production is amazingly realistic.

Your new policy of requesting veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic to criticise large-scale pictures of the Civil War is a splendid plan. Only in this way will the American public learn to appreciate the value of true reproductions of historic scenes and settings; only through the offices of those who actually took part in the national struggle can the present generation become properly educated in this most vital epoch. Every G. A. R. veteran throughout the country should see such Civil War pictures as "Secret Service," both for their own entertainment in viewing a masterpiece and for the purpose of sending their criticisms to your office that the G. A. R. may thus perform its most important function of stimulating national education and patriotism.

In closing let me say that seldom has a story stirred me to such an extent. "Secret Service" brings back all the mystery, the chivalry, the romance, the gallantry of those red-blooded days - features of warfare which have been sadly lacking in these days of trenches, and poison gas, and long range barrage. It is a credit to those G. A. R. men who helped in its production. Congratulations.

Sincerely,
Matthew B. Brennan

What would you do with motion pictures if you were master of the world?

IF all the millions of the world's wealth were stored in the next room, if all the natural scenery of five continents were within your reach—and the seven seas and all the ships that plough their waves?

You could then make motion pictures exactly as a superman would make them, difficulties vanishing at your touch, romance taking shape at your merest beckon.

Dramatists, directors, stars, technicians, scenery, oceans, forests, mountains, each fulfilling perfectly a function in your plan, would contribute to a photoplay that would be a masterpiece.

If you wanted an active volcano in your picture you would ask your geographers and geologists which was the most suitable one on the crust of the planet, and you would despatch an expedition across continents to "shoot" it.

If you wanted to show in one picture for a few moments an actual scene on the banks of the great, grey Ganges, you would cable your European representatives to journey to India and do the job.

The leasing of a tropic island, the renting of a railroad, the transplanting of ten thousand palm trees, would be trifles in your eyes. Always you would be offered the cream of the dramatic genius of the world first. That would be a foregone conclusion!

This is the sort of thing you might do if you were master of the world.

What will you say when we tell you that now—

after seven years—

Paramount-Artcraft has mobilized all the great geniuses of production: dramatists, directors, artists, technicians, and is equipped with world-wide facilities and unlimited resources to make for you, to be shown in your theatre, exactly the kind of motion pictures you would make if you were master of the world.

Great power carries with it great responsibility. We owe it to you and to all humanity to make this great influence contribute solely to the good and the harmony and the entertainment of the world.

Wholesome American families and their neighbors on all Continents may place implicit trust in the character of any picture marked Paramount-Artcraft.

Tremendous Changes are Impending in the Art of the Screen

So far you have noted in all the better theatres that Paramount-Artcraft has produced the best pictures of all kinds. You have noted in the great national magazines and newspapers, that Paramount-Artcraft has focussed the attention of people everywhere upon those better pictures.

These two facts have created a world-appreciation of the sheer importance of motion pictures in quickening the life of the community.

The broadening of this appreciation of motion pictures, with the natural result—finer theatres, more comfortable seating, better projection and better presentation generally—and [illegible] in fifty cities but in more than nine thousand theatres—is the direct result of Paramount-Artcraft today.

All this Makes Possible the Next Great Step in the Industry

You are about to become the deciding factor in the success of a new and audacious producing and distributing policy.

You are to decide by your presence at the showing of every one of these new Paramount-Artcraft Pictures that you want a big picture not just three or four times a year, but a big picture twice or three times a week!

Every Paramount-Artcraft Picture will be a big picture and each one will prosper on its own merit, quite apart from what is called program or series booking.

You may not understand fully the nature of this development by the written explanation. You surely will WHEN YOU SEE IT—IN THE SCREEN.

The progress of the motion picture industry is marked by the progress of [illegible] CORPORATION

Its resources are unlimited!

Its relationships, like the screen itself, are international.

There is not a single difficulty in the making of any kind of motion picture that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has not the mental resource and material resources to overcome.

But all this concentration of dramatic skill, directing talent, star-genius, costly equipment and producing audacity would avail nothing without the immense administrative and distributing organization behind it, built up by years of earnest and tenacious effort.

You—if you only knew it—ARE master of the motion picture world.

And being master, enjoy the fruits of mastery, as visible in every one of the coming season's Paramount-Artcraft Pictures.

"YOU" in this case means your patrons

IT isn't only the exhibitor who is interested in the new plans of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the production and distribution of better pictures than have ever been made before. The public wants to know about it.

Through its national advertising, Famous Players-Lasky has taught the public to go to the theatre that shows Paramount-Artcraft Pictures—and says so! It has educated millions of picture goers, new and old. This successful advertising policy is based on the evident fact that these best pictures must be sold to the public as well as to the exhibitor.

So the announcement of this great step forward in motion picture production comes with interest already aroused on the part of the great picture public.

The full page advertisement, reproduced on the opposite page will appear in the biggest newspapers in the United States. It is addressed to the public—your public—and it tells the story of this great new step.

It does more—it brings that great public to your theatre, if you are an exhibitor of Paramount-Artcraft pictures. It gives you a chance to say, "Here is the place where these greatest pictures will be shown." It enforces the fact that the public is a partner in the success of this great project. It shows your patrons that responsibility rests on them to make their finest entertainment a continued success, by patronizing your theatre.

It paves the way for your greater prestige and greater success as an exhibitor of the best pictures made.

POSTER advertising, part of the life-blood of every motion picture theatre's existence, is not a hap-hazard business.

¶ The demand for good locations is bigger than ever before in the history of advertising.

¶ Exhibitors should be warned against their inability to secure adequate and serviceable space. There is real danger of good locations being taken up by national advertising.

¶ It is therefore suggested that exhibitors look to their bill-posting program at once and, if possible, arrange for their locations by yearly contract. It is only thus that the best locations may be kept free for the exhibitor's use through the year.

¶ It is a matter that is worth the immediate attention of every wide-awake exhibitor.

¶ Take it up with your local bill-poster. He's the man who can tell you all about it.

HUMANITY"

Dorothy Phillips

"I have never heard such a one-sided verdict since being in the game, the practically unanimous opinion being — 'Wonderful' — 'great' — 'the best picture I have ever seen.'"

A. T. CONNARD, Taft, Cal.

"Our price of admission was increased 100% on this production but the records for Winnipeg were smashed to smithereens."

PROVINCE THEATRE, Winnipeg.

"Packing the theatre with 'The Heart of Humanity.' This is the sixth day and business has increased daily. Audiences went wild over the picture. Cannot recommend it too highly. Expect to play return engagements."

REGENT THEATRE, Wichita.

"'The Heart of Humanity' is the biggest and greatest picture we have ever run, 'Birth of a Nation' not excepted."

PALACE, Maryville, Ga.

"It has been my great pleasure to have played Allen Holubar's masterpiece, 'The Heart of Humanity,' at this theatre for one solid week. Innumerable patrons came to see the picture three and four times. I personally believe that it is the greatest picture that mortal mind has yet conceived."

B. A. GOODMAN, Kinema, Fresno.

PONDEROSA ASINORA

By Carl Laemmle, President
Universal Film Manufacturing Company

THIS is about the time of year when most of us producers rear up on our hind legs and solemnly make announcements about what we are going to do next to startle the trade.

We take ourselves very seriously in these announcements. We try to see which one can get the longest, driest story in the trade papers. Then we take it for granted that the exhibitor will read each and every one of these long-winded announcements and run his theatre accordingly.

As a matter of fact there's a good deal of bunk in all this. The producers and distributors can announce their plans till they're white in the gills, but this won't alter the fact that when it comes down to brass tacks it is the exhibitor who decides! And he decides not according to our publicity, but solely and simply ON THE MERITS OF OUR PICTURES.

I have been asked several times by trade paper editors just what the Universal plans to do for the coming seasons. I've given them a list of things, but here is the low-down on the situation:

The Universal will try its infernalest to lick everybody else on the little matter of quality. If we succeed in this we won't have to worry about new or old style selling plans. If we don't deliver the kind of pictures that make a profit for the exhibitor all the fancy schemes on earth won't help us!

The only reason on earth why some of the distributing concerns have changed their booking schemes is because you exhibitors have forced them to do so. And the only reason why you could succeed in forcing them to do so is because the market has been over-supplied with pictures, thus giving you your choice of many and enabling you to reject what you did not like.

In other words, conditions have now reached the point where the quality of the picture is all that really counts. And, by all the great and small gods, that is what the Universal eats, drinks and sleeps! That's the basis we are glad to take our stand on.

The Universal and Jewel have been booking pictures on their individual merits so long that when a trade paper man asks what I think of the "open market booking" I don't know whether to laugh or cry.

Don't judge all of us producers and distributors harshly when we indulge in ponderous asininity in our trade-paper announcements. It's only an old habit that we have not outgrown. As for the Universal, we've just closed the best year we ever lived, and it's due solely to the fact that the quality of our product has improved. We're going to break our necks trying to do still better for fall. That's the truth of the situation. All else is ponderosa asinora! (Irish slang for "bunk.")

MABEL NORMAND

IN

WHEN DOCTORS DISAGREE

By Anna Brand Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger

"When Doctors Disagree" is now a landmark in screen history. In that riotous comedy and in "Sis Hopkins" and "The Pest" Mabel Normand is playing to more business nightly than any screen comedienne has ever played to in any three productions in the history of the motion picture.

There's a reason. "When Doctors Disagree" is a picture built for your theatre. It is a product of experience.

From you and your box office, as it registered on the Normand comedies, Goldwyn has learned just the sort of broad, racy 60-miles-an-hour fun your patrons want in a Normand play. It knows the kind of part and picture that the American people want for Mabel Normand.

"When Doctors Disagree" is that kind of a Normand picture.

That is why the Chicago Evening Post described it as all Miss Normand's greatest successes rolled into one with something added.

We spent royally for Defense

Let us now spend wisely for Construction

We need good films. Make them.

We need buildings—home—public and industrial. Construct them.

We need more railway trackage and equipment. Produce them.

We need homesteads for many of our returning soldiers. Drain the swamp and irrigate the arid lands and they will "blossom like the rose."

Possibly 50 million, certainly not less than 30 million horsepower, is literally running to waste in our streams. We need industrial power. Harness the streams. Build the dams, construct the power plants.

The immediate carrying out of only a fraction of our needs in these lines of production will put to work every idle man and every idle dollar.

The purchasing power of the labor and capital thus profitably employed, plus normal demand, plus foreign demand, will keep every wheel turning, every factor of commerce busy at top speed.

Every dollar wisely expended on productive lands, buildings, railways, good roads, power plants and similar undertakings is an addition to the permanent wealth and industrial progress of the nation.

JAMES TO DIRECT FOX ADVERTISING

After Four Years with Metro, Severs Connection on June 23 to Assume Worldwide Activities

ANNOUNCEMENT is made at the offices of Fox Film Corporation that Arthur James, at present publicity and advertising director of the Metro Pictures Corporation, and who has been identified with the growth of that organization since its beginning four years ago, will on June 23, take over the general direction of the publicity and advertising of the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. James will make his headquarters in New York.

Under the new arrangement Mr. James will reorganize the publicity forces, which now extends around the world. In addition to representatives in London and continental cities there will be staff members in the principal centers of the United States who will be in direct contact with local publicity conditions, giving the Fox exhibitors the advantage of expert-on-the-ground service. The publicity policy in its entirety will not be announced until July 1.

Before entering the motion picture field Mr. James was a newspaperman with a long experience in New York and other cities. He was for seven years city editor of the New York Morning Telegraph and also was Sunday editor of that paper, and prior to this connection was in charge of the publicity department of the Hampton Advertising Agency, directing the publicity for the American Tobacco Company, the Du Pont Powder Company and other large businesses.

He left the Morning Telegraph to reorganize the publicity department of the Mutual Film Corporation, and after fourteen months joined Metro, where he attracted national attention with a series of successful campaigns. He was the first to utilize the color insert in the field and has been instrumental in raising advertising standards in the industry.

"We welcome Mr. James in the Fox organization and regard him as the leading exponent of motion picture advertising and publicity," said Winifred R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox.

"Mr. James will direct the general advertising campaign of the Fox Film Corporation in America, as well as throughout all foreign countries in which we have branches."

It is announced at the Metro offices that John E. D. Meador, who has been Mr. James' chief assistant, will for the present have charge of advertising and publicity.

Hubbard to Assist Chester.

Vitagraph announces the appointment of Lucien Hubbard as associate editor, to assist Editor George Randolph Chester in the preparation of scripts.

Mr. Hubbard was formerly a well-known free lance writer, and later was connected with World, Pathe, and Universal. Before entering the motion picture field he served on the staffs of newspapers in New York and elsewhere, resigning as night city editor of the New York Tribune to enter motion pictures.

Bill to Repeal Film Taxes Introduced Into Congress

EFFORTS to have the admission and film rental taxes repealed have been inaugurated in Congress, with the introduction by Representative Mason, of Illinois, of a resolution providing for the elimination of those two sections from the revenue law.

Arthur James
Publicity Director, who moves from Metro to Fox.

The repeal of the admission tax, it has been declared, would be one of the most popular actions Congress could take. This tax hits nearly everyone in the country, and is a constant reminder to the public of the fact that the war, although practically over, is by no means paid for. It is now the aim of Congress to remove from sight those taxes which are most obvious, and collect necessary funds, instead, by means of other taxes, which will hit the public indirectly and will not be a constant reminder that we have yet a great sum to pay to cover the expenses of the conflict.

Collections of admission taxes are a great burden and inconvenience to the exhibitors, who would welcome their repeal. During the month of March, the theatres of the country collected from their patrons and paid to the Government $5,186,875.33. This was three-quarters of a million more than the collections for March, 1918, which totaled $4,392,201.91, and brought the total for the first three-quarters of the current year to $35,026,949.99.

The film rental tax, also, has been the subject of much dissatisfaction, and representatives of the exhibitors have been in Washington several times for the purpose of securing the elimination of this section.

Revenue Commissioner Issues Tax Regulations

REGULATIONS surrounding the collection and payment of taxes on the leasing or licensing of motion picture films have just been issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Returns of taxes under this section are to be made monthly, on or before the last day of the month succeeding that for which the return covers, and are to be accompanied by the amount of the tax due. The first return, covering the tax accruing on and after May 1, is to be made on or before June 30.

This tax, while reported and paid by the lessor or licensor, may be passed on to the exhibitor, and provision is made for the assumption by the exhibitor of the tax accruing on films shown under contracts made prior to December 6, 1918.

The regulations point out that the charging of the tax to the exhibitor by the distributor is not prohibited. "Where the tax is charged to the exhibitor as a separate item, the tax will be based upon the amount charged for the use of the film only, and not upon the combined total including the tax," it is declared. "Where, however, a lessor does not separately bill the tax to the exhibitor, but advances his price to cover the tax, the tax must be measured by the full amount of such advanced price."

New York City Censorship Killed Hard by Aldermen

THE ordinance placing arbitrary censorship power in the hands of the New York City commissioner of licenses was defeated by the Board of Aldermen, on June 10. The committee on general welfare reported against the bill and the Board killed the measure by adopting the committee's report without discussion.

The motion picture industry had been given a chance to protest against the ordinance at a hearing before the general welfare committee on May 28. Labor leaders and representatives of all branches of the industry were present to protest strongly against the measure which had been introduced by Alderman Augustus Wise.

DALLAS FACES WALK-OUT OF OPERATORS

Projectionists Vote to Strike in Sympathy with Building Trades—Await Word from New York

EVERY picture theatre in Dallas may have to shut down during June as the result of Dallas Moving Picture Operators Union, Local 249, voting a sympathetic strike. The union voted to strike pending permission from their International at New York.

The moving picture operators in Dallas struck two years ago when they organized. They were supported by the Central Labor Council. Now the building trades crafts have walked out and they are calling on the operators, who have no grievance against their present working conditions, to reciprocate.

The local, which has about forty members, at their meeting June 3 voted to strike and wired their International for permission to walk out.

The moving picture show operators in Dallas have to undergo a drastic examination by a city board. As a man passes the examination he is unionized. The operators claim to be unionized 100 per cent., and unless operators are brought in from out of town the shows will have to close.

The striking building crafts have made a special point to get the operators pledged to a sympathetic strike. They realize that the walking off the job by carpenters, painters, bricklayers, etc., does not strike home to the general public since it affects them only indirectly. They believe that striking at the public through depriving them of amusements would bring home to them emphatically the fact that a strike involving 3,000 men is already on.

The Dallas strike has been on for ten weeks, one union after another going out slowly in sympathy with the strikers. It is hoped that arbitration may adjust the differences before the International of the operators gives permission to walk out.

The strike is firstly directed against the Dallas Light and Power Company and the Texas Power and Light Company through an initial strike of their linemen. The claim is made that operators should not use power to operate their machines which is declared an unfair product. Not Dallas alone, but a score of towns in North Texas using Texas Power and Light Company current, will be affected should the Dallas operators finally leave their booths.

Canadian Showmen's League Buys First American Film

THE Canadian Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, Limited, has bought the first picture to be booked through the new exchange system.

J. C. Brady, president, accompanied by Mr. Scott, secretary and treasurer, spent several days in New York a week ago sizing up the situation and meeting and interviewing film men. Upon their return a second committee was appointed, consisting of Frederic Guest, vice president, and Mr. Alexander, director, to visit New York and select the initial offering. After much reviewing, Messrs. Guest and Alexander selected David Graham Phillips' story, "The Grain of Dust," produced by Crest Pictures.

It is the purpose of the association to select and buy features on the American market to supply picture theatres through their own exhibitor-run exchanges to be known as the Canadian Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Limited. Branches will be opened in the principal cities of the entire Dominion.

James M. Lackaye, Noted Character Actor, Dies

JAMES M. LACKAYE, whose character portrayals won him a name on the screen, died June 8 at the Broad Street Hospital, New York City, after a few days' illness. The funeral was held at St. Lawrence's Church, Forty-ninth street and Eighth avenue, on June 10.

James M. Lackaye.

As a character actor Mr. Lackaye achieved many successes. His first distinct performance was in "Way Down East." He played for a number of years in "York State Folks" and later won distinction in "The Gentleman from Mississippi' and "The High Cost of Living."

From 1913 Mr. Lackaye had been adding to his laurels by his work in the moving pictures, chiefly in Vitagraph productions. "That Suit at Ten" and "In the Shadow" were two of his earliest pictures. He had not, however, been active in the silent drama for the last two years. Mr. Lackaye's brother, Wilton Lackaye, is well known for his fine work on the stage.

James M. Lackaye was born in Washington, D. C., in 1867. He was a member of the Lambs, Friars, and Actors' Guild and the Green Room Club.

Eastland Theatre Boom Approximates Oil Rush

EASTLAND, TEXAS, is taking on the character of a moving picture boom not much different from the oil rush which is getting the state on the front page every day. Eastland has the Princess Theatre and Edanbill Airdrome now running, but opened up the New Majestic on June 2 and will give the Alhambra, a new house, its premier on July 1. Ground was broken recently for the Connellee Theatre, which will seat 1,450 and cost $75,000, and which will be thrown open to the public in the fall.

The Alhambra is owned by Tom C. Harrell and represents an investment of $35,000. It seats 650 and advertises a $10,000 Wurlitzer as one of its features. F. K. Davis is the manager.

The New Majestic, a 600-seat house, is owned by James Carrigien. The upper floors of the theatre building are occupied by a hotel, also owned by Mr. Carrigien.

"The best house between Fort Worth and El Paso" is the line applied to the Connellee. Five days of the week will be devoted to pictures exclusively and the remaining running day to legitimate attractions. Inclines to the balcony, upholstered seats and a pipe organ are merely a few of the many modern items in the Connellee's construction.

Alice Brady Closes Most Successful Stage Season

ALICE BRADY closed her notably successful engagement in "Forever After" at the Playhouse, New York, June 7. Opening in Owen Davis' romance at the Central Theatre on September 9 last, Miss Brady played there for fifteen weeks, and on December 23 moved to the Playhouse, where she has continued with substantial success one of the longest runs enjoyed by any attraction in a season remarkable for lengthy engagements.

When the final curtain descended on "Forever After," Miss Brady had finished her 39th week and 344th performance in that play.

Next season, Miss Brady will appear in "Forever After" on tour. She will be seen in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, and possibly other cities.

Griffith Confers with Methodists in Columbus

THE support of the motion picture world, as represented by D. W. Griffith, was assured the Methodist Centenary Celebration at a conference in Columbus recently, the celebration being represented by Dr. S. Earl Taylor, of New York, director general of the Centenary Celebration; Dr. J. E. Crowther, of Seattle; Dr. Fred Fisher, of New York, and Dr. C. F. Reisner, of New York.

Mr. Griffith, in addition to promising to make a film of all important features of the Centenary Celebration, strongly urged the use of motion pictures in the advancement of religious work. He spoke strongly of the possibilities of the motion picture under proper supervision being made to carry a religious message further than any known form of communication.

Dr. Taylor made the statement that "we want pictures that talk the universal language. I believe the passage of peace and good will should be preached to the world through pictures."

PATHE CHIEF HONORED BY FRIENDS

Head of Great Distributing House Recipient of Praise and Presents at Notable Gathering at Astor—Tells of Profit Sharing Plans to Be Worked Out on His Return

THREE score of the associates and friends of Charles Pathe, Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, assembled at the Hotel Astor on the evening of June 10 to do honor to the head of the house of Pathe. The occasion took the form of an unusually elaborate dinner. Present were all of the Pathe officials in the East, including Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager, and Lewis Inerarity, secretary, who officiated as toastmaster.

During the evening Louis Landry, assistant general manager, speaking on behalf of the heads of departments of the home office, presented Mr. Pathe with a cigarette case and match holder. A bit later W. E. Raynor, New York branch manager, representing the thirty branch managers, presented the head of the firm with a twelve-piece Tiffany office set. Mr. Pathe in each instance made a short response, thanking the givers.

Keenan Pays Tribute to Pathe.

The speakers included Frank Keenan, whose productions are being released through Pathe Exchange and who paid a warm tribute to the organization and its head; Albert Capellani, the producer-director, who started his career with Mr. Pathe; Leonce Perret, who in America has achieved new fame as a director; Gilson Willets, author and scenario manager; George Blaisdell, editor of the Moving Picture World; George T. Ames, manager of the Pathe Philadelphia branch, who declared his intention immediately of taking up the study of French, and Fred C. Quimby, director of exchanges.

Others present were Louis Meyer, president of the Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc.; Charles Gatchell, editor of Photoplay Magazine; Robert Welsh, managing editor of Motion Picture News, and E. K. Gillette, secretary and treasurer of the same journal; E. C. Lynch, George B. Seitz, Bertram Milhauser, G. L. Chanier, Adolphe Osso, Louis G. Gasnier, A. S. Abeles, W. S. Wesslin, L. S. Diamond, J. W. Kyle, E. O. Brooks, Elmer R. Pearson, Harry Lewis, J. T. Richards, C. W. Allers, J. Humm, G. A. Gray, F. V. Bruner, P. A. Parsons, Randolph Lewis, H. E. Genet, Jack Alicoate of Wid's, W. C. Smith, Fred Chapin, A. E. Rousseau, P. Barbier, L. E. Franconi, E. Cohen, F. R. Clarke, A. Miller, A. Adatte, C. J. Fischer, A. Werkmesiter C. Julien, C. A. Brady and G. Bardet.

Mr. Pathe's Speech Arouses Enthusiasm.

There was marked applause when, in the course of Mr. Pathe's address, announcement was made of the probability that the chief executives of the various departments of the concern's activities would be the beneficiaries of a profit-sharing arrangement, the details to be worked out following Mr. Pathe's return to this country in October. Mr. Pathe spoke in part as follows:

"Before leaving America I have called you all together on this occasion to express to you the satisfaction I have felt during my stay among you. The success of the business of Pathe Exchange is due in a large degree to its manager, Mr. Brunet, who has risen with the organization. He can and ought to serve as an example to you all—who are his immediate colleagues—of what any one who gives himself up entirely to his profession and his work may aspire to.

"For my part I have never known anyone who really succeeded in life without doing more work daily than he was really obliged to by the strict limitation of the duty imposed on him by his engagements. Sooner or later the man or woman who follows this program is observed in a business house and the extended knowledge which is thus forcibly acquired is made use of and paid for as it deserves to be.

"The business of Pathe Exchange which has considerably increased during the past year, is still capable of considerable increase. Its future is in your hands and for this reason it is my desire to interest you in a large measure in its welfare.

Talks of Profit-Sharing Plan.

"I intend to return to New York next October and purpose studying with Mr. Brunet an arrangement with the intention of making all the immediate colleagues of the administrative, industrial and commercial management share in the profits of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Brunet and myself hope, in this way, to increase the personal activity of each of you, as well as your good will and cohesion of which I have already noticed the satisfactory condition.

"I extend my thanks to all and sincerely wish that I will be among you soon again."

Mr. Brunet Reviews Work of Firm.

"I am truly happy to welcome you all here on this most pleasant occasion," said Mr. Brunet. "Most pleasant because it means to many of us a renewal of personal association with Mr. Pathe, who has been for a long time away from us and can now be with us but for a little while. Most pleasant, too, since he has found us of the clan of the Red Rooster flourishing and filled with energy, optimism and ambition. Most pleasant, too, because the Pathe Exchange has achieved heights from which we may see far; and wide as is the field of our vision, we can see nothing but the success which will surely crown our efforts.

"We are glad to personally do this honor to Mr. Pathe when we remember that his own Government has signally honored him and that the Governors of most of the states of the union have also honored him with their personal messages of appreciation. Gentlemen, it means something to be associated with Mr. Pathe.

"Little time is given tonight for speeches, so I cannot say the many things I would like to say. You, friends of the house of Pathe, will be glad to know that I have expressed to Mr. Pathe for you and myself the belief that we have in common—that prosperous as he finds us on this all too brief visit of his, it is as nothing compared to the lustiness which he will find we possess when he comes to these shores again. Doing well, we propose to do better. That is the spirit which has always animated Mr. Pathe and it has brought him far. And the same spirit will take us far also!

"Gentlemen, I propose that we drink to the honor of Mr. Pathe."

There were distributed among the diners copies of congratulatory messages received from practically every Governor in the United States.

FRANKLYN FARNUM IN SHORT WESTERNS

Will Appear in a Series of Twenty-six Two Reel Dramas To Be Made by Canyon Pictures Corporation

WITH Jack Weinberg as president and Joseph M. Goldstein as secretary and treasurer, the Canyon Pictures Corporation has just been formed, and announces the signing of Franklyn Farnum for a long period.

The first productions in which Mr. Farnum will be starred will be a series of twenty-six two-reel Western dramas which will be produced in the Selig Studios in Los Angeles and which will be distributed on a state rights basis, one being released every two weeks.

Several of the stories for these pictures have already been selected and are from the pens of B. M. Bowers, Bertram Sinclair and other well known authors. Mr. Farnum is at present appearing in Albert Capellani productions released through Pathe. It is announced, however, that his contract expires on June 20, and work will be started at an early date on the first production which it is expected will be ready for release on August 1.

Completing Preliminary Plans.

The preliminary arrangements are rapidly being made, director and supporting company will be selected within a few days and will be announced shortly.

Franklyn Farnum is well known to picture patrons, having appeared on the screen for a number of years with several companies, including Bluebird and Universal. He also was a headliner in vaudeville for several months.

Mr. Weinberg announces that no expense will be spared in the production of these two-reel Western dramas so as to make them thoroughly in keeping with up-to-date standards. In fact they will be in reality short features, produced in the same elaborate manner so far as settings, casts, and other details are concerned as are required for productions of greater length. In addition, they will be filled with punch and action, and the two-reel length will enable them to eliminate any unnecessary footage and to stick closely to the pertinant points of the story.

An extensive and comprehensive exploitation campaign will be carried on in connection with this series of productions.

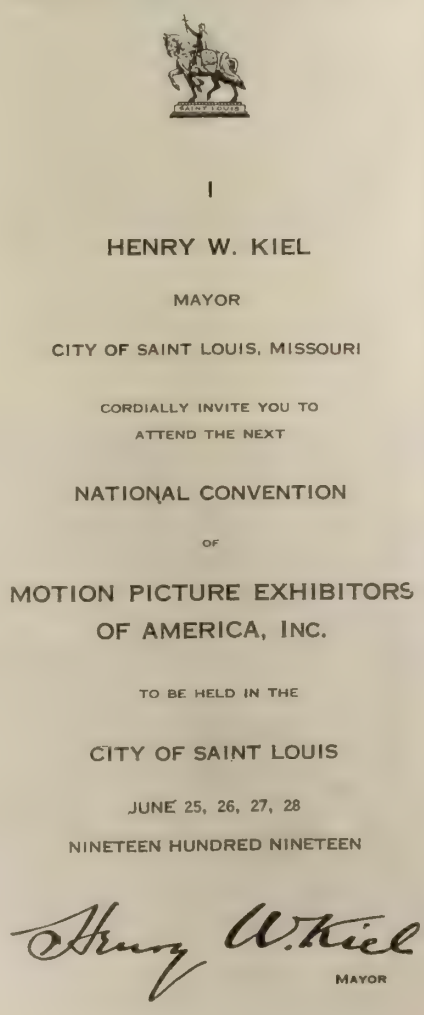
Doughboys See Own Parade Gratis at Dayton Theatre

THE returning of large numbers of enlisted men to their home cities has offered many a motion picture manager the opportunity to institute some practice that reflects credit on his house. One of these managers, Mark M. Gates, of the Dayton Theatre, Dayton, established himself in immediate favor with the soldiers of the 148th Division when it landed in its home city recently.

Mr. Gates' show for the particular day was built around the Paramount picture "Pettigrew's Girl," a picture which he knew appealed particularly well to those in his audience who had worn the uniform. And this is the way that Mr. Gates got busy and got results. There was a parade of the division immediately on its arrival in the city, and the first thing that Mr. Gates did was to rush local cameramen to points of vantage along its route and secure pictures of the boys marching by.

These were printed and developed the same day, and shortly after the parade Mr. Gates threw open the doors of his theatre to the soldiers. They were admitted absolutely free of charge. They saw themselves in triumphant procession on the screen and afterwards witnessed the showing of "Pettgrew's Girl." Five hundred soldiers availed themselves of Mr. Gates' generous offer and were loud in their appreciation of the entertainment he offered them.

While the monetary results of Mr. Gates' scheme may not have been immediate, the publicity he derived for his theatre, the feature picture and himself, was in such quantity that its value could not be overestimated. The local newspapers were eager to print anything about the returning troops and Mr. Gates' activities brought him prominent position in the various newspapers published in Dayton.



Overrule Censor's Order on "Fit to Win" Film

JUDGE LEARNED HAND in the United States District Court has granted a decree in favor of Isaac Silverman against John F. Gilchrist, commissioner of licenses, enjoining the latter from interfering with the exhibition of the film entitled "Fit to Win."

The controversy over the exhibition of the film which was originally produced by the War Department for exhibition at the army cantonments with the object of uplifting the morals of the men in the service commenced when the film was shown at the Grand Opera House in Brooklyn several weeks ago. Commissioner Gilchrist decided that the film was unfit for public exhibition and threatened to revoke the licenses held by proprietors of motion picture theatres if they exhibited the film.

Silverman, who acquired the national rights to exhibit the film, then filed a suit against Commissioner Gilchrist to enjoin him from interfering with the exhibition of the film. Judge Augustus N. Hand and Judge Julius M. Mayer decided in Silverman's favor when applications were made for preliminary injunctions after suggestions for the elimination of certain scenes were complied with, but still Commissioner Gilchrist refused to sanction the exhibition of the film.

When the case came on for trial on the merits Judge Learned Hand after hearing the testimony and viewing the film in court decided that there is nothing in the film to warrant its suppression and granted a decree for the plaintiff.

Reggie Hammerstein Promoted.

Another one of the well-known Hammerstein family has joined the Selznick organization. Reggie Hammerstein, son of the late William Hammerstein, well known theatrical man, entered the purchasing department of the Selznick company a few days ago. It is now announced that he has been advanced to assistant to Frank Hampton, business manager of the company.

Mr. Hammerstein is grandson of Oscar Hammerstein and a cousin of Elaine Hammerstein, who is now a Selznick star. He has only recently returned from the front, where he served with the army for over a year.

EXCHANGES AND SHOWMEN AT ODDS

Cincinnati Exhibitors and Distributors Both Deliver Ultimatums on Question of Prepayment System for All Films Delivered—Theatre Owners Organizing

SEVERAL weeks ago the Associated Film Exchange of Cincinnati, sent out pamphlets containing an entire new set of rules which would govern all business transactions beginning June 15. This was done without consulting the exhibitors whom the edict concerned, and their advice was not asked before the drafting of the rules. As soon as these letters were received a meeting of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League was called and it was decided that some of the conditions that were to be imposed were decidedly unfair.

Make Stringent Rules.

One of the rules states that film will not be shipped to theatres unless a check is received before the date of shipment. This the managers contend is not lawful, according to the contracts sent out by the exchanges. In defense of the rules hereby printed the exchange managers state that the fly-by-night exhibitor is the one to blame for the new rules. One manager made the statement that there were not over fifteen exhibitors in the state of Ohio who did not pay their bills, thus making it hard on the majority.

In answer to this assertion the theatre men members of the local League say that the only remaining "fly-by-night" members of the industry are the exchange managers themselves—their average life in the Cincinnati exchanges being from fifteen to thirty weeks.

Average Manager's Term Short.

The grievance committee of the local league claims that all its time is taken up with complaints that must be filed with exchanges, the fault of which generally lies with a discharged manager. The new manager, of course, almost invariably straightens out the difficulties caused by his predecessor, but not without spending time—valuable time—in solving who was to blame and it is generally found that the discharged employe was at fault.

Executives of the League also say that the men who have drawn up the present set of rules will not be the men who will execute them, since most of them, according to the law of averages, either will have been discharged or retired for a position with another firm—perhaps not operating in the immediate territory. Cincinnati exhibitors feel the executive offices of the prominent distributing companies should take over these matters, since they are the only authorities who rightfully can make rules for the future of their exchanges.

League Wants Credit Allowed.

The League also is responsible for the statement that it was the exhibitor who raised the theatre from a storeroom to the present institution devoted to the silent art, some of which represent an investment of millions of dollars. The smallest theatre does not have an investment of under $5,000, and although the theatre managers are not clamoring for credit they think that in case a check accidentally does not arrive before the shipment of film their theatre should not be dark for the day or week as the case might be.

For instance, in the last week eleven members of the Miami Valley League did not receive their invoices in time to make payment before shipment of film. Had the exchanges for this reason not sent film, the number of disappointments are plain. In addition to this, eight members of the League did not receive the films that they had booked in advance and were forced to get a show elsewhere than the exchange from which their show had been booked in advance.

Exhibitors Rapidly Uniting.

In view of the above mentioned facts the members in session decided that the Exchange managers made a great mistake by not co-operating with their body before drafting the new rules. It is known that the Miami League is now one of the most powerful in the United States, including as it does members from over fifteen counties surrounding Dayton, with a total membership of 116. A reply to their answer is awaited by officers of the League here. In the meantime organization is rapidly taking effect. About forty exhibitors from territory in the northern part of the state have wired evidence of their desire to join the Miami League. It is the purpose of the local League to include the entire state of Ohio in its organization when the time is ripe, which will make it a model body of its kind.

Demands of Exchanges.

The announcement of the exchange managers follows:

To All Exhibitors Served by Cincinnati Exchanges:

In order to protect the responsible from the irresponsible and careless exhibitor, the enclosed rules have been established and will be observed by all exhibitors in dealing with the undersigned exchanges who are members of this Association, commencing with service for Sunday, June 15, 1919.

We desire particularly to call your attention to Rule No. 2 calling for payment positively in advance, which is in accordance with the terms of your various contracts. If for any reason you overlook making remittance for film, telegraph the money so that your show can be shipped, as no film service will be shipped C. O. D. for your use on June 15 or thereafter.

In view of the insistence by this association that the exhibitors agree to and abide by the inclosed rules, each member of the association hereby agrees to give special attention to the conduct of the detailed end of his business, so that every exhibitor will certainly receive as nearly perfect service as is possible. Consequently any complaint from an exhibitor will receive prompt attention and be immediately corrected.

No other communication will go forward to you from any of the exchanges in connection with these rules. If any further information is desired, address the secretary at the Chamber of Commerce.

ASSOCIATED FILM EXCHANGE MANAGERS.
C. V. Zimmerman, Secretary and General Consul.

Exhibitors' Reply.

The league replied in the following letter:

Dayton, Ohio, June 6, 1919.
Associated Film Exchange Managers, Cincinnati, Ohio.

A few days ago the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Dayton, Ohio, and vicinity, all of whom are members of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, received a printed form in which, without any agreement on the part of the exhibitors, there is an attempt made by you to foist upon such exhibitors a requirement that the remittance for each film shall be in the hands of the film company from whom the film is to come prior to the shipment. In case this is not done, the film will not be shipped C. O. D. This suggested requirement is presumed to take effect beginning June 15.

The Miami Valley Exhibitors' League desires to notify you a..d each one of the members of your association with whom any member of this league deals that contracts are not one sided. You have no doubt overlooked the fact that contracts have been entered into which require the shipment of films. These contracts are in writing and set among other things that the distributor shall deliver during the period as set forth during the contract motion pictures therein described, also that it is understood by both parties that all agreements which are a part of the contract are set out and set forth in writing therein.

In addition to the requirement that the film company shall ship and the further requirement that all the terms of the contract are set in the contract and nothing else binds either party, the exhibitor in most cases has deposited with the film company moneys to cover at least the last two weeks of the contract.

In some of the contracts provision is made for a C. O. D. In none of the contracts is there any provision or right given to film companies to do that which they are attempting to do in the printed notices sent out.

The members of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League desire to notify individually and collectively the Associated Film Exchange managers that they will stand upon their contract rights and insist upon the films being shipped and not held up as suggested in the notice. Not only will the members of this league insist on their contract rights, but if the films are not sent and a consequent damage arises, the members so damaged will hold the film company failing to live up to its contract for full compensation and damage for the loss that may be sustained.

Your exchange managers seem to overlook not only contracts, but methods of enforcing these contracts as provided in same. You require exhibitors to deposit money to protect your film companies—the contracts provide a method of cancellation. It is a simple matter for your film companies to enforce the terms of the contract and avoid losses. There are comparatively few careless exhibitors; proportionately we do not hesitate to say that there are less careless, irresponsible exhibitors than there are film companies, and the film companies, under their contracts, have every opportunity to protect themselves.

Time and again not only have the film companies failed to get their films to the exhibitors in time when paid for, but have oftentimes shipped films that are in very bad condition. Again, the bills fail to reach exhibitors, through no fault of the exhibitor. A number of members of your association know that they have been notified frequently to get their bills to exhibitors in Dayton and vicinity in time, and notwithstanding this notification have failed to do so. Members of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League are ready and willing to pay their bills and live up to their contracts; they desire to do what is fair and right, and expect the same action on the part of the Associated Film Exchange Managers. If there are any of the exhibitors who are not living up to their contracts and paying their bills promptly, we will do what we can to assist you, and your film companies can readily protect themselves by cancellation of contracts and by C. O. D. at the time of this cancellation taking effect.

We write this letter setting out the facts fully, for we have our contract rights and do not intend that they shall be thrown overboard.

Yours very truly,
THE MIAMI VALLEY EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE.
By JOHN SIEFERT, President.
A. F. KINZELER, Secretary.

Exhibitors Protest Against C. O. D. Shipment.

Exhibitors and exchange managers in the Omaha territory are waging a hot battle over a new policy of the Omaha Film Board of Trade, in sending all unpaid-for film C. O. D. even to the largest houses. The larger exhibitors declare they will cancel rather than be "clubbed" by the exchanges, and the exchange managers are politely explaining they are forced to the step as a measure to protect the responsible and businesslike exhibitors. They say the C. O. D. plan and other rules adopted by the board are in no way different from the contracts which the exhibitors have already signed. Exchange managers admit having received a large number of cancellations, but they are confident the exhibitors will not insist on canceling when they learn the same rule has been adopted by all the exchanges.

Rabanus Joins Triangle at New Haven.

Mr. Eschmann, manager of the World Exchange, was selected to fill the unexpired term of F. S. Meyer as chairman of the legislative committee. Mr. Meyer has gone to Chicago to take up his new duties with the home office of the American Film Company.

GRIFFITH CONVERTS THE CRITICS

Director of "Broken Blossoms" Admits That He Built Better Than He Knew; He Also Has the Satisfaction of Receiving Praise from a Heretofore Hostile Source

By Edward Weitzel

ONE secret of D. W. Griffith's success is his open mind. When he is wrong he admits it without hesitation and smiles pleasantly the while. When Karl K. Kitchen interviewed him for the New York World just before he came East to put on "Broken Blossoms" at the George M. Cohan Theatre the famous director was credited with the following:

"There have been only two pictures that have made money at the $2 scale—'The Birth of a Nation' and 'Hearts of the World,' both of which I happened to produce. Whether the public would again pay $2 to see another spectacle is extremely doubtful; and without the spectacle, no matter how remarkable the story or the actors, the $2 scale isn't worth discussing. I am not a prophet, and in the motion picture business almost anything is possible. So I do not say that the two-dollar movie will not figure in the future, but there is none in sight at present."

What "Broken Blossoms" Will Accomplish.

Sitting in his office in the Longacre Building one day last week D. W. Griffith remarked:

"'Broken Blossoms' will do more for the moving picture than was accomplished by 'The Birth of a Nation.' I didn't recognize this when the picture was finished, but since coming to New York and putting the matter to the test it is plainly evident. I did not think that a simple story told in picture form and running only an hour and a half would take such a firm hold on the public, but the opening night at the George M. Cohan Theatre showed how little a man can guess the amusement business. Out West they preferred 'True Heart Susie.' Here in New York we have had a number of the more critical sort of amusement seekers in to see 'Broken Blossoms' three and four times, and the house has been sold out every performance."

"So the public does not put the spectacle first after all, Mr. Griffith?"

"It certainly looks like it," was the reply.

"Please explain in what way 'Broken Blossoms' will benefit the moving picture."

"It will help to classify it. There clearly is a demand for a form of screen drama that will attract a class of patrons that do not care for the regulation program. The price of admission does not weigh in the matter at all. This portion of the public is now paying $3 to see 'Broken Blossoms,' and it is fair to suppose that it will keep on paying the same price for what it wants. It is related closely to the public which attends such stage productions as the Barrymores in 'The Jest,' and its support will enable photoplays of the right kind to enjoy long runs at high prices, regardless of how much or how little the photoplays cost to produce."

Smilingly Accepts Criticism.

It is told of D. W. Griffith that when one of the biggest scenes in "Intolerance" was ready to be photographed word was brought to him that the engine which hurled the stones during the assault of the army of Cyrus on the walls of Babylon had broken down and must be repaired. Everything else was in readiness. The thousands of men and women were in their positions, the caldrons of oil lighted, and delay meant a serious expense. The situation would have driven most directors into a justifiable rage.

"How long will it take to fix the catapult?" asked Mr. Griffith.

"Half an hour," he was informed.

"Go ahead," was all he said, and it was said calmly. When the engine was fixed work was resumed on the scene as though nothing had happened. In the same unperturbed spirit he listens to criticism of himself and his pictures.

Upon asking for an opinion from his interviewer on one of his productions

David Wark Griffith
Whose "Broken Blossoms" makes epoch as did "Birth of a Nation."

and being told that its one fault was its length he exhibited no resentment, but replied smilingly: "That is said generally of my pictures."

Such frankness leads naturally to a question that has always seemed an important one to the writer of this article. Mr. Griffith had said that he did not think pictures should be restricted as to length. The development of character was the essential thing, and time should be taken to do this thoroughly.

"The moving picture," he concluded, "is becoming more and more like a story by Dickens. Not 'The Tale of Two Cities,' which is drama first of all; but like 'David Copperfield.'"

At this point the interviewer put his question to the man who has rivaled the best features of the English novelist in his screen version of "Broken Blossoms."

Two Forms of Screen Fiction.

"Have you ever thought, Mr. Griffith, that there are two forms of screen fiction—the photodrama and the photonovel?"

The director took his time before replying. It was evident that he was turning the matter over carefully.

"No, I never have," he said finally; "but it is a good idea."

"Would not the general acceptance of this fact enlarge the scope of the picture?" he was asked.

"Very much so," was his reply. "Like every other form of art the screen is bound to develop the specialist, who will be known for his particular brand of picture."

"At present," he was reminded, "directors, in most cases, have no clearly defined school of their own. They see some new thing applied successfully to the making of a photoplay and they introduce it into their next picture without stopping to find out if it belongs there. Your invention of the cut-back has been abused more times than it has been properly used by the men who have introduced it into their own work."

"We all have a great deal to learn about this profession of ours," remarked Mr. Griffith. "An entertainment which is completed at one sitting is not like a book which can be put down when the reader pleases and picked up again when he is ready to resume his reading, and it is this which has lead to the preference for the straightaway story of the same form of construction as that used in 'Broken Blossoms.'"

"And helps to make it a photodrama, Mr. Griffith. It is tragic in theme and true drama in the technical sense because none of the situations is stretched beyond the convincing point. Fifteen minutes of padding, no matter how skilful the character drawing, would have weakened the grip of your story. Your finish brings it to a perfect climax; and you never lose the mood, which is another way of saying that everything in your picture belongs there."

At the end of this speech the interviewer felt he had taken full advantage of Mr. Griffith's open mind and refrained from expressing any more of his own convictions on the subject under discussion.

Converting the Critics.

A number of clippings from Boston and Chicago dailies were lying on Mr. Griffith's desk. He picked one up and glanced it over. It was a notice on "Broken Blossoms" from the Boston Evening Transcript.

"The critic on this paper," the director remarked, "has never before written a review of a moving picture. He is known all over New England for the intellectual quality and candor of his criticism of stage plays. Here is a bit from his first notice of a photoplay, a form of art he has always refused to accept:

"'With this new film Mr. Griffith has excelled himself. In the Chinese blue, already noted—that as an aureole about the pictured prologue in China and about the poetized scenes in Cheng-Huan's attic—he has added at least one color to the resources of the screen. In those pictures, moreover, he has attained a new softness of outline, a new play of light and shadow, a new subtlety and fineness of suggestion that are to photography as an artistry, whether on film or plate. Even in the black and white that records the rest of the photoplay he often seems to shade up and down the scale from a sepia background, while crude, hardness of line and contrast steadily diminishes. None the less every personage in "Broken Blossoms" is individually and clearly characterized upon the screen.'."

A Voice from Chicago.

"Another critic who is not noted for overpraising the photoplay—Mr. Charles Collins, of the Chicago Evening Post—has joined the ranks of the converts," said Director Griffith, handing his caller the clipping.

Part of the Collins review reads as follows:

"Mr. Griffith's 'Broken Blossoms,' now at the Illinois Theatre, is the motion picture that converts dramatic critics to whom the cinema is anathema into film fanatics. Mr. Darnton, of the New York World, for example, was seduced by it into total abandonment of a stern vow of silence on the subject of the photoplay, and Mr. Parker, of the Boston Transcript, went to the exhibition to scoff and remained to write three columns of praise. Decidedly there must be something potent in 'Broken Blossoms' if it causes such strong men as these to change their journalistic religion. . . .The thing is top-notch in movie-making; it deserves to be called a classic example of the art of narrative through cinematography."

The hurried appearance of one of Mr. Griffith's managers with the information that it was time to catch the train for the West brought an hour and a half interview to a close, and the interviewer was left to glance over a remarkable collection of "Broken Blossoms" reviews from the daily papers of Boston, Chicago and Philadelphia. Such universal high praise has never before been given a screen production.

Philipp Studios Being Renovated.

The studios of the Adolf Philipp Film Corporation located at 11 East Fourteenth street, New York, which are being entirely renovated and modernized under the personal direction of the technical director, Robert Nicholls, formerly with D. W. Griffith, Douglas Fairbanks, and Famous Players, are nearing completion.

An entirely new electric light plant has been installed, and the studios are equipped with the new automatic Excelsior photo lamp. Mr. Philipp, who will direct all productions, is now busily engaged in selecting the cast for the first picture. The Philipp corporation will produce five-reel features and two-reel comedies.

APPEAL GRANTED IN MANNERS SUIT

Author of "Peg O' My Heart" Has Chance to Contest Decision Which Denied Him Film Rights to Play

J. HARTLEY MANNERS has been granted a petition by the United States Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari bringing up on appeal his case against Oliver Morosco involving certain motion picture rights in the play "Peg O' My Heart."

This is one of the most important copyright cases which has been before the Supreme Court for some years. It involves the question whether the screen rights to the play "Peg O' My Heart," written by J. Hartley Manners, were transferred together with the theatrical rights under a contract entered into on January 12, 1912, between Mr. Manners and Mr. Morosco. The court is called upon to interpret the words "to produce, perform and represent." Suit was filed in the Federal Court for the Southern District of New York on August 26, 1918, and resulted in a decree dismissing the bill on its merits on December 9, 1918. An appeal was taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, which affirmed the decree on April 17, 1919, Judge Ward dissenting on the question of the transfer of the moving picture rights.

The question presented is as follows:

1. Whether a license contract to "produce, perform and represent" a dramatic work, which contract contained provisions relating to "theatrical seasons;" for the payment of royalties on gross weekly box office receipts; for the production of the "play" in first class theatres and on the road with a competent and satisfactory "company," and with a particular prominent actress in the title role; for rehearsals and production under the author's direction; providing that there should be no alterations, eliminations or additions made in the play without the approval of the author; for its release to stock theatres in the event of its failure in New York—all terms applicable to the spoken drama, but not to moving pictures—and which is silent as to any transfer of moving picture rights, nevertheless conveyed those rights from the author to the licensee?

2. Whether the contract gave a license in perpetuity or for a limited time only?

Similar Contracts Involved.

In the brief in support of the petition for a writ of certiorari, counsel for the petitioners take the ground that it should be granted for three main reasons, first, its public character and great importance because a large number of similar contracts involving large amounts of money are involved; second, because of the absence of uniformity in the decisions of the lower courts; and third, because copyright cases usually establish principles of wide application and a final decision of the questions presented will tend to prevent future litigation.

Stress Importance of Films.

"The marvelous development of the moving picture industry has rendered of enormous value the screen rights in modern dramatic compositions," says the brief. "They concern numerous authors and producers throughout the country under outstanding contracts entered into for oral production by living actors and without any reference to moving picture representation. Whether such screen rights passed from the author to the producer is of the greatest consequence to a large number of persons.

Court Decisions Conflict.

"A conflict between the decisions of the Federal courts and between them and the decisions of the state courts exists on the principal questions presented. Furthermore, the courts of England have expressed a view contrary to that of the Circuit Court of Appeals in the present case. A contract similar to the one in this case, therefore, entered into in England, would not carry moving picture rights, while the contract here, under the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, would carry such rights to the producer."

Counsel for the petitioner are former Judge Walter C. Noyes and David Gerber, of New York, and William J. Hughes, of Washington.

Ward Visits Brother in New York.

W. D. Ward, manager of the Detroit Universal exchange, made a hurried visit to New York last week to see his brother, Elmer, who had just arrived on the hospital ship Mercy, from Italy, and is quartered in Embarkation hospital No. 3. Mr. Ward said he found him receiving the best of care and slowly recuperating.

Elmer Ward was a member of the 332nd division in Italy, the only American soldiers sent to that country.

Sennett to Strike New Note.

E. M. Asher, personal representative of Mack Sennett, arrived in New York from Los Angeles the early part of the week. Mr. Asher brings word from the Sennett studios that the comedy king is about to launch into the production of a film to include pathos besides the usual quantity of Sennett hilarity.

EVERY PICTURE NEEDS GOOD MUSIC

Belief in This Has Induced Leader Robert Cuscaden to Develop Elaborate System for Selecting Motifs Not Only to Suit Each Picture, but Also Each Actor

By Guy Leavitt

ARBITRARY reading as to tempo and dynamic signs are as worthless in motion picture playing as are academic musicians who have no real interest in moving pictures, according to Robert Cuscaden, orchestra leader at the Muse Theatre, Omaha, and rated as one of the best violinists of the Middle West.

Mr. Cuscaden leads his orchestra in the evening. During the day he wanders around to the other motion picture houses, getting an idea here, another there, and above all, satisfying his tremendous liking for moving pictures. He advances some decidedly new ideas along the lines of playing for moving pictures, one of the most striking being that each star has a particular bit of music that fits him or her, and that this bit should form the theme back of that star's acting.

Day of Baton Rapping Is Past.

"First, attention should be called, I think, to synchronizing the musical settings and the change of scene—for instance, stopping one piece in three flats, and at once jumping into another in three sharps," says Mr. Cuscaden. "The value of related keys is a wonderful thing to learn. Or the musical setting may be changed gradually. Do not make it necessary to break off in the middle of a phrase to fit a new scene. Have an understanding with the operator as to the rapidity of projection.

"I direct my orchestra with lights, operated by my foot. One light means to change to the next piece. Two flashes means to revert to the theme piece. The day of the orchestra leader who raps with his baton and breaks off the phrase in the middle, to leap into the next scene, is past.

"Needless to say, every musician should have an absolute knowledge of the contents of each composition. He should know that piece; he should know exactly what impression he wishes to convey in the use of every note he plays. The musical library for the picture theatre should be extensive; it should cover every phase of human emotion, and it should be kept constantly growing.

Original Theory Enunciated.

"Every screen star has an individual personality. The psychology of every such personality can be expressed by one particular piece of music better than by any other. For instance, to my mind, I think 'When You Are Truly Mine' expresses to perfection the psychology of Mae Marsh. I always resort to that piece somewhere in a Mae Marsh picture, and it fits, it makes no difference what picture she is playing.

"I do not think it is in the slightest degree beneath the musical director to resort to tricks in orchestra settings. I believe tricks show a rare appreciation of the possibilities in motion picture music. For instance, I find the greatest impression can sometimes be made by suddenly stopping—while the picture goes on. In comedy, everybody knows the value of trick playing there.

"Music Makes or Breaks Picture."

"Then, I would urge upon every musician interested in promoting the art of motion picture music the necessity of taking every performance seriously. It makes no difference if a picture is rotten. The patrons come, seriously and earnestly intending to see a picture. If you play through the rotten picture seriously three or four times, and then decide that because it is a rotten picture it is unnecessary to take such pains with your music, then you are not only doing an injustice to the picture, but you are doing an injustice to yourself and to your house.

"Music is the searchlight which may show up the weak points and the strong points in a picture; but it also can be made to cover up the weak points or the strong points. See a picture without music, and you will miss many things which the music shows to you. Everybody knows that. A clever orchestra can cover up the weaknesses in a picture. A clever orchestra can emphasize the strong points in a picture. A strong orchestra can make or break a picture.

Music Intensifies Dramatic Values.

"I like to think of the music interest in a picture as of an oration. The orator who does not know his business will start out in loud, bombastic fashion, and within ten minutes the interest of his audience is lagging. The orator who knows what he is about will start out calmly, quietly, and will keep steadily progressing until he reaches the climax, when he will drive home his points with all the vigor and eloquence at his command. Every picture should have this tendency, to grow toward a climax. The music can accentuate this tendency; it can increase the tensity, and at the climax it can emphasize those scenes in a way that is remarkable to the unitiated.

"But what I believe is one of the most important features of photoplay music is that the music should always be subordinate to the screen picture interest. People come to your house to see, not hear; to satisfy the sense of sight, not of hearing. Your music is merely to aid their seeing. It is an unobtruding stimulus to their imaginations.

Says Pictures Have "Rhythm."

"Every screen action, every emotion portrayed on the screen, vibrates with a distinct and a certain rhythm. The clever director will recognize that rhythm; he will find it, and express it in music.

"All music should seem as if composed for that picture for which it is played. It should fit. It should breathe in unison with the picture.

"In this connection, my principle is to avoid opera and well known songs that have a meaning or a text foreign to the subject matter of the picture. For instance, do not let your hearers hear a bit of music from an opera they have seen, unless the action that accompanied that music in the opera was identical with the action on the screen. For instance, I find music from 'Carmen' fits perfectly in some scene of a Spanish or Southern murder.

"There is a difference between tension and action. For instance, I have found that in some scenes a regular beat, beat, beat of music will produce a tension or will accompany a strenuous action far better than if placed in staccato time.

Small Use in Cheap Music.

"There are waltz movements and waltz movements. Every musician knows that. But there are some waltzes which picture every emotion. There are others, cheap things, that fit only into stereotyped places. I avoid these stereotyped bits wherever possible.

"I try to make my music fit into the atmosphere of the picture, of the house, of the patrons, of the lights. I try to make my music a part of the atmosphere. I mark my success by the patrons going from the house with a feeling that they have had a thoroughly enjoyable time; that everything, the seat they sat in, the ushers, the picture, the music, had been in harmony. The music has a more powerful part in this than has any other agency.

Cue Sheets Often Worthless.

"No musician has a place in motion picture theatre orchestra who has not imagination. He must picture the music as actually belonging to that scene. He must hear music with every scene.

"I am sorry to have to say it, but the cue sheets sent us are jokes. I can name the writers of worthwhile cue sheets on three fingers. In my hand here I hold a cue sheet sent by a producer who makes as many pictures as any other producer. This cue sheet is even less than a joke.

"I see each picture in advance, with a blank bit of paper before me. I jot down the musical version of each scene. Then I go up to my office and block it all out. I consider my work important."

American Cinema Completes Staff.

President Walter Niebuhr, of the American Cinema Corporation, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, this week announced the completion of the company's executive staff. Holmes C. Walton, who was for five years affiliated with Sanger & Jordan, and more recently specialized on the foreign film markets, has been selected as general sales manager for the corporation. Lucius Henderson has assumed charge of the company's producing program and is now engaged in planning future productions. Samuel Pierce Blackman, formerly president of the Memorial Photoplay Corporation, is business manager at the company studios.

TORONTO SHOWMEN WANT SUNDAY REST

"City of Churches" Men Expect no Increased Returns from Sabbath Showing—Veterans Desire It

MEMBERS of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario engaged in a hot debate at the regular general meeting of the association on Tuesday, June 3, over the subject of Sunday performances. Announcement was made at the meeting, which was held in the association headquarters, at 143 Yonge street, Toronto, with an attendance of over forty exhibitors, that the Great War Veterans' Association was commencing an agitation for the opening of all moving picture theatres on Sundays in order to keep the returned men off the streets. It was stated that a resolution requesting the government of Canada to take this step would be presented at the next convention of the veterans.

Exhibitors Object to Sunday Shows.

The final decision of the meeting was that the exhibitors should remain neutral during the time that an appeal is being made by the veterans, and possibly others, for Sunday shows. This opinion was reached in the form of an amendment to a motion that the association go on record as opposed to Sunday performances. Various objections were taken by exhibitors against the proposal to open Canadian theatres on Sunday. Several maintained that the business during the week would be seriously affected and little or nothing would be gained in the long run with the houses open seven days in the week.

One exhibitor declared that if the theatres were to open on Sundays he was through with the moving picture business because Sunday was a real day of rest for him and he did not propose to work continuously day in and day out. The opinion was also expressed that the exhibitors would draw upon themselves the disfavor of the churches and many citizens if performances were held on Sundays. The adopted amendment was moved by J. Hudson and seconded by Mr. Alexander, both of whom are Toronto exhibitors. The mover and seconder of the motion to oppose Sunday opening were Messrs. McCullough and R. S. Tickner, who are also Toronto exhibitors.

Demand Circuses Be Restricted.

J. A. Morrison, of Meaford, Ontario, made a plea for pressure upon the Ontario government to prohibit circus and other road shows, including carnival companies, from touring the country. He pointed out that the circus or carnival takes a considerable amount of money out of a community and that the circus does not pay its full share of taxes in comparison with assessments upon theatres. He also urged that the government should regulate the number of theatres in a center according to a population basis.

F. Guest, of Hamilton, Ontario, also objected to the freedom in which circuses travel the country, and pointed out that on the very day of the meeting there was a large circus right on a lot adjoining his theatre in Hamilton and another one would make its appearance there during the next week. On the motion of Mr. Guest, seconded by Mr. Hudson, it was decided to appoint a committee of three to draw up desired legislation covering circuses and road shows, the suggested bill to be presented to the government. It was also decided to send a letter to the councils of Meaford and Hamilton to point out the objection of exhibitors to the circus.

Machine Operators Do Not Strike.

Secretary Thomas Scott, of the Ontario association, advised the meeting that he had conferred with Moving Picture Operators' Local No. 173 regarding the stand that the operators intended to take in connection with the ordering of a general strike in Toronto. This strike had actually been called, but the operators had not gone out, and the interruption to general business had been short-lived. The operators' local had expressed the wish that all exhibitors place the union card in the box office window to show that union operators were employed. The meeting decided to co-operate with the operators.

Proportionate Dues to Be Levied.

A budget of expenses during the coming year is to be drawn up and proportionate dues will be levied upon members in place of a fixed membership fee for the year. The estimate for the coming year's expenses will be prepared after Secretary Scott makes a trip throughout the province to arrange for bookings for the new film exchange which has been established by the exhibitors' association.

Several exhibitors made donations to help defray the cost of the campaign which resulted in securing the law which enables Ontario exhibitors to conduct children's performances on Saturday and holiday afternoons.

Out-of-town members present included F. Guest, Hamilton; J. S. Smart, Port Hope; J. A. Morrison, Meaford, and E. T. Wykes, Schreiber. President J. C. Brady, owner of the Madison Theatre, Toronto, occupied the chair.

"The Westerners" To Get Los Angeles Premiere Soon

THE first of the Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., productions, Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners" will have its initial American presentation at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, where it opens for a two weeks' run June 15.

This pre-release showing of Benjamin B. Hampton's first contribution through his own company was closed by Harry H. Hicks, manager of the W. W. Hodkinson organization in Los Angeles.

First for "Daddy Long Legs."

The Regent Theatre, Toronto, had the first Canadian run of Mary Pickford's "Daddy Long Legs," during the week of May 26. It is understood that a record price was paid for the booking.

PUTTING OVER A SMALL TOWN SHOW

Lee Kugel Proves That Intelligent Advertising Will Make Business Anywhere, Even in a Hard-Boiled and Conservative Town Like Winsted and with One-Reeler

By Epes Winthrop Sargent

GEORGE M. COHAN wrote "It Pays to Advertise," but Lee Kugel, publicity promoter for World-Pictures, has provided a one-night stand version which should interest—and possibly instruct—every small house manager in the country.

Lee Kugel is what real showmen call an Agent. He can pack a cut trunk around the country ahead of a dramatic show and leave the towns ripe for the coming of his attraction. He is a real press agent and not "Director of Publicity" by grace of the man who prints his letterheads. He knows how because he has been over the circuit time and again.

For a long time he has been planning a demonstration that should prove his point that advertising, properly done, can help the small house as well as the great. The New York hit of "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain" seemed to him to give him a chance to make a double point and not only demonstrate the value of advertising, but also to prove that a feature is not necessarily 5,000 feet long.

Sought a Tough Proposition.

He wanted the toughest proposition he could find, and after long search he located what he wanted in Winsted, Conn., in the shape of the Opera House.

He wanted a conservative town. Winsted is all of that. It has a population of about 6,000, with a smaller percentage of foreign population than any town in southern New England.

He wanted a town where the natural following of the house did not insure a fair business for any attraction. The Opera House measured up to this requirement. Manager Gale put up a six-sheet one side of the structure, where you could see it if you looked sideways as you went past. He also put a one and a three at the head of the stairs and took a two-inch space in the paper. If the people came, all right, if they didn't, all right too.

House Has No Lobby.

He wanted a house with no natural advantages. This was the Opera House. It is situated upstairs with no lobby either upstairs or down. From the top step you pass right into the auditorium. There was no chance for lobby display.

From every angle the Opera House seemed to be an ideal place for the test: an upstairs house in a staid, conservative town. The usual run was from $65 to $75 a day, with a record of $234 for a holiday. There was no ardent fan class; no clientele established and held by intensive advertising. If Winsted could be won, any manager in any town could do as well and probably better.

Nothing was to be done that any showman, anywhere, could not follow. It was not the idea to go into the town with special men and get up a drive. It was planned to do exactly what any manager could do with the material to be had.

Uses Posters Freely.

After a chat with Manager Gale, Mr. Kugel decided upon his campaign. Six locations were picked, to be built into 24-sheet stands with an eight, a six and ones. The eight was a block stand, but in a pinch two sixes could have been used. For window work ten eights, ten threes and one hundred ones were used. The house had a large capacity and the 200 seats required for the billing payments could easily be spared.

The local newspaper was then visited. It was interested only in the size of the advertisement, and as the rate was only fifteen cents an inch, it could not rouse much enthusiasm over a two-inch display. A large opening display was arranged for, with follow advertisements for the succeeding days. This carried a set of six reading notices (with cuts), one for each day.

No special copy was prepared. The display spaces and the reading notices were all taken from the press book. The stuff was all prepared to be used as it stood, and it was put in without change. The display advertisements were set in the spaces indicated.

Sent Letter to School Teachers.

The nearest approach to special stuff was in two letters. One of these was sent the school teachers, the copy reading:

There will be presented on Friday, June 6, at the Opera House, Winsted, Conn., "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain." This is a photoplay that from an educational point of view surpasses anything ever attempted to further the cause of interest in prehistoric life. The picture was made with faithful fidelity to all known records of animals that existed nine million years ago. To you, as a school teacher, this picture should be of extraordinary interest, as it will help you tremendously in creating among your pupils a desire to know something of the world at a time when history was just emerging from the nebulous period and beginning to take form. It will give every student of physical geography, natural history and kindred subjects more information than they can learn in three months of concentrated study. It has the indorsement of "The American Museum of Natural History." Inasmuch as your state has furnished much material in the nature of fossil specimens of these prehistoric animals, in fact more than any other state, a stimulated desire to know more of this subject will be created by viewing "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain."

A visit to the Opera House on Friday, June 6, will be well worth your while.

The scene on the right puts over the situation well in this Universal picturization of Bret Harte's story.

Manager Gale has decided not to increase the price of seats from the regular scale.

Leading Citizens Not Overlooked.

This was sent out from New York on the head of the World Film Corporation, as was this shorter form, which was sent to 150 of the leading citizens, from a list. It ran:

Manager Gale, of the Opera House of Winsted, has booked for Friday, June 6, a super feature entitled "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain." This picture is one of the most unique novelties ever put on the screen. It discloses animal life as it existed during the prehistoric period some nine millions years ago. The authenticity of the picture is vouched for by the Museum of Natural History of New York City. It offers to the patron of the motion picture theatre more genuine information concerning that period of the world's existence than can be gleaned from text books in several days concentrated study. It has been made the subject of discussion by learned men and should afford you the best value for the money that you have spent in the theatre in many years. For your information, notwithstanding the unusual interest in "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain," no increase in prices will be made.

Show and Advertising Cost $90.

A slide was given the house to be run for advance work and two thousand heralds were sent through the town. The heralds were put out under supervision and not merely thrown indiscriminately. One was placed in each house.

The total expense for all this extra work, including six two and three-column cuts left with the newspaper to be used with the press notices was slightly less than $50. The film rental for the entire bill was $40, making a total of about $90 or something less than $40 more than the usual daily expense.

The picture was not played on a holiday, but on Friday, June 6, a Friday date being selected because that was the worst night of the week. There was no lobby display, no banner work, no street wagon or other special stunt, just straight work such as any showman, however inexperienced, could handle in a town no matter how small its size, yet the picture played to 1,430 paid admissions, at 10 and 15 cents; reaching more than 30 per cent. of the total population of the town. Also there were two strong counter-attractions on the same day.

It goes to show that the investment in pictorial paper and newspaper space will bring a direct profit, if properly done, and it is not necessary to invest lavishly, at that. It proves that the cumulative effect of much paper will turn people in to the house. They see one bill and forget it. They see a dozen bills in as many windows, and they cannot forget it. It pays to advertise whether the town be Winsted or New York, and the more you advertise, within reason, the more money you will take in. You can get a couple of three sheets and do $75 on a $50 investment, or you can spend twice as much, and make twice as much.

The arithmetic is simple.

Johnson Plunges Into Land of Cannibals and Cocoanuts

MARTIN JOHNSON, explorer, who is making a second journey into the land of cannibals to make further records of their habits and costumes for Robertson-Cole to be released through Exhibitors Mutual, has reached New Zealand with his wife, Osa.

By this time the Johnsons are probably in the New Hebrides or nearing them, for it is more than five weeks since Johnson dispatched the letter from New Zealand which Robertson-Cole received.

Johnson sent on the information that the outfit he had obtained in the United States was the most complete he could purchase. In his stay at Sydney, Australia, Johnson obtained a line of trinkets that will carry him through his entire trip in the South Sea Islands. On his first trip Mr. Johnson almost lost the fruits of his entire exploration when Nagapate's men seized his three cameras and destroyed two of them. He intends taking no chances this trip, but as he makes his round of each island he will shoot the negative to Robertson-Cole's representative in California, thereby protecting himself against all eventualities. It is expected he will shortly start shipping completed films.

A Little Subterfuge as Applied by the Movies to the Subway.

Vitagraph had to get the corner of Broadway and Wall street, New York, for "The Hornet's Nest," with Earle Williams, so a Los Angeles corner was picked out, a dummy subway kiosk built, and the scene shot from a camouflaged angle.

Thomas Meighan to Star in Barrie's 'Admirable Crichton'

CECIL B. DEMILLE now definitely announces that Thomas Meighan will play the title role in DeMille's Artcraft version of Sir James M. Barrie's satirical play, "The Admirable Crichton," which will probably not be released under that title.

Thomas Meighan has been with Famous Players-Lasky for upwards of four years and in that time played opposite Pauline Frederick, Marguerite Clark, Mary Pickford, Billie Burke, Elsie Ferguson and Blanche Sweet. His last three films were with Norma Talmadge. He played the feature role of "The Miracle Man," and will be seen as the leading male actor in "Peg O' My Heart," a Paramount-Artcraft Special.

Star First Selected is Ill.

Elliott Dexter, originally slated to play the title role of Crichton, was taken ill with a nervous breakdown a few days ago and will not be able to play the part. Gloria Swanson will have the leading feminine characterization, while Lila Lee will temporarily abandon Paramount to play a role that is said to be made to order for her in this Artcraft production.

Jeanie Macpherson, who is writing practically a new play founded on Barrie's work, has nearly finished the task. Major Ian Hay Beith, soldier, author and lecturer, will work with Miss Macpherson and DeMille in an advisory capacity as to the customs and manners of the English aristocracy, as well as other phases of British life with which the play deals. The picture will be started at the Lasky studio and then the producer will take his entire cast to Santa Barbara Island, where the principal action of the play will be enacted.

Mrs. Pickford Acclaimed.

Large audiences attended Moore's Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C., on the evening of June 9, to pay tribute to Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, who is spending a few days in that city. A crowd that entirely blocked the street in front of the theatre cheered Mrs. Pickford when she appeared, and the ovation was enthusiastically repeated by the audience.

The regular program was suspended for the evening and, instead, "Daddy Long Legs" was run twice. Mrs. Pickford did not make any stage appearance, her visit to the theatre being entirely for the purpose of seeing in what manner the film had been presented here. The lobby of the Rialto was banked high with flowers from friends of "Little Mary's" mother. Mr. Moore also arranged special decorations for the theatre.

Sennett Girls at Broadway.

Mack Sennett, the farce-maker, will soon present at the Broadway Theatre his famous bathing beauties, the top of the California peach basket, in person and on the screen, in an elaborate and costly production, titled "Yankee Doodle in Berlin."

The feature has been playing the larger Eastern cities, and is said to have created a sensation. Seven of Sennett's beauties are en route to New York from his California studio.

COMING THROUGH WITH A MADHOUSE

John C. Fanning Took Over the Crazy Theatre of Mineral Wells, Texas, But Its Name and the Many Accompanying Prejudices Made Incentive For Him

FELLOWS, meet John C. Fanning, impresario of the Elk's Minstrels, owner of the Crazy Theatre and general all around good fellow of Mineral Wells, Texas. And if you don't know where that is, you have failed in availing yourself of the opportunity to acquaint yourself through Ring W. Lardner.

Anyhow, Mineral Wells, Texas, is about sixty miles west of Fort Worth, and until John went there to put on a minstrel show for the Elks, folks in that city did not know what a really good motion picture theatre was. But after John finished with the Elks, they liked his style so well they almost made him a present of the Crazy Theatre, in order that they might have some place to go where they could see first class picture plays amid first class surroundings.

Crazy Theatre Was Properly Named.

In the first place, the Crazy Theatre had never had anything better in it than a ten cent "tab" show, one of the kind that Sunday School teachers pray that their children may be kept away from, and when they did have a picture show in it, it was one of those "shoot 'em up" kind.

That's what Fanning was up against. He had a theatre that was in bad repute; he was an outsider of whom the local people knew nothing, and he had the church crowd to buck against. But seventeen years experience in the newspaper advertising game had proved to John the value of advertising. It was advertising, coupled with original ideas, that put the Crazy Theatre over.

The first thing John did after he took over the Crazy Theatre was to put in his application for membership in the Chamber of Commerce and pay his year's dues in advance. This according to John was the one best bet, for it put him in touch with the live wire business men of the city and showed them that he desired to make his residence there permanent.

Pulled for Liberty Loan and Red Cross.

Not long after that, the Liberty Loan came along, and as almost everybody knows, it was the hardest of all to put over because of the newness of the small bond proposition. But John saw his opportunity, studied up in advance the details of the loan, and then got another business man of the city to help him out and these two alone put over the first Liberty Loan in Mineral Wells. Here's where John registered again, for some of the old moss-backs thought he was making a commission on the sales until he explained what it was all about and from then on John was in solid.

Next came the organization of the Red Cross and John was there in the front ranks. He helped organized the first chapter in Mineral Wells and the result was that he was made chairman. Again John had hit the bull's eye, for this put him in touch with the women of the city, in the same way that the Liberty Loan campaign had put him in touch with the men.

But this personal advertising was not the only advertising Fanning did, for all the time he was establishing himself as a citizen of Mineral Wells he was using every means of bringing his theatre before those with whom he did not come in direct contact.

Raised Prices on "Commutation."

First he booked all the good pictures he could find, witnessed the first showing of his picture each day and eliminated anything that might be objectionable and then ran a slide on his curtain and a line in his newspaper ads saying that nothing would be seen on the screen at the Crazy Theatre that would bring a blush to the cheeks of the most innocent.

"'Tho This Be Madness— There's Method In It"

John C. Fanning,
Manager of the Crazy Theatre.
Mineral Wells, Texas, ——

Uses ten inches of advertising space every day in the local paper, and more when the feature is big.
Frames trade paper advertisements for his lobby.
Sends every possible inch of publicity on appropriate pictures to heads of local societies.
Meets his patrons before or after the show and builds up a roster of friends.
Has a "commutation" admission ticket extending over a period of sixty days.
Gets into civic affairs that bring him in contact with both men and women.
Lends his theatre to the Baptist congregation which is building a new place of worship.
Has one-sheet stands on every street corner.

Everybody who attends the Crazy Theatre, and that includes nearly everybody in the city, knows John Fanning, for from opening time to closing time he is in the lobby, greeting those he knows and making friends with those he does not know.

Uses Trade Paper Advertising.

One of the cleverest stunts Fanning did when he first took over the Crazy Theatre was used in connection with advancing the prices. Under the old management the price had been 10 cents, but with the higher class of productions that Fanning booked he could no longer operate at that price. So he advanced his price to 20 cents and naturally there was considerable kick from the old guard. But he got them, too, for he inaugurated a combination ticket that entitled the holder to fourteen admissions at will during a period of sixty days and made the admission price 15 cents.

John's lobby is one of his biggest assets. Almost every day, he makes some change in the lobby display, if it is only to move a one sheet board from one side of the lobby to the other. He believes that a front that is the same each time a patron comes to the theatre grows monotonous and so some change, no matter how small will affect the patrons. In his lobby he also makes use of the trade journals in a unique way. Full page ads of attractions that he has booked are framed in a gilt frame under the heading "Coming Events" and hung in the lobby. These attract attention, as many of them are really more artistic than anything that is sent out in the regular accessory line by the distributor.

Not the least of Fanning's advertising is that done outside the theatre. He uses ten inches on the back page of the local paper every day and when he has a big feature more. On each corner of the city streets he has an ornamental one sheet stand that he considers a real decoration, while on every vacant location on the main streets he has ornamental six sheet stands that are worthy of a place in any Class A bill posting plant.

Appeals to Various Societies.

Whenever Fanning has a picture booked that he knows will appeal to the women or to their children, he compiles a scrap book of everything that appears in the trade journals on the subject, ads, synopsis, reviews and criticisms and sends it to the president of the local women's organization, and on several occasions, the contents of these books have not only been placed where the other members of the organization can read them, but the president has read them aloud to the membership.

At present the local Baptists are without a church. The old church is being torn down and a new one erected. And who was Johnnie on the spot with a place for them to worship? John C. Fanning, offering them the use of his theatre on Sunday free of charge and even running slides in his show, telling his audiences that while the Crazy Theatre was a place of amusement on week days, it was used as a church on Sunday. Naturally, such efforts as John has made to give his community first class amusement with clean surroundings have made many friends for him, including the preachers who are all regular attendants at the Crazy Theatre.

Such a success as that of John Fanning, would not be exceptional in a larger city, but when one stops to consider the prejudice that existed in Mineral Wells among its eight thousand inhabitants, against the Crazy Theatre, one cannot blame John Fanning for being proud of the achievement. It is just another proof of the fact that the "show business" is no longer the fly-by-night, graft game of years ago, but a thoroughly modern business proposition in which gentlemen are engaged and which will prosper only through the use of modern business methods.

Mail Found in Our Screen Letter Box.

SOME time before we, ourself (out of our own head) had thought of the idea, Jack Cohan beat us to it, and here's how it works: "A fan has written in asking" (we quote publicity) "how actresses cry in the movies. Instead of replying to this by the printed word, a scene has been filmed with director, player and cameraman and just how an actress brings herself to tears is graphically presented.

"Arrangements have been made whereby a prominent actress and instructor at many of the well known studios will pose for this new department of the Screen Letter Box."

Questions are pouring in on Mr. Cohan, and to make sure he gets enough to keep the reels turning, here are a few we have found in our own screen letter box:

Toronto Men Oppose Sunday Opening.

THERE is an unusual situation in Toronto, where the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association by indirection have indicated their opposition to the Sunday showing of pictures. It seems that at the next gathering of Canadian veterans there is an excellent chance of the passing of a resolution asking the government to open all picture theatres on Sundays. The exhibitors, although expressing their hostility to the general proposition, decided outwardly to remain neutral pending the session of the veterans.

One of the objections advanced to Sunday opening was that business during the week would be seriously affected and that in the long run little or nothing would be gained. One exhibitor declared if he had to open on Sundays he would quit the business—that he did not propose to work day in and day out. Possibly the thought that he might remain away from his house on Tuesday, say, did not occur to him. Also expressed at the meeting was the fear that the change in present arrangements might bring down on the exhibitors the condemnation of churchmen and other citizens.

We question whether the showing on the Sabbath would have any noticeable effect on attendance on the remaining days of the week. Perhaps some of our subscribers situated in Empire State cities where the ban has been removed might be able to give light on the controversy. We believe the difference will be small in any event.

After all the general subject of opening theatres on Sunday is not so much a matter of what the manager wants or what his employes want. It is what the public wants.

Are You Going to St. Louis?

ARE you one of those going to St. Louis for the convention of the exhibitors, June 25 to 28? Talking with one of the men who figured largely in the stormy sessions at the Chicago convention of two years ago the question was asked: "What is it going to be, a fight or a frolic?"

"A nice, peaceable time," was the answer. "So far as now can be foretold there will be none of the wrangling of two years ago. Everything is straightened out and there will be plenty of time for constructive work. I have talked with quite a number the last couple of days who said they were going."

Exhibitors everywhere have large interests to protect, to conserve. These interests are getting larger every week. Patrons are coming to the theatres in increasing numbers. The day of the motion picture showman is here, now. All these facts supply added reasons why the managers should foregather and exchange ideas as to the better way of solving problems that press.

As to Advertisements During Show.

A CORRESPONDENT in the New Orleans Times-Picayune inquires if it would not be a good move on the part of picture showmen to eliminate all advertisements from their performances. He says he "has heard many complain most distressingly of this nuisance."

"We go to the movies for pleasure," the correspondent goes on, "and why should we have to sit for about five minutes or more and look at a series of uninteresting, eye-destroying 'ads' passes my understanding. If they are space fillers or time fillers they certainly are not pleasure fillers."

The writer further expresses the opinion that if the settlement of the matter were left to a vote of the theatre's patrons a majority would request the elimination. We heartily agree with the complainant. It has been our observation, too, that the more pretentious the house, the greater the effort to cater to every possible wish of the public, the less there is said on the screen about the shows soon to appear.

Chevalier Pathe Is Honored.

CHARLES PATHE, Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, was signally honored by his associates at a dinner in the Hotel Astor on the evening of June 10, prior to his departure for home. Mr. Pathe has had a notable career. That fact was attested on this occasion by the men who in the United States carry forward the work which he began nearly a generation ago. One of the more striking of the incidents of the evening was the speech of Frank Keenan, who generally is credited with being a good business man as well as a popular player. Mr. Keenan laid great stress on the integrity represented by the name of Pathe.

As was said by one of the speakers during the evening, Mr. Pathe is more than a pioneer. He is a survivor—a survivor of keen, brainy competition. During all the years in which throughout the civilized world the brand of the rooster has stood for high-class entertainment the head of the house has kept pace with the stiffening stride of those fast-moving persons who always are attracted to a new and generally reputed remunerative industry.

A notable evidence of the keenness of the head of the house of Pathe, of his up-to-dateness, was uncovered in the course of his speech. That was the announcement that on his return to this country next October he would take up with Mr. Brunet the study of an arrangement under the working of which all the immediate colleagues of the administrative, industrial and commercial management would share in the profits of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

American producers learned much from Pathe subjects in the old days. They saw for themselves the possibilities that lay in adequate interiors, wonderful backgrounds and—the employment of actors eminent on the regular stage. Long life to Chevalier Pathe!

Nationalizing Film Exchanges.

THERE is much discussion among exchangemen as to forming a national organization. There are a score of "clubs" throughout the country composed of distributors. When in one given locality there is a threat of antagonistic legislation the fourteen members of the National Association all receive telegrams of warning from each of their representatives. In the course of a year this duplication is multiplied many times. Among the objects of grouping these "clubs" is that of doing away with this lost motion, to centralize complaints in the hands of an agreed official in New York.

One of the men interested in the formation of the new organization, when asked as to how exhibitor relations with local clubs would be affected, said they would be for the better if at all. The person referred to declared it was the desire of the chiefs of the distributing companies to see that exhibitors get a square deal from their exchanges.

The members of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League plainly are under the impression they are not getting a square deal from the exchange organizations. The Associated Film Exchange of Cincinnati has mailed a list of new rules to the customers of the members. One of these edicts is to the effect that film will not be sent out unless a check is received prior to the date of shipment. The exhibitors claim this is not in accord with contracts now in force. The exchangemen say they are after the fly-by-nights. Exhibitors, on the other hand, insist that in the state of Ohio there are not more than fifteen showmen who do not pay their bills, and the majority very properly object, and strongly, to being included in the category of the former. It is a valid complaint.

The exhibitors also retaliate by saying that the exchangemen supply the best example of "fly-by-nights," declaring the average life of the Ohio managers is from fifteen to thirty weeks. They add that in sifting complaints against the exchanges it frequently develops that the fault is laid at the door of a discharged manager. The members of the Miami league demand that credit be given to those showmen who as individuals in any other line of industry would have it extended to them—gladly. The story will be found on another page. It's worth reading.

In Kansas the new exhibitors' organization also is taking steps to secure redress from the Kansas City Film Board of Trade in case through accident over which the showmen have no control they are deprived of service.

A distributing group the organization of which is not founded on the basis of the square deal to its clients cannot survive any more than can any other business body. The film industry has erected several tombstones to the memory of concerns that rode roughshod over the rights of their customers.

The exchange organization that lays down rules to be applied alike to the just and the unjust displays bad judgment. The exhibitor whose credit is A1 has a right to have the fact recognized. If an exchange, either in the person of its manager or of one of its employes, fails to take account of that fact the injured showman would be less than human if he did not urge upon his associates combined action in the direction of readjustment of arbitrary and unfair rules.

A Record That's Not So Bad.

A NEW YORK film man, in order to learn to his own satisfaction just what attention newspapers were giving to motion picture trade papers, bought 300 dailies of an approximate date. The places of publication of these journals ranged from St. Petersburg, Fla., to Red Wing, Minn., and from Bangor, Me., to Houquiam, Washington. As a result of his search for excerpts from trade papers he reports that for one that he found of all other motion picture journals there were five from the Moving Picture World.

Which is not so bad.

The Longer Run and Return Dates.

THE experiment of extending the life of the motion picture by playing return dates within four weeks of the original showing has been tried by the Rivoli-Rialto management in New York with encouraging results. The return engagement of the Metro production "The Red Lantern" at the Rivoli last week found the public still eager to fill the theatre at each performance. While some of this feeling was due to the excellence of the picture's presentation and the special nature of the numbers which surrounded it, this condition is only what is to be expected of an exhibitor who pretends to any knowledge of showmanship. The point is that the repeated bill made good financially and vindicated the judgment of the man who signed the contract for its return.

The Douglas Fairbanks picture "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" is now being shown at the Rialto three weeks after an engagement at the Rivoli. The picture opened to the usual big Sunday business of the house and has been keeping up to the mark in spite of the warm weather. For a management that is forced to decide on one hundred and four features a year under the one-week-run system any practical method that can cut down this number of pictures will mean the elimination of a number of the weaker features and a corresponding length of life for the most worthy photoplays on the list.

By the introduction of "Broken Blossoms" to Broadway D. W. Griffith has opened a new field for motion pictures which do not depend upon their spectacular nature for success and shown the way by which they may be given long runs at high enough prices to make them a source of profit to their producers. It is evident that there is a large class of amusement seekers which is eager to support pictures of superior merit. With these it is quality and not quantity, and a six-reel story told by a small but superior cast will secure their enthusiastic support.

Personal and Otherwise

By Sam Spedon.

T. R. GARDINER of the Gardiner Syndicate has purchased the rights of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," with the Mack Sennett bathing girls, for Northern New York territory. He has just closed with the Shubert Buffalo house, the "Teck," for fifteen days' run. This is what Mr. Gardiner told us when we met him on Broadway the early part of this week.

A few minutes after leaving Mr. Gardiner we met Frederick M. Zimmerman, sales manager of the Gardiner Syndicate, with offices at Buffalo and Albany.

H. L. Conway, branch manager of the Exhibitors Mutual at Milwaukee, has been appointed branch manager of the Exhibitors Mutual office, of Indianapolis.

Ronald A. Reader, assistant manager of the Vitagraph studios, Brooklyn, left on business for Paris, France, on Thursday morning June 12. He will be gone for two months. Mr. Reader used to be manager of the Vitagraph manufacturing plant at Paris and we understand it has been kept in operation, in a limited way, all through the war.

L. Wingham, branch manager of the Exhibitors Mutual at Portland, Ore., has been transferred to Seattle.

B. M. Conlon, who was assistant to Paul Lazarus, has been made, since Mr. Lazarus has gone with the United Artists, head of the Vitagraph publicity department.

J. C. Conlen, New Jersey representative, and Charles Rosenfeld, Brooklyn salesman of the Exhibitors Mutual, were the winners of the two leather portfolios which were offered as prizes for the great increase of business shown in the United States the first two and the last two weeks of May.

R. D. Marson of Boston, representative of United Pictures Theatres Corporation, was in town the latter part of last week.

Paul Panzer, who began his career with the Vitagraph players and who was associated with the Pathe company for several years in serials, came from San Antonio, Texas, last week. At San Antonio, Mr. Panzer was playing in "The Masked Rider," a serial produced by William Steiner. After a ten-day stay in New York he will return to San Antonio with his family to remain indefinitely. He says that the building of the Whartons' studio at Rock Wells, adjacent to San Antonio, makes this locality quite a producing center. Among other well known players in Texas he mentioned Harry Meyers, who was also engaged in "The Masked Rider."

Our old friend Stan Twist was in New York a few days last week. He is now employed at the Rothacker laboratories in an executive capacity. He returned to Chicago on Saturday, June 7.

A meeting of the executive committee of the New York Exhibitors State League will be held at the Hotel Astor on Thursday, June 19. Many subjects of state and national importance are to be discussed, and as many members of the industry are expected to attend the dinner to Messrs. Cohen, O'Reilly and Berman, it was thought the time would be opportune for such a meeting.

J. Stuart Blackton has just returned from the Cumberland mountains, where he has been taking some of the exterior scenes of "Moonshine." This week he is engaged on the indoor scenes at the Blackton studio at 423 Clausen avenue, Brooklyn. The J. Stuart Blackton Pictures, Inc., will enlarge the Clausen avenue studio and for that purpose has purchased the building adjoining, which will be razed and a two-story addition made to the present structure, thus making a spacious two-story studio, giving ample opportunity to portray the large scenes under construction.

Theodore Johnson has been appointed branch manager of the Exhibitors Mutual exchange at Portland, Ore.

Harry Revier and Lester Park have come on from the Coast bringing with them 50,000 feet of postive, taken in the Jess Willard feature, the "Challenge of Chance." They and Roy Somerville, the author of the story, are working night and day cutting and assembling it to have it ready by June 15.

William Gilmore Dead.

The sudden death in New York City of William Gilmore on Saturday, June 7, has cast a gloom over the local industry. Mr. Gilmore was for several years associated with the General Film and recently was employed as manager of the Grand Theatre, Brooklyn. He was to assume a position on Monday, June 9, with the United Pictures Theatre Corporation as salesman. Only recently death claimed his wife and one of his children. His demise leaves his four children orphans entirely dependent upon his friends. For the purpose of aiding these helpless ones those who knew Mr. Gilmore and appreciated his many good qualities have started a fund. Donations can be sent to William Hilkemeier as treasurer, care of Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, 1600 Broadway, New York City. Mr. Gilmore died almost penniless. He was thirty-eight years old.

Elliott Dexter Convalescing.

Suffering from a nervous breakdown and under the constant care of a special nurse in a diet sanitarium, Elliott Dexter, Famous Players-Lasky screen star, is now reported to be considerably improved, but still far from being able to return to work.

It is denied that his illness will force his retirement from the screen for many months.

SOLDIERS PARTIAL TO RELIGIOUS FILM

Pathe's "Life of Christ" Shown to Doughboys Who Maintain Watch on the Rhine and Scores Great Hit

BACK from his service in France, where he was in charge of the Knights of Columbus cinema department, Walter A. Morton brings additional testimony to witness the great benefits our soldiers have received from moving pictures. Mr. Morton was notified immediately upon his arrival in New York of the serious illness of his mother, and he hastened to her bedside at Albert Lea, Minn., where he was soon gratified by the realization that his mother was out of danger.

In a letter to the editor of Moving Picture World Mr. Morton relates some of his experiences while overseas. "I made a contract with the Community Motion Picture Bureau to supply to the Knights of Columbus projecting machines and film service, covering all of France and part of Italy, placing projecting machines in the Knights of Columbus Clubs, Army Recreation centers and hospitals.

"The films were circulated much in the same manner as in the States, through film exchanges located in the larger centers. The pictures shown were the best American-made feature films. After completing this territory, I did much the same thing in Germany for the Army of Occupation.

Opened Film Season in Germany.

"While in Germany, the Lenten season was approaching and it appeared to me that it would be well to get officers' and men of that combat army a picture they had not seen there—The Passion Play, Pathe, hand-colored in eleven reels. This would involve great expense so a meeting was called at the suggestion of Major Cooper, of the Welfare Board, the idea being to get all of the Welfare workers together for this one special attraction.

"The scheme met with the approval of Senior Chaplain Dunnegan, Third Army, Major Styner of the entertainment office, Third Army, Senior Chaplain of the Y. M. C. A., Mr. Brewer of the Community Motion Picture Bureau and the Knights of Columbus. The Third Army to furnish trucks for transportation, the Community Bureau and Y. M. C. A. to furnish projecting machines, delco generator electrical machines and operators, and the Knights of Columbus to furnish the films.

"All working together, we opened at the Fest Hall at Coblenz—and a big hit. Four of these special shows are now traveling through the Army of Occupation as a special feature attraction.

The Knights of Columbus photographic department has film scenes in the Argonne and Chateau Thierry of the actual warfare. After the armistice was signed, we made scenes showing all of the athletic meets, devastated cities of France, famous shrines and everything of interest pertaining to the army. We have now on hand 40,000 feet of excellent educational films.

"Before the armistice was signed, comedies in film were by all odds the most popular of photoplays among our soldiers overseas. Since the actual fighting was stopped, this popularity has switched to 'Life of Christ.'

"The film is certainly responsible for a remarkable interest in religion shown by Pershing's Army of Occupation. We first showed it at Coblenz, where the Knights of Columbus have a clubhouse with a seating capacity nearly equalling that of Madison Square Garden.

"It made a tremendous hit and news regarding the film spread rapidly through the army. Men walked miles to see it and sat as if spellbound during almost three hours required to show it. Every camp in the occupied district sent in a call for the film.

Religious Film a Great Hit.

"The religious spirit of a half-million American soldiers was awakened by this remarkable picture and the beneficial results can hardly be measured. The Knights of Columbus conduct almost a hundred film exhibitions every night overseas and the combined attendance of these performances aggregate 150,000 men. Half that number visit afternoon film shows where it is possible to conduct them.

"One of the big factors in maintaining the morale of our boys during the actual war was the film show. Today it is doing more than any other agency I know of to cultivate contentment among our doughboys."

"Sea Wolf" Goes to Famous Players.

C. E. Shurtleff, president of C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., and who has control of all releases of Jack London stories, announces that he has sold the picture rights to the "Sea Wolf" to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Shurtleff stated that owing to the fact that the Famous Players Company once before filmed the "Sea Wolf" and were anxious to do it a second time, he was approached with a handsome offer which he accepted on one condition. This was the Famous Players Company release all rights to two other London productions which they made and four other London stories which they claimed they had the rights to. These are "Smoke Bellow," "Burning Daylight," "John Barleycorn," "Martin Eden," "Valley of the Moon," "Odessy of the North."

Robert Ellis Signs with Selznick for Long Term

MYRON SELZNICK announces that he has signed Robert Ellis on a long term contract to appear as leading man in Selznick productions. He has already appeared in two Selznick productions, "Upstairs and Down" and "The Spite Bride," in support of Olive Thomas.

Robert Ellis is well known to screen fans, having appeared in the silent drama at numerous times during the past few years. He left the screen several months ago to resume stage work and became leading man for the Morosco Stock Company in Los Angeles. When Selznick began producing the screen version of the Hatton play Ellis was engaged to play the same part he had been playing behind the footlights, and scored such a hit that he was engaged to play opposite Miss Thomas in "The Spite Bride."

Mr. Ellis has already arrived in New York, and is ready to begin work. His first part will probably be as leading man for Elaine Hammerstein in "Love or Fame?" the star's first Selznick production.

Reorganize Southwestern Company.

The Southwestern Film Corporation has been completely reorganized with Wallace Walthall, brother of Henry Walthall, moving picture star, as vice president and general manager. Mr. Walthall was in charge of the General offices in Dallas before the disintegration of the company. Frank Fay is now president of this concern. F. M. Sanford and L. C. McHenry, formerly in charge of the company, have sold out their interest. The company has offices at 1911½ Commerce street, Dallas, and has started in by acquiring rights to the Craig Kennedy serials in that territory.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Every Pot Seething, Summer "Has Came," and Studios Are Working at Night—Many Things Doing

By Giebler

EVERYBODY busy in Filmland. The seven days that have just winged themselves into the erstwhile has been the most active week in months. The municipal election is over and Meredith P. Snyder, the movies' choice for mayor, is in by a big majority.

Every lot is seething, and hot as it is, fur is flying in Filmland as it never flew before. Summer is here with bells on, and right now is a good time to register a rebuke and a resolution.

For the past several weeks we have been poking fun and the finger of scorn at the weather with what we now realize was a devotion worthy of a better cause. We did this because we fondly believed we were helping the movies. We railed and ranted at the rain; we fumed at the fogs; we said bitter, cutting things about the climatic conditions in general. We earned the contumely of the native sons, the baleful glares of the boosters. We accused the weather of poor direction, rotten continuity, awful lighting, weak story, everything.

Rubbernecking Is off Weather Stuff.

And now that our devoted work has begun to bear fruit, and the weather has quit acting up and any director can go out on the lot and get all the most glee-orious California sunshine that ever shone—do you know what they are doing?

They are shooting their scenes at night, that's what they are doing. Can you imagine that, and can you beat it? And after all that Rubbernecking has done in the campaign for clear skies.

I'm off the weather stuff from now on.

Some of the most elaborate scenes of the past month have been shot after sunset. Two weeks ago I wrote of Director Sydney Franklin and Mary Pickford's big street scene, made at night; and this week Frank Lloyd, who is making Geraldine Farrar's new film at Goldwyn, staged a Russian theatre scene with five hundred extras, and kept the echoes and the good citizens of Culver City awake until long after curfew hours.

Everybody Is Doing Night Scenes.

And only last night Fred Stone and Frank Borzage, his director, and a bunch of buckaroos and bronchos made a lot of frontier street stuff in the evening dews and damps.

Tonight, Henry Kolker is going to make a big water spectacle scene at Brunton, with Bessie Barriscale in a swing over a pool seventy-five feet long and deep enough to dive in, and there will be twenty-five swimming girls and some real swans, and the Rubbernecker is going to be there if he has to impersonate one of the swans.

I did quite a lot of visiting this week. One day Mitchell Lewis picked me up from a dry and dusty highway and took me out to his place in his closed car. "Mitch" wasn't doing any acting that day, but the other members of his cast were.

How Things Look on Lewis Lot.

Robert Bradbury was engineering Gloria Peyton, Frank Whitson, Patricia Palmer and Joseph Swickard through the action of a north woods story. Cliff Elfelt was assisting and "Mac" McManigle was doing the camera work.

Miss Peyton was supposed to be living in a cabin, a very realistic looking cabin with a real cook stove, and some real soup stewing away on its top.

There was a bunk in the cabin, and under it a little basket filled with baby clothes, little shoes, socks, and other things that new kids wear.

Bradbury told Miss Peyton what she was to do. He lifted the things out of the basket one at a time, explaining as he went. There was nothing much in that. Then Miss Peyton took up each little article of apparel, stroked it lovingly, folded it and laid it away in the basket.

Seeking the Reason for Throat Lump.

I suppose the baby that had worn the clothes, or the baby that was to have worn them, was dead—something like that. It was simple stuff, only a movie scene, and the clothes were only props, and a carpenter was hammering away like mad at one side, and a prop boy was negotiating a cigarette from an unwilling friend on the other side, and the soup was burning, but as the girl put the clothes back into the basket her hands trembled, and there came a look into her eyes, and—at any rate it got my goat and made a lump come in my throat.

Maybe it was because I am a sentimental goop, or maybe it was because the soup was burning; or maybe—now, isn't it queer I didn't think of that before—maybe it's because Gloria Peyton is a good actress—that must be why.

After this scene was finished I went over and took a bite of lunch at the new cafeteria, an institution that fills a long felt want and the famished insides of the many actors that throng the Brunton lot.

I met Howard Hickman in the cafeteria, and he told me he would be on the job directing the next Bessie Barriscale picture.

William Worthing was treating himself to something fizzy at the soda fountain, and Ted Reed was surrounding a sandwich.

Meets the Whole Push.

Out on the lot I ran into Frank Campeau and Doug Fairbanks and little Doug, who is here visiting his pa, and Eddie Hammer and Jack Pickford and Mark Larkin and J. H. Walraven, publicity expert, and Jack Holt and Wallace Beery and T. Lawson Perkins, called "Troy" by folks who know him well, and Robert Brunton, the big boss of the lot, and August Wolf, right hand man for Frank Keenan, and J. L. Frothingham, general manager of the B. B. Features, who told me about the big set for Bessie Barriscale's new picture, and Si Snyder, the B. B.'s publicity director, and thirty-five assorted Mexicans all made up as South American soldiers.

Then I listened to Tom Geraghty, who has a story about catching a trout in an automobile, just an ordinary "it happened on location" fish story, which I accepted as I do all piscatorial tales, with a grain of salt.

I went and looked at the B. B. set, which was magnificent, splendiferous, and all the other things Mr. Frothingham said about it. Every piece of furniture, including a piano stool, was done in gold leaf.

One Fish Story as Good as Another.

Sessue Hayakawa was getting ready to shoot a scene on the next stage. I know that Mr. Hayakawa is a great fisherman, and I just happened to remember a good fish story—an experience of catching a mudcat in a motor car, but the bird Tom Geraghty was there telling an almost identical story about a trout. Of course I didn't even mention fish after that. I just called it a day and went back to the office.

"Soldiers of Fortune" Runs Heavily to Boots with Few Exceptions.
Herald Lindsay is the only exception, Norman Kerry and Pauline Stark both favoring high footgear.

The next day, I went out to see Allan Dwan making "Soldiers of Fortune."

Allan is getting fat again and looks more like his old self than he did when he left here for the East a few weeks ago.

He had just got back from San Diego, where he used about half of the town in some of his scenes. Allan says he had ten thousand people in one street shot and would have had as many more if the street had been longer and wider.

"Soldiers of Fortune" Looks Good.

I got out to the set just in time to see some fine rapid fire action. Dwan was making a scene on a stairway. Philo McCullough starts down the steps—a squad of soldiers rush into the room below, shoot up the stairs and Philo falls bumpety, bump to the bottom.

Then Norman Kerry, who is playing Clay, the engineer of the story, comes in with help, the soldiers are routed, and Pauline Stark and Herald Lindsey, a lady from Ladysmith or some other South African city who Allan Dwan declares is a find, come down the stairs and weep over the fallen Philo until Dwan says "cut it."

And then they do it all over again—several times, to be exact. "Soldiers of Fortune" is going to be a big picture or I miss my guess.

Ruth Roland Returns to Coast.

Ruth Roland, who now heads her own producing company, Ruth Roland Serials, Inc., which is to make serials for Pathe, has concluded her two weeks' visit in New York, and is now on her way back to the Pacific Coast, where she will begin work at once on her first picture for her new company.

On her way back to the Coast, Miss Roland will make personal appearances in Montreal, Buffalo, Cleveland, Chicago and Milwaukee. She plans to have her new serial well under way by July 10.

Garrett Leased Through Export and Import.

The article in the June 14 issue of the World concerning the purchase by Sidney Garrett, of the European rights of the Nazimova films for the Mundus Film Company omitted reference to the Export and Import Film Company from which concern Mr. Garrett acquired the rights.

The Export and Import Film Company owns the rights to the Nazimova pictures for all of Continental Europe and leased them to the Mundus Company through Mr. Garrett.

Minneapolis Branch of Pathe Plans Special Sales Drive

SPECIAL sales meetings of all Pathe salesmen of the Minneapolis branch of Pathe and executives of the local office will be held on June 7, 8, 9 and 10, at which time plans are to be discussed for making the balance of the month of June by far the biggest in the history of the local branch. "A special drive is on for new business in honor of Charles Pathe, now in this country, the man who made the first motion picture drama, and who recently was made a member of the French Legion of Honor," said Manager C. W. Stombaugh.

Joseph M. Fieldman, Pathe Special Feature sales representative, is rapidly closing up towns in this territory on the new Pathe star series contract, which includes eight Frank Keenans, eight Virginia Pearsons, eight Alma Reubens, the June Caprice and Creighton Hale subjects and the special feature attractions, "The Unknown Love" and "Oh, Boy," directed by Albert Capallani.

Ruben & Finklestein, who have been using the new Harold Lloyd Comedies in their Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, for some time past, have just signed a contract for a first and second run showing on them in St. Paul, where they will be shown first run at the New Garrick and second run at the New Princess and Majestic.

In "Trailer" on "The Great Gamble," George Hutchinson, the Western photoplays stunt man, pulls off some hair-raisers. Release date on "The Great Gamble" will be August 3 and the serial will be followed by Pearl White in a Robert W. Chambers serial, "In Secret." Contracts are now being taken on both serials.

Cornelius Tells Status of Mutual Chaplin Films

THE following statement was authorized by H. C. Cornelius, vice-president of Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation: "It has been a matter of common gossip within the industry for a period of several weeks that the purchase of the negative rights to the twelve Charles Chaplin comedies, known as the Chaplin-Mutual specials, was in negotiation.

"In view of the fact that the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation is the successor to the Mutual Film Corporation, which originally released these pictures, much speculation has centered around the part Exhibitors Mutual is taking in these negotiations.

"Exhibitors Mutual is negotiating for the Chaplin comedies with the Lone Star Corporation, which produced them. I know that several other bids have been entered and that competition has become spirited.

"Exhibitors Mutual as the distributor of the original prints has been served with a notice by Lone Star Corporation exercising an option under its original contract with the Mutual Film Corporation ordering withdrawal of all prints of the Chaplin Mutual specials from our exchanges.

"Notice has been served upon all exhibitors who had made contracts for these pictures with Exhibitors Mutual exercising a few weeks' cancellation clause, and upon the expiration of these notices all prints of the Chaplin Mutual comedies will be withdrawn from circulation in the United States and Canada."

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY HEADS MEET

Session at Hotel Sherman Is Addressed by President Zukor, Who Outlines Future Policy

A CONVENTON of the exchange managers of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and leading members of their respective office forces from the fifth and sixth territorial districts was held at the Hotel Sherman June 2, 3 and 4. J. W. Allen, district manager of the sixth district, which includes the Chicago, Minneapolis and Detroit exchanges, and M. H. Lewis, district manager of the fifth district, including the Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Des Moines exchanges, issued the call in their respective territories and alternated as chairman of the convention.

Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky, came on from New York to open the convention. In his opening address he dwelt chiefly on the policy that will be followed during the fiscal year, beginning September 1, with respect to production and distribution. He also outlined the sales plan that will govern exchanges during that period.

Advertising, publicity and exploitation were thoroughly discussed during Tuesday's meetings, every one present taking a part in the proceedings. New systems and forms for taking care of the details of exchange work also were carefully considered. At 5 o'clock adjournment was taken to meet at a banquet given by Mr. Zukor in the Rose Room at 6 o'clock.

Zukor Addresses Managers.

An interesting impromptu address was given by Mr. Zukor while coffee was being served. He briefly outlined his entire experience in the moving picture business, from the time he opened a small store theatre in West Fourteenth street, New York (around 1906), up to the present day. He reminded his hearers constantly in narrating his experiences that he had always retained a persistent clinging to the ideals formed right at the beginning of the industry—or at least from the time when pictures of any considerable length were being made, that it was absolutely essential to the continued life and success of the business that pictures should have artistic merit and above all things that they should be clean.

Those present were impressed deeply by the sincerity and earnestness of the speaker and were further enthused when he expressed his appreciation of the services of the men who are now working with him throughout the entire organization.

After the banquet Mr. Zukor left for Kansas City and passed through Friday morning, on his way back to New York.

Many Exchangemen Attend.

Wednesday was devoted to a further consideration of the various systems and methods employed for a better handling of the business and to meet the higher demands of the present day.

The following were present: Kansas City, G. E. Akers, manager; A. A. Cole, manager accessories; J. W. Bartlett, head booker, and Salesmen J. H. Gilday, R. J. McManus and S. J. Mayer.

Billie Rhodes and Company Film "Blue Bonnet" Scene

SMILING BILL" PARSONS and his wife, Billie Rhodes, arrived in Chicago June 5. They were accompanied by Director Chaudet and ten of the company engaged in the production of "The Blue Bonnet," which will be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

The stopover in Chicago was made for the purpose of filming a scene in the Chicago stockyards district. They were on their way to Los Angeles, where the subject will be produced.

The day of arrival was a rather unfortunate one for the party, as it was dedicated to the arrival of the third section of the Prairie Division from France. The city was crowded with down-state visitors and it was impossible to secure rooms at any of the leading hotels. The sidewalks were impassable, owing to the crowds on the line of march welcoming the returning heroes.

"Broken Blossoms" Big Favorite in Chicago

THE attendance at the Illinois Theatre last week to see "Broken Blossoms" was fully equal to that at "The Passing Show," at the Palace, and the two are pronounced the greatest attractions in town at the present time. Lillian Gish, accompanied by her mother, came in from New York, June 4, and was received with great enthusiasm when she appeared on the stage at the Illinois Theatre. Richard Barthelmess, who appears as the Chink in "Broken Blossoms," arrived Sunday, June 8, and also appeared in person at the matinee. The reception given him was worthy of the occasion.

The prices of "Broken Blossoms" range from 25 cents to $2, the latter figure being the price of box seats, while the entire lower floor is held at $1.50 a seat.

D. W. Griffith, at the time of writing, is in Columbus, Ohio, directing the pageant of the big Methodist gathering assembled there. The film made of the scenes will be used by that organization in raising $120,000,000 for propaganda work.

"Auction of Souls" Wins Decided Favor in Chicago

"AUCTION OF SOULS" has been showing to capacity business most of the time at the Bandbox since the opening day. The remarkable picture is well worthy of the largest theatres in Chicago, and it is expected it will appear in these in the near future. Every one who has seen it at the Bandbox is a powerful advertiser of the picture, and the impression that it was not a picture which every one could see is fast disappearing.

The great success made by "Auction of Souls" at the Marcus Loew theatres in New York is now becoming widely known, and there is no doubt that Chicago will give the great picture the attention and patronage it so well deserves.

The writer takes great pleasure in complimenting Colonel William N. Selig on the magnificence and realism of the production.

"True Heart Susie" at Orchestra Hall.

The chief number on the program at Orchestra Hall for the week beginning Sunday, June 8, is "True Heart Susie," an Artcraft picture directed by D. W. Griffith, with Lillian Gish, Clarine Seymour and Robert Harron in the leading roles. The week ending Saturday, June 7, was marked by good business. "Putting It Over," in which Bryant Washburn takes the leading role, was greatly enjoyed by many thousands of people throughout the week.

"Whom the Gods Would Destroy" at Randolph.

The big First National production, "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," ran all last week at the Randolph to capacity business. The critics of the daily press have devoted much space to reviewing the picture, and this has tended to increase the patronage still further.

Exhibitors Mutual Notes.

William J. Clark, president of the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, made a brief stopover in the city Monday morning, June 2, on his way to Grand Rapids from New York. He will remain in his home town for four or five days, and will return to New York in about a week. He was accompanied by H. C. Cornelius, vice president of the organization mentioned.

O. R. Hanson, central division manager for the corporation, returned last week from a trip to Milwaukee, where he appointed H. C. Conway manager of the Milwaukee exchange. Mr. Conway was formerly manager of the Indianapolis branch office, where he has been succeeded by Samuel Saxe, who was formerly salesman for Universal. Mr. Saxe lately returned from France, where he was with the A. E. F. for over a year.

Manager Levey, manager of Mutual's Chicago office, stated last week that business in Chicago was fully up to expectations. "The Man Who Turned White," with H. B. Warner as the star, will be the attraction at the Ziegfeld for the week of Saturday, June 7.

Lawhead Managing Decatur House.

Rex Lawhead, well known in New York and Chicago exhibiting and exchange circles, took over the Lincoln Square Theatre, Decatur, Ill., in February last. This theatre was built by Clarence Waite, a Decatur man, who leased it to a Danville organization. After losing considerable money the leading men of Decatur, headed by John L. Bennett, formed a corporation which took over the lease from the Danville man. Mr. Lawhead was then appointed manager and also became interested as a leaseholder.

The Lincoln Square seats 1,450 persons, and under Mr. Lawhead's management is running high-class features of all the best makes. For regular programs Mr. Lawhead is charging 15 and 20 cents, and for extra attractions shows to a top price of 50 cents.

While in Chicago, several years ago, Mr. Lawhead presented at The Playhouse "Neptune's Daughter," "Traffic in Souls" and the first Williamson Brothers undersea pictures. He is also known as the man who opened Universal booking offices in Chicago for the handling of big features.

Hodkinson Corporation Notes.

E. C. Fielder, director of sales in Chicago and Indianapolis and tributary territory for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has appointed H. E. Belford as traveling salesman in territory adjoining Chicago, and other outside districts. Mr. Belford held a similar position with the American Film Company, Inc., for about a year, and previous to that was connected with the exchange business in this city for six years. He is well known in this territory and has a host of friends.

Mr. Fielder announces that his office closed with the Lubliner & Trinz Circuit last week for "Sahara," featuring Louise Glaum. This feature will be run for one week at the Pantheon and for two days at each of the remaining houses on the circuit.

E. S. Rowley, formerly salesman with General Film in Chicago for over four years, has been appointed assistant to Mr. Fielder in the Chicago office. Mr. Rowley is one of the most popular salesmen in Chicago territory.

Peters Chicago Salesman for American.

H. W. Peters, who has had wide experience as salesman, has been appointed salesman in Chicago and territory adjoining for the American. He was formerly with Unity Photoplays Company and Universal in the same capacity for over five years. Prior to that he managed theatres in Chicago for the Ascher Brothers for three years. Mr. Peters also had considerable experience in the vaudeville business and in circus life, and is well known throughout the entire Middle West. He informed me last week that business for pictures of American make is very brisk at the present time.

A Goldwyn Feature at Randolph.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer have installed "The City of Comrades" at the Randolph, in which Tom Moore is winning high favor with the fans who frequent that busy theatre. This is a Goldwyn offering which has been adapted from Basil King's book.

William N. Selig Goes to Los Angeles.

William N. Selig arrived in the city from New York, Saturday, June 7, and left the following evening for Los Angeles, where he will remain for some time on business.

D. W. Griffith Finishing Another Feature.

D. W. Griffith left for Los Angeles Sunday evening, June 8, where he will complete a feature picture which is already under way.

Baker Signs to Direct Four for International

IT became known this week that George D. Baker, who recently severed relations with Metro, would direct four pictures for International, to be released by Famous Players-Lasky. These four will be Cosmopolitan productions, the first of which will have Marion Davies as its star. Miss Davies will soon finish "April Folly" for Select.

Mr. Baker, it is stated, will start with International on June 27. Fifteen Cosmopolitan productions a year are to be delivered to Paramount, according to the contract, and Robert Leonard will start simultaneously with Mr. Baker on the second picture.

FILM MEN ORGANIZE FOR PROTECTION

Committee Representing Theatres and Exchanges Create a Corporation to Push Their Interests

A NEW organization to be known as the "Affiliated Picture Interests," which will take in motion picture people in all branches of the industry, is being formed in Los Angeles.

A large number of important members of the film industry, including producers, exchangemen and exhibitors, have already signed, and it is believed that as fast as the matter is presented to others they will all become members of the association. There have been two preliminary meetings, and at the first of these meetings a committee on organizattion was appointed consisting of W. H. Clune and Sid Grauman, representing the city theatres; Michel Gore, of the suburban theatres; Michael Narlian and F. E. Hancock, of the Exchange Men's Board of Trade; and Frank E. Garbutt and W. J. Reynolds, of the producers.

This committee prepared incorporation papers, which were submitted and approved at the second meeting, and which will be sent to Sacramento. The corporation, besides taking a deep interest in public, civic and political affairs, will oppose the passage of unjust legislation, and will take steps to bring about the passage of all helpful and just laws.

The corporation will also be enabled to buy and sell goods, wares and merchandise and to hold real property, specifying, however, that "pecuniary profit is not the object of this corporation."

The organization is to endure for fifty years, with Los Angeles as its place of business. There are to be twenty-five directors, and the membership fee is $5. There is no capital stock. Among those who have signed are: Charles H. Christie, Thos H. Ince, Inc., Mack Sennett Comedies, Metro Pictures Corp., H. P. Caulifield, Roy Miller, J. M. Young, Seymour Tally, H. E. Roach, Charles Eyton, Abraham Lehr, Glenn Harper and others.

KID APPEAL REACHES GROWN-UPS

Manager Fischer of Milwaukee's Alhambra Just Ignored Adults in His Exploitation of "Daddy Long Legs"—Converted Lobby Into Interior of Red Schoolhouse

EXHIBITOR judgment of human nature guessed right when George Fisher, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, decided that the matured veneer of years of education, experience and the "long clothes" of grown-ups could be returned to the susceptible age of childhood by a few strokes of a chalk stick in the hands of a capable artist.

Literally, Fischer turned Milwaukee into a City of Children for a week by appealing strictly to the "kid" element in the character of every adult of either sex during his presentation of Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs," first of that star's special feature attractions to be distributed through First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"Let's see," Fischer began, in the discussion of exploitation plans with Eddie Weisfeldt, staff artist for the Alhambra Theatre, "what is there we can create as a lobby display, or for newspaper copy, that will be most reminescent to every adult of his or her childhood days? What is the chief recollection you have of your early efforts to terrorize the neighborhood in which you lived and donned your first long pants?"

Renewing Memories of Childhood.

"A red haired, cross-eyed teacher," Weisfeldt answered. "She never failed to catch me making line sketches of her on my slate or on top of my desk."

"Well, my school day Nemesis wasn't red-haired or cross-eyed, but she made up for it in other ways," Fischer continued. "I don't think there is a grown-up girl or boy, married or single, living in Milwaukee, whose childhood memories cannot be refreshed most quickly by something that will suggest their former school days to them.

"We'll get a lot of blackboards, some first grade size desks, and we'll make the Alhambra lobby look like the First Place of Torture in the Life of Every Kid."

Fortified with a copy of the book, "Daddy Long Legs," Weisfeldt started work on a lobby display that attracted more attention and received more comment than anything Milwaukee exhibitors have attempted in a long time.

Puts School Desks in Lobby.

Fischer believed that the average person would remember the cartoon illustrations in the story of "Daddy Long Legs" more clearly than text excerpts from the story itself. Hence, the two extremely long blackboards, which covered each of the lobby walls, were thoroughly decorated by Weisfeldt with a series of humorous sketches in white chalk.

Two rows of desks gave the finishing touch to the schoolroom atmosphere Mr. Fisher wanted. On top of each desk was a small slate, with a slate pencil attached by string. On each of these slates Weisfeldt drew additional caricatures of the same grotesque shapes as those in the book.

Over the door of the lobby leading into the foyer Mr. Fischer placed a cut-out of the heads of Mary Pickford as Judy Abbott, surrounded by a group of little orphans. The effect was that of making them seem to be peering through the glass paneling at the array of blackboards.

Newspaper Ads Perfect Display.

The first newspaper advertisement for "Daddy Long Legs" appeared on the Wednesday preceding the opening. The text and illustrations carried out the idea in the lobby display. The background for each ad was a slate, on which the copy was lettered in real Judy Abbott style, and supplemented with caricature figures similar to those on the blackboards. The harmony of text, illustration and appeal was perfect. All of the "s" letters were printed backward on the slates, and the other letters had slants peculiarly their own.

In Thursday's ads the same lettering appeared in larger space, with a cartoon of a fat person appearing opposite the tall, gangling figure of "Daddy Long Legs." On the slate also appeared a notice that there would be an added attraction—a ballet by the pupils of Miss Gretchen Berndt. On Friday the ads contained a quaint picture of "any orphan—front view" and "any orphan—back view," drawn on black slate backgrounds, with the text in scrawly white letters.

Ballet a Feature of Program.

The ballet was a decided feature of the program, and served its purpose well in providing a real "kid" atmosphere for the production. A special stage setting was arranged by Mr. Fischer, which gave the ballet a background of real trees when the curtain was raised. The lights were gradually brightened with a sunrise effect, and the children—from five to fifteen years old—danced down the steps amid a storm of applause from every audience.

Without in the least suspecting that they were giving the astute mind of George Fischer abundant food for thought and reflection about the "kid" traits which always are dormant in adults of from twenty to eighty, thousands of curious folk packed the Alhambra lobby to study, read and laugh at the grotesque and novel method of advertising "Daddy Long Legs." The school desks received their due share of attention, while blackboards seemed to have an irresistible lure.

"Which goes to show," commented Mr. Fischer as he checked up the last day's receipts and found that the total for the week had established a new house record, "that we're just a lot of grown-up kids after all."

MINNESOTA OPPOSES DAYLIGHT SAVING

Exhibitors Seek to Divert Public from Outdoor Sports by Making Darkness Encourage Movie-Going

THE Minneapolis Film Board of Trade has taken up the fight of the farmers and cattle raisers of the Northwest to have the daylight saving law repealed. Decision to join sides with the farmers in an effort to bring pressure in Congress against the plan was made at a meeting of the board Monday night, June 2. It is pointed out that this territory, being located in a northern country, gets more daylight than other sections of the United States. During the summer months a large part of the Northwest has daylight under the old time schedule as late as 9.30 p. m. in southern Minnesota, and as late as 10 p. m. in North Dakota and Montana. Under the daylight saving system it does not get dark in a large part of this territory until 10.30 and 11 p. m.

Show Patrons Prefer Outdoors.

Consequently, thousands of picture fans who would ordinarily go to the theatre are busy in their gardens, playing baseball, motoring, or enjoying various outdoor sports, while the farmers, most of whom are not observing the new time schedule, are working late into the night.

Much opposition has developed to the efforts of the farmers and the moving picture men to have the daylight saving law repealed. This opposition comes chiefly from the large cities, where the merchants and big industries are finding the new time schedule an advantage.

Board Starts Propaganda.

At the present time the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade is preparing a propaganda campaign in favor of the repeal of the act. It is having printed a large quantity of literature urging exhibitors of the Northwest to join hands with the farmers in their fight to have the old time restored. This literature will be distributed to exhibitors throughout the territory within the next two weeks. The exhibitors will be asked to communicate with their Representatives and Senators in Congress with a view to defeating the present law.

An effort is also being made to gain the co-operation of other film boards in the country to bring about the desired result.

Logansport Agitated by Sunday Closing Question

THE Sunday closing question, which the Indiana State Legislature failed to act on one way or the other when it was in session earlier in the year, has bobbed up again in Hoosierdom—this time at Logansport.

According to reports, a movement has been started there with a view to closing the motion picture theatres on Sundays, and a committee has been appointed to prepare plans for backing up the movement. It is understood the Union Missionary Society is back of the campaign.

Petitions are to be circulated throughout the city, with a view to obtaining the signatures of all persons who are opposed to the operation of Sunday shows. The petitions will then be presented to the city authorities for their consideration and action.

At the request of the executive committee of the Missionary Society, the ministers of the various churches were asked recently to place the matter before their respective congregations in order to "feel out" the sentiment on the question. The members of the churches were asked to stand if they favored the movement, and it is said that with only few exceptions every member present stood on the question.

Sunday Classes in Washington Houses.

Tom Moore has turned over his Rialto Theatre, at Washington, D. C., for Sunday morning meetings of the Burrall class of the Calvary Baptist Church. Like the organizations meeting at the Crandall theatres, this Sunday school class needed more room, and appealed to the movie man to help. Mr. Moore is going the limit to make the theatre a desirable meeting place. There will be orchestral music and the pipe organ will be used for the class songs.

The Burrall Class was organized in November, 1917, with six girls. It now has a membership of 435 and is constantly growing. It is progressive, and conducts a weekly bulletin of its doings. With the rapid growth of congregations and Sunday school classes and the difficulties faced by the churches in the matter of suitable accommodations, it is probably but a question of time when all of the movie houses will be used for church purposes. The exhibition of pictures do not begin on Sunday afternoons until 3 P. M.

Outlook Bright for Sunday Shows.

Despite opposition of a most vigorous kind the ordinance permitting Sunday baseball in Rochester was passed by the Common Council without a dissenting vote. It had been whispered that such would be the case and now those in a position to know the lay of the land say that the ordinance permitting the moving picture theatres to open will be shot through in the same manner. It seems that the powers that be in the ranks of the political party which has always had things their own way here have been forcibly impressed with the fact that the great mass of the voters want these things. The fact that it is getting near election time makes the voters a real factor.

Hickman Ill with Pneumonia.

Howard Hickman, director of all the Bessie Barriscale features, released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors' Mutual, was in the midst of work on "Tangled Threads" when he contracted pneumonia which sent him to a hospital. Henry Kolker, who was acting in the play, immediately took up the directorial reins and completed the job.

ACTOR-TO-EXHIBITOR SERVICE STARTED

"Big Four" Independent Corporation Uses Open Booking System — Controls All Distribution

IN January of this year when the show world was startled by the formation of the United Artists Association, one of the reasons given for the move for independence by Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith from the limitations of their existing arrangements, was the necessity for a closer relationship between the artists themselves and the exhibitors of the country.

The official statement, issued at that time, read in part:

"A new combination of motion picture stars and producers was formed yesterday, and we, the undersigned, in furtherance of the artistic welfare of the motion picture industry, believing we can better serve the great and growing industry of picture production, have decided to unite our work into one association, and after finishing our existing contracts which are now rapidly drawing to a close, to release our combined productions through our own organization."

Stars Wanted Independence.

"When Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith formed their association, they had in mind, not merely the seeking of a different channel of distribution for their products," says General Manager Hiram Abrams. "It was not their intention to go from one distributing company to another. They intended to depart from all the plans and traditions of then existing distributors, for they felt that nowhere in the industry was there an outlet for their product that would assure to exhibitors the freedom of action that was essential for the proper exploitation of their pictures. Likewise, they felt that their own freedom of action was not assured under contracts that they would be obliged to enter into if their pictures were to be released through outside distributors.

"Only one way seemed open to them; the formation of their own distributing organizations, leaving them free to deal direct with the showmen of America, and enabling them to work hand in hand with the men who exhibited their pictures to the public. On this was built United Artists Corporation, the first and only organization of its kind, in which the master-artists of the screen were to sell their product direct to the exhibitors.

Used Open Booking from Start.

"And what has been the result, so far? In the first place, exhibitors for a long time had demanded genuine open booking, single picture rental that would leave them free to handle pictures as individual units on a basis of pure merit. In answer to this exhibitor demand the United Artists committed themselves to single picture booking, a move that would have been impossible if they had not had their own distributing organization over which they could exercise full and complete control.

"At no time, and under no circumstances, will any productions of United Artists Corporation be handled in any other way than through our own organization. Every exhibitor in the country will at all times know that full and complete control of their productions remain with the United Artists so that in renting the pictures of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith, the exhibitor, in dealing with United Artists Corporation, is working with the producer-artists themselves.

No Outside Interests in Concern.

"Despite innumerable rumors from sources that seek to enhance their own prestige by appearing to have some interest in the operations of United Artists Corporation, I want to state as plainly and emphatically as I can, that no distributing organization, or theatre circuit of any kind or any locality, will have any control or interest whatsoever in the productions of this company. At no time will even the remotest control over our releases pass from our hands. Once and for all, we want to urge exhibitors to ignore absolutely any rumors of this sort, and to remember at all times that this company will deal direct with the exhibitors themselves, either through our home office or through our local distributing depots."

Seattle Starts Advertising Motion Picture Convention

A PUBLICITY campaign for the motion picture convention and ball to be held in Seattle in July was started this week. Stickers are being sent out with the roadmen from all the exchanges. Ad cards and one sheets are also being plastered all over the country in the four Northwest states.

The presence of three stars has already been assured, and several others are considering coming. Acceptances from high state dignitaries, who will lead the grand march with the stars, have also been received.

Arrangements for the holding of the convention and the entertainment of the guests are rapidly being perfected. The Arena and the Hippodrome, which furnish the two largest dancing floors in the city, have been leased for the event. These two buildings, which are separated at the end only by a side street, are to be connected with a canvass covering and the street closed, so that the two buildings will be combined into practically one.

The convention proper closes July 18 with the ball. July 19 will be devoted to the entertainment of the visiting delegates and their women guests. A steamer has been chartered for the day to take them to Bremerton for a clam bake, after which they will be shown about the Navy Yard. From there the steamer will proceed to Tacoma, where the visitors will be the guests of the Tacoma Theatre Managers' Association. They will be taken by automobile to Camp Lewis, where they will be shown all over the camp, then back to Tacoma and a trip around the city, dinner, and finally a moonlight ride back to Seattle.

Buckley Made "Big Four" Sales Head at Kansas City

THAT Hiram Abrams, general manager of United Artists' Corporation, is seeking out a group of specialists to head the distributing depots of the company is further shown this week by the appointment of Harry D. Buckley, of St. Louis, to the post of sales manager of the Kansas City office of the "Big Four."

For the last six years Mr. Buckley has managed the Columbia and Strand theatres of St. Louis, operated by the Cella & Tate interests. Prior to that he managed the Garrick in St. Louis for the Shuberts. In connection with his appointment to the Kansas City office it was stated on behalf of United Artists' Corporation that mere ability to sell film was not the gauge by which its sales organization is to be measured. It is felt that Mr. Buckley will bring to his new work an understanding of exhibitor problems, their limitations and their possibilities that will be of immense value in rendering genuine constructive aid to the theatres in the territory.

BLACKTON ORGANIZES NEW COMPANY

Forms the Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc.—Interests of Old Firm Taken Over—Discusses Plans

J. STUART BLACKTON announces the formation of a new production company, to be called the J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., of which he will be president and director-general. The new corporation is to take over the interests of Blackton Productions, Inc., the independent company organized by the producer two years ago after he severed active connection with the Vitagraph Company, of which he was a founder.

The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., is capitalized at $1,000,000, and though the names of those associated with the producer in the new organization have not been given, it is announced that the new company has the backing of several of New York's influential and financially responsible commercial representatives.

Plans Six to Ten Pictures a Year.

In discussing the details of his new company, which is in line with recent announcements concerning his production expansion plans, Commodore Blackton said: "The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., is naturally a source of gratification to me since it realizes many film production ideas of long standing. It is my plan to make from six to ten special pictures annually, supervising all the productions made and continuing to personally direct the superfeatures we shall release.

"We have acquired valuable property adjoining my present studios in Brooklyn, which will enable us to greatly increase our working space along plans already drawn up.

Personnel of Staff.

"Associated with me in the work of the new organization will be Martin Justice, the artist, whom I have engaged to direct some of our new productions and to collaborate with me as art director on all of our features; Jack Martin, my right-hand man, who will continue in charge of our studio and technical staff; my son, J. Stuart Blackton, Jr., who will work in the executive offices, and Stanley Olmstead, who will be the chief of our scenario department.

"Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon will play the leads in the special features; the comedy roles will be handled by Eddie Dunn and "Lefty" Alexander; Charles and Violet Blackton will appear in juvenile roles from time to time, and it is probable that I shall put several other members of my present company under contract.

"O'Brien, Maievinsky & Driscoll, my attorneys, who engineered the commercial details of the new organization for me, have the placing of distribution for our entire product in hand, and are now negotiating with representative interests for these rights."

"Moonshine" Name of First Release.

With this news of the new organization Commodore Blackton also announced that its first release will be "Moonshine," which the producer now has well under way. "Moonshine" has until this announcement been referred to as "the nameless Blackton picture." For obvious reasons the title was withheld, and is now divulged for the first time. "Moonshine" is described as a human comedy-drama, dealing with a timely subject.

The story, which promises to be a surprise, was written by Mr. Blackton, and the continuity is the collaborative work of himself and Stanley Olmstead. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are featured, with the supporting cast including Charles and Violet Blackton, Van Dyke Brooke, Eddie Dunn, "Lefty" Alexander, Fanny Rice, Madame Margaret Barry, Julia Swayne Gordon (loaned by the Vitagraph company), Louis Dean, Richard Milasch, Leo Delaney and Jay Strong.

In line with this first announcement of the plans of the J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., is the previous news of the producer's acquisition of rights to "Dawn," by Eleanor H. Porter, and to "Phantoms," by Wallace Irwin, two of the feature stories to be screened under the new banner.

Billy Meck Says Soldiers Make the Best Audiences

A FORMER manager of the New Broadway Theatre, in Philadelphia, Billy Meck, who is official photographer for the Y. M. C. A. on overseas service, writes the following letter to the World correspondent in that city:

Biarritz, May 12, 1919.

Just received a copy of the old reliable Moving Picture World, and was more than pleased to get it, as I had not seen a copy since December. I was sure surprised to see myself in there with an account of my work over here.

I am having the pleasantest time of my life, entertaining the boys in khaki, who make the best audience I have ever faced. The Y. M. C. A. now has a number of large trucks with Delco portable electric plants and Power's 6A machines, which cover the most remote camps at least once a week. They show five to eight reels a night.

I am now at Bourges, acting as camera director. Under my supervision are fifty-five machines (stationary) and two Delco trucks, and they keep me busy. I will possibly have to remain in France until October, and then may accept a contract to go to China for a year. Will you kindly give my best regards to all my friends around the film row.

In each district he will make short trips to the theatres of the first-run exhibitors in company with the branch managers. It is expected that Mr. Rogers' present tour will cover about two weeks, after which he will return to New York to map out a tour of the Middle West branches.

PEGGY WOOD, late star of "Maytime," has just broken a record by signing with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to play lead for Will Rogers in a series of pictures now under way in the Culver City, Cal., studios.

Miss Wood has broken a record because, never before in her history as an actress has she played more than a block away from the Shubert Theatre. Now she is taking a long jump to the Coast.

Peggy Wood has scored a hit in many stage successes, notably in "Naughty Marietta," "Hello Broadway," "Young America," "Love O' Mike" and "Maytime." This will be her first appearance on the screen.

Ingersoll Joins Goldwyn's Press Staff.

The newest addition to the publicity staff of the Goldwyn organization is George Ingersoll, who has been selected by Ralph Block to take charge of the press work in connection with Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc.

FRANK G. HALL, president of Independent Sales Corporation, has acquired the rights to United States and Canada to the big seven-reel special, "The Challenge of Chance," featuring the world's heavyweight champion, Jess Willard, who on July 4 will defend his title against Jack Dempsey at Toledo, Ohio. "The Challenge of Chance" was completed recently under the direction of Harry Revier. The story and scenario were written by Roy Summerville. The first print of the special reaches New York this week. And as Fred L. Wilke, president of the Continental Pictures Corporation, producers of the picture, said: "With Jess Willard, the most advertised figure ever shown in a theatre, now at the height of his fame and preparing to defend his title against the world on July 4 in a role that radiates strength in physique and personality and in a picture crowded with power, strength, size and quality, there is not a chance for the exhibitor to keep the S. R. O. down during a performance."

To Open on Broadway.

The deal which was closed Monday, June 9, with Mr. Wilke, acting for Continental Pictures, and Mr. Hall for the Hall interests, gives Mr. Hall the exclusive rights of distribution for the Willard picture to the United States and Canada. Immediately after the signing of the papers, Mr. Hall commenced negotiations for a Broadway house in which to open the Willard picture for an indefinite run and expects to be in a position to announce the time, place and date of opening in the near future. Harry P. Diggs, exploitation manager for the Hall interests, has set on foot one of the most extensive advertising and publicity campaigns ever inaugurated in the interests of a Broadway opening. Following the completion of the plans for the opening on Broadway, Mr. Diggs will leave for Chicago, where he will arrange for the opening in one of the prominent theatres of the Loop district.

To Launch Big Billboard Campaign.

Prior to the release of the picture a national billboard campaign will be launched covering every centre of importance from coast to coast and this campaign will be supplemented by a newspaper campaign which has been carried on for the past several weeks in the news columns and sport pages of the dailies.

In the principal supporting role opposite Willard appears Arline Pretty. Albert Hart, one of the screen's best known character men, is seen in a strong role in support of the champion.

Picture Cost More Than $178,000.

The production of "The Challenge of Chance" is said to have cost more than $178,000. The features of the production are two fight scenes in which Willard displays the prowess that has won for him the world's title in the prize ring and a racing scene which is a true picture of the famed Kentucky Derby with all the spirit of the racing track as exhibited in the Blue Grass country. The scenes were taken on and near Willard's ranch in the West, and Director Revier is said to have given the picture an atmosphere and a quota of actionable drama that is in keeping with the pep displayed by the big fellow when he dons the fighting togs and taps his hands for a battle in the prize ring.

Universal to Institute Short Subject Division

WITHIN the last year, producers have realized the necessity of the shorter subject to balance the feature program and have installed complete short subject departments. Universal was among the first to do this, but Universal believes it is the first producing company to divide its selling agencies into divisions for the selling of the shorter subjects. This plan has been under consideration for some time, and was recently announced by Carl Laemmle, president.

"Universal's sales," Mr. Laemmle said, "have increased astoundingly within the last year. And the shorter reels were among the increases to such an extent that we have deemed it advisable to divide the sales forces of our exchanges into separate divisions."

Joe Schnitzer, general sales manager of the Universal; Art Schmidt, of the Cleveland office; S. J. Goldsmith, of the Chicago branch, and Gus Metzger, of the Portland exchange are now covering each of Universal's exchanges in the United States and installing and perfecting the new selling plan.

Miami Valley League Opens Dayton Headquarters Soon

THE new rooms recently taken over by the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League in the Lindsay building, Dayton, will have a formal opening Tuesday, June 17. John Seifert, president of the League, stated that over one thousand dollars had been spent for office furniture and equipment for the benefit of the members of the League. The suite occupies four rooms on the ninth floor of the building and is easily accessible from the downtown section of Dayton. It is planned to make this office the central headquarters for all of the state of Ohio, which is gradually being brought into the League.

A syndicate controlling three theatres in Chillicothe, Ohio, gave out a statement friendly to the League last week, and it is thought that this firm will have joined before time of going to press. A summer headquarters and outing place has not been found as yet.

Since the announcement was made one week ago that salesmen would be allowed to join the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League upon payment of a small fee eleven "knights of the road" have paid their yearly dues and will be allowed the use of the rooms when they open June 17, 1919.

Otherwise he'd be missing out on—but suffice it to say that the title of this Paramount-Sennett, "No Mother to Guide Him." is particularly appropriate.

ALLENS NOW PREDOMINATE IN CANADA

Acquisition of Schuberg Interests in Western Provinces Adds Eleven Theatres to Circuit

ONE of the most important deals consummated in the Canadian field for many years took place this week, when negotiations were completed between Jule and Jay J. Allen, who operate the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., the Monarch Film Company, Ltd., and the Allen Theatre Enterprises; and John A. Schuberg, of western Canada, whereby Mr. Schuberg disposed of his vast interests in his large chain of theatres in western Canada, and all of his interest in the First National franchise for western Canada.

Mr. Schuberg and his associates owned and operated three first-run theatres in Winnipeg—the Province, Bijou and Gayety—as well as being interested in eleven of the leading theatres in the Province of British Columbia, which includes three first-run theatres in Vancouver—the Rex, Dominion and Globe—as well as two first-run theatres in Victoria. He had interests in theatres in Nanaimo and elsewhere.

Allens Have Four in Winnipeg.

In Winnipeg, the Allens will now control four first-run theatres, as they now operate the Dominion as part of their long chain of theatres.

The acquisition of this string of theatres, strengthens the Allens in their present position in western Canada and gives them a strong list of first-class houses from coast to coast.

Schuberg's interests in the First National Exchange of western Canada, which are taken over by Jule and Jay J. Allen, practically give the latter control of the First National releases in that territory.

Building Ten Theatres.

For the past year, Messrs. Jule and Jay J. Allen have been the largest theatre operators in the Dominion of Canada. Plans were announced this spring for the erection of fifteen new houses to be built during the current year. Ten of these are well under way and the other five will be announced just as soon as pending negotiations are completed.

The acquisition of Mr. Schuberg's interests in the West will not effect the plans of the Allens for the construction of new houses in both Winnipeg and Vancouver. Construction of the Winnipeg theatre has been started, but the work has been temporarily delayed on account of the strike in that city. The Allens plan to rush this work as soon as the labor difficulties have been settled.

The site for the new Allen Theatre, in Vancouver, has been selected, and the property has been arranged for at a price of $200,000. Construction plans are well under way and work will be started as soon as the plans are approved.

Control Forty-five Theatres.

With the addition of the eleven new western theatres the Allens now have forty-five of the best houses in the Dominion in active operation or rapidly nearing completion. This is one of the largest chains of first-class theatres in the world under one control through one organization, and this virtually gives the Allens control of the Canadian situation, with one or more houses in every city of importance.

Negotiations between the parties concerned have been proceeding for over six months, and it was through the efforts of H. J. Allen, of the Allens' western organization, that the deal was finally brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

Newark Now Has Million Dollar Film Corporation

WITH the filing of articles of incorporation, last week, with the Secretary of State, at Trenton, Newark becomes the home of a new million dollar film corporation. The latest addition to the ranks of film producers is known as the United States Film Corporation of New Jersey. The papers were filed by the registered agent of the corporation, Max A. Ern, with offices at 20 Clinton street, Newark. Besides producing motion pictures, the company's charter allows it to operate theatres and conduct a general amusement business.

The personnel of the new concern is John Channing Bernard, of New York, president and director-general, and Robert Braitsch, of Newark, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Bernard has had considerable experience along theatrical lines, and particularly the motion picture end of the business.

Opens Offices in Globe Building.

The company has opened temporary offices in the Globe building, 800 Broad street, but after July 1, will be located in the Proctor Theatre building, 116 Market street, Newark. It is the intention of the concern to build a modern studio in Newark in which to produce its pictures.

The policy, as outlined by President Bernard in an interview with the representative of the Moving Picture World, includes the production of six five-reel pictures a year, six two-reel comedies a year, and several one-reel novelties such as a semi-monthly traveling picture, a weekly release of New Jersey news, etc.

The first release will feature Paul Panzer, who has severed his connections with Pathe, in "Souls Beckoning." This is the initial five-reel feature.

Zukor at Kansas City for Newman Theatre Opening

THE big event in moving picture circles for the Kansas City territory the past week was the opening of the Newman Theatre.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, made an address, complimenting the people of this community on the wonderful accomplishment of Mr. Newman. Will Rogers, a Goldwyn star, and Wallace Reid, of Mr. Zukor's company, were the representatives of the acting profession.

The opening took place June 6. It had been suitably heralded in newspaper display space and in news stories; and by 4 p. m. those who wished to be the first to see the new house were forming in a line which stretched for more than two blocks in the busiest part of the city. The audience for the second show was not seated until nearly half past ten, when several hundred persons were unable to get in.

Management Presented with Flowers.

Flowers had been coming to the theater all day—bouquets sent by producers, exchanges, fellow exhibitors and business men friends of Mr. Newman. These were arranged quickly and artistically in the auditorium, fitting in with the decorative scheme for the opening night, and provided an additional element of attractiveness to the scene.

Kansas City people saw at this opening a class of entertainment that was in some ways new, and yet which seemed to be so exactly what they wanted, that it seemed vaguely familiar. The lighting effects on the screen with which the entertainment opened were good. The picture was "For Better, For Worse." Forbstein's orchestra, of forty pieces, rendered music that the audience was accustomed to hearing only at formal musical events. Mlle. Rhea, a Kansas City dancer, and Mlle. Alys Michot, soprano, supplied numbers on the program.

Following the last performance, Mr. Newman entertained a few friends and business associates.

Field Carmichael Joins Pathe.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces the appointment of Field Carmichael as manager of the Los Angeles branch. Mr. Carmichael left for Los Angeles Wednesday, June 11. He has been in the amusement business since he was twelve years old. After several years on the road with circuses and theatrical troupes he entered the picture industry about eight years ago. He has been with Fox for the past five years, and has just returned from an extended European trip for that concern.

GOLDWYN REVIVES USE OF CATALOGUE

Issue of Elaborate Film List Is Reminiscent of Past and Indicates Present Worth of Pictures

PERHAPS you remember the film catalogues of yesteryear. You do if you were in the game in the days when the release program was still unthought of and releases approximated anywhere from 300 to 1,000 feet. Back in those days some of the old-fashioned manufacturers—of seven or eight years' standing—issued really important looking volumes of several hundred pages, listing all the films they had and sometimes film they did not have.

Then came the contract system and the stated release days and the catalogues were promptly dropped and the manufacturers tried to help you forget yesterday's release in the hope of selling you tomorrow's issue. There may be some old catalogues still extant, but they are merely curiosities.

Reissue Growing in Importance.

But of late the business has undergone another change. No longer is the merit of a film judged by the date. It is realized that some of the productions of last year and earlier times still possess the merit which helped put the pictures in the position they occupy today, and the reissue has become a recognized factor in the business, and a very valuable one to houses where capacity or location require moderation in film appropriations. To meet the new condition the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has issued what is practically the first catalogue of film to be published in nearly ten years. It is the first, but merely the forerunner of many others.

Lists of old favorites have been published of late, but this appears to be the first effort to prepare a catalogue rather than a list, and appearing as the June 15 issue of The Goldwynner, this is really a catalogue of all of the Goldwyn releases.

Book Is Expensively Finished.

And to mark the difference between the old days and the present, the new catalogue is a work of real merit and not merely a compilation of releases. It runs only twelve pages, for there are fewer titles to list than in the old fifty foot days, but the comparison in typography with, for example, the old Lubin catalogue, is interesting.

The publication is on heavy paper of cream tint, printed in black and picked out with an ornamental border in green. Each title is accompanied by a cut showing the star or a group from the play, and lists the length, star, title, author, director and the chief players in the support, as well as giving a paragraph to the story.

There are thirty releases in the "star" series, followed by the twenty-six productions made in the first year, which are more briefly treated and yet are fully explained. Two more pages are given the special productions, such as "The Eternal Magdalene" and "The Border Legion," with another page for the Louis Bennison series, with a page divided between Bill Parson's Capitol comedies and the Ford Educationals to date.

Conciseness Attained.

Compactness rather than size was the object aimed at, and this assuredly is achieved. There are no long descriptions, no superfluous adjectives. It is a brief summary of slightly more than two years' work in such small compass that it occupies scarcely any desk room and yet gives the details on 62 features, 3 super-features, 30 comedies and 23 educationals. It is much in small compass and together with the admirable designing and excellent typographical work, it forms a standard for the new series of catalogues to be expected. Others may be more elaborate in bulk and detail, but none can be more compact nor, for that matter, attractive.

Is Contrast with Previous Issues.

It places at the disposal of the reader the entire summary of the Goldwyn activities to date and it emphasizes sharply the difference between present day methods and the days back of 1908, both in production and advertising methods. In those old days the scenario editor, where there was one, was also press agent, publicity man and advertising manager, and even at that he was not always fully occupied. When Edison started to beat the Vitagraph semi-monthly catalogue by putting a red border around the cuts, it was felt that a great step in advance had been made. Today this "elaborate" advertising would be considered archaic compared with such a sightly publication as Hunt Stromberg has turned out for Goldwyn. And in the same way the productions listed in those old catalogues would compare with the sumptuous presentations of today.

Films Now Have Permanent Value.

But more important than all the rest, it marks the coming of a new system of doing business. No longer will a production be made and forgotten. The best product of each company will remain in demand, just as published fiction appears and either takes its place on the shelves or falls into the obscurity it deserves because of its lack of merit. The good productions of the past will no longer be dug up to be offered in a limited series or retitled and reissued. The product will be catalogued and remain at the disposal of the showmen, and the program of tomorrow will not necessarily be made up of the releases of tomorrow, but old favorites will be played back in the lesser houses just as the Broadway hits of today will find their place in the stock houses throughout the country next season.

The Goldwyn catalogue is something more than a novelty. It is a sign of the times and a forerunner of a more intelligent booking plan which shall include novelties for the big houses and a reliable list of proved plays for those less able to afford first run prices.

KREMER CLOSES BIG DEAL WITH SPOOR

Secures All Essanay Subjects Handled by General Film—Will Release Them on the State Right Market

VICTOR KREMER announces that he has taken over the entire library of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company's pictures handled by the General Film Company, and within a short time will be ready to release a sufficient quantity of film to supply exhibitors with complete programs of different length subjects for a long period.

Mr. Kremer also advises that arrangements have been made with another company which will enable him to release also an entirely different lot of productions sufficient to make up entirely different programs, details of which will be furnished later.

Victor Kremer.

By his deal with Mr. Spoor, president of the Essanay Company, Mr. Kremer has obtained several million feet of negatives and positive prints. These productions will be disposed of on a state rights basis, and buyers will be able to secure either the entire lot for their respective territories or any portion, if they may desire. As the productions are in various lengths, running from one to six reels, of comedies, dramas, fables, series and features, with various well known stars, it will enable the exchanges to arrange complete programs sufficient for a large number of entire performances.

To Make New Prints.

This is said to be one of the largest film deals ever contracted for by a single individual, embracing subjects running into the thousands. It is announced that new prints will be made and up to date publicity and exploitation aids of all kinds prepared.

In addition to the Essanay subjects, the other assortment of films previously referred to which will be distributed by Mr. Kremer, will enable him to supply two different exchanges in each territory with materials for complete programs without conflicting with one another.

For the present, Mr. Kremer will make his headquarters in Chicago with branches in New York and on the Pacific Coast, and he intends to release simultaneously in every film center in the country.

BRAY STUDIOS, INC., TO REORGANIZE

Million Dollar Corporation Backs Pictograph, Secret Processes and Industrial Production

THE announcement that the Bray Studios, Inc., is being enlarged to a million-dollar corporation is one of the most significant moves in the industry. It marks the entry of a new faith in the value of the educational film—it marks the beginning of the commercialization of the animated drawing and the development of a field in which the ground merely has been broken. It means also that the production of the educational and industrial film will be entered into on a big scale, and that a radically improved Greater Bray Pictograph will be issued.

During the past year the Bray Studios, Inc., has given its attention largely to war activities, especially to producing pictures for training the military recruits of the draft army, and providing them with competent officers. By means of new and secret processes developed by the Bray personnel, thousands of soldiers were given intensive training in modern warfare in a remarkably short time.

Secret Processes Now Released.

The patents of the Bray Studios, which were placed at the disposal of the Government during the war, are now permitted to be used for entertainment purposes, and the secret processes of animation, some of which have already made their bow to the public, will be turned into Pictograph channels, and to the illustration of scientific and other serious subjects as well as into the field of comedy. It is even possible that certain forms of the drama may find successful interpretation by means of newly developed processes of the animated drawing invented at the Bray Studios, Inc. In fact, the field for the animated cartoon as recently demonstrated seems almost unlimited.

J. R. Bray, of the Bray Studios, Inc., was the first man to foresee the possibilities of the animated cartoon, and it was the Bray Studios, Inc., that originated the moving picture comedy cartoon. Since 1914, when he decided to devote his time to the development of the idea, he has advanced steadily toward the big goal, associating himself with other talented artists of the pen, until now his evident accomplishments and devotion to his art have brought him the well deserved reward—capital for the unhampered development of a useful art.

Under the new organization the staff of the Bray Studios is being enlarged, and increased facilities for novelty work are being added to the studio equipment.

The Greater Bray Pictographs are to be released to the theatres in September, under a new distribution arrangement, which will permit the maximum development of the single reel magazine as a star attraction.

Armand Kaliz in Pictures Again.

The part of "Count Zoulack" in "The Temperamental Wife," the first of the Constance Talmadge First National series of pictures, will be played by Armand Kaliz, who has just canceled five weeks of his vaudeville contract with his co-partner, Amelia Stone, in order to make this special picture. Mr. Kaliz was last seen on Broadway at the Palace Theatre, and previous to that with Fay Bainter in "The Kiss Burglar," and in "Going Up." Some of his recent pictures have been "The Zero Hour," with June Elvidge, and "Get a Divorce," with Billie Burke.

Attractive Campaign Book for First Rothapfel Unit

AN attractive press book has been prepared by the Rothapfel Pictures Corporation to assist exhibitors in their publicity and advertising campaigns on the First Rothapfel Unit. The cover bears a replica in green and gold of the elaborate design used in the advertising inserts published in the Moving Picture World. The inside cover bears an attractive ad on a reverse plate while other advertising cuts and layouts are shown throughout the book.

Among the other items of interest and value are a sketch of Samuel L. Rothapfel, suggestions regarding exploitation, synopses of the various parts of the completed unit, ready-prepared newspaper notices, reproductions of the lithographs, list of accessories, and opinions of well-known critics throughout the country regarding the first Rothapfel Unit.

How "Our Boys" Got the Movies.

The illustration below is from an exceedingly interesting article by Homer Croy, entitled "The Movie of the Rhine," which appeared in a prominent magazine May 24.

This article should be read by every one who has the welfare of the motion picture at heart. It is an American article. It is an American machine in that cart—one of the many Power's Cameragraphs that went overseas—and it serves to show what American motion pictures did for the boys, and how they ministered to them in the hour of need.

In this picture the entire equipment is not shown. Only the projector appears—the main thing—sturdy and strong to withstand the unusual, wearing conditions; the gas engine used in developing the electric current being out of sight.

Here is what may be termed an itinerant theatre, traveling from place to place as the occasion demanded, bringing relief and well earned relaxation to our boys, and despite the primitive surroundings giving them a Broadway show for all that.

As Mr. Croy well says: "Wherever the American flag goes there goes the motion picture; and long may she wave!"

Whitaker Is Made Select's Eastern Representative

THE announcement is made by General Manager Sam E. Morris, of Select Pictures Corporation, that V. P. Whitaker, formerly branch manager of Select's Washington exchange, has been promoted to the position of Eastern representative, which berth in the Select's organization has been created especially for Mr. Whitaker.

Manager Whitaker has had charge of Select's Washington branch continuously from the early days of the Select organization until the present, having relinquished this position Saturday, June 7, and entering immediately upon the duties of his new position as Eastern representative. Mr. Whitaker has been since Sunday, June 8, at Select headquarters in New York City, conferring with President Lewis J. Selznick regarding Select policies and work to be covered in the new field.

Mr. Whitaker will have under his charge the entire territory east of the Mississippi River. Traveling out of the home office, Mr. Whitaker expects to keep in the field almost continuously.

FOX BRANCH HEADS HOLD CONVENTION

Decide on Policy for Season of 1919-20 at New York Meeting—To Make Announcement June 15

DISTRICT branch managers of the Fox Film Corporation are en route to their homes in all parts of the United States and Canada after attendance in New York last week at the fifth annual convention of the William Fox organization.

The policy of the company for the season of 1919-20 was decided at the convention and simultaneous announcement of details will be made by the managers soon after their return home. June 15 has been fixed as the date for outlining the plan to exhibitors.

Convention sessions were held this year in the ballroom of the Pennsylvania Hotel, beginning with the morning of June 2 and continuing, morning and afteroon, through the week. The covention was presided over by Mr. Fox and Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager. At the executive table were John C. Eisele, treasurer; Jack G. Leo, vice president, and Herman Robbins, assistant general manager.

Bright Outlook for Next Season.

In his opening address, Mr. Fox spoke of the conclusion of the war as affording wonderful opportunities for motion pictures throughout the world, and contrasted this year's convention with that of 1918 when the Fox organization, the industry and the nation were interested above all things else in doing what they could to bring the world war to a successful end. The speaker referred briefly to his recent trip to Europe and declared that despite newspaper reports there were many evidences abroad of returning prosperity. In America, he said, we have more wealth than we ever have had and the outlook for 1919-20 is that the season will be the most prosperous in the history of the motion picture industry.

Delegates Entertained Evenings.

No convention sessions were held during the evenings, these being given over to the entertainment of the delegates. Tuesday night the managers attended the performance of "Up in Mabel's Room" at the Eltinge Theatre. Wednesday night they saw "Monte Cristo, Jr." at the Winter Garden and the "Midnight Whirl" at the Century Grove. The annual beefsteak dinner was held Thursday night at Castle Cave. Friday afternoon the managers were guests of honor at the laying of the cornerstone of the new William Fox Building, Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth streets and Tenth avenue, and Saturday was given over to conferences with the general manager at the administration offices in West Forty-sixth street.

HELEN HOLMES TO STAR IN NEW SERIAL

This Intrepid Player Will Be Presented by S-L-K Serial Corporation in Fifteen Episode Thriller

AN important news event of the past week is the announcement of the formation of the S-L-K Serial Corporation, organized for the purpose of presenting Helen Holmes in a fifteen episode "thriller" of two reels each. The name of the author responsible for this latest serial has not yet been divulged, but it is said it will be a surprise to the entire motion picture industry, as he has an international reputation, and incidentally, this marks his first work for the screen.

Helen Holmes.

Helen Holmes, to be presented as the star of the S-L-K Serial, is one of the most popular performers in this type of film on the screen. During the past five years, she has acquired a reputation as one of the most daring serial actresses in the field.

Beginning her screen career with Keystone more than five years ago, her work attracted the attention of the Kalem organization, then one of the important factors in the field. With this company, Miss Holmes appeared in the first railroad serial ever filmed, entitled "The Hazards of Helen." The popularity achieved by her in this production was responsible for the issuance of two other railroad serials, namely, "The Girl in the Game" and "The Railroad Raiders," in both of which she starred. Her latest appearances have been in "The Lass of the Lumberland" and "The Lost Express."

Miss Holmes is very versatile. She has written some of the serials in which she played, and also directed several episodes of her last production, while her director, J. P. MacGowan, was in a hospital.

The S-L-K Serial Corporation plan to make this one of the biggest and most elaborate screen serials yet produced, and will conduct an extensive exploitation campaign designed to make Miss Holmes one of the best known of serial stars.

Work will be started on the initial episode within the next two weeks, at which time, the name of the story, author, director and supporting cast will be announced.

Douglas Fairbanks Opens New Studio at Hollywood

WORD comes out of the West that Douglas Fairbanks is going at the making of his first independent production like a whirlwind. He has opened his big, new studio, and from all the signs about the place more real money is being spent for the new picture than has ever before gone into the making of a Fairbanks release. Now that he is to market his pictures himself through United Artists' Corporation it is evident that he is going to put the money that would ordinarily go to the outside distributor into the production itself.

The new studio occupies fifteen acres of ground and is situated at the foot of a range of Hollywood mountains. It has a big indoor stage, an adjoining outdoor stage, with a number of acres set aside for special sets. The first of these sets—a little village—has been erected for the present production at a cost of about $40,000.

Surrounding the studio are beautiful lawns and flower gardens. The mechanical equipment of the studio is said to offer every modern device for perfect picture-making.

ANIMATED FIGURES USED IN LOBBY

Plaza Theatre, San Diego, Uses Cut-Outs, Which Move Heads and Arms, to Boom "Cannibals" Film

A REMARKABLE demonstration of the almost limitless possibilities of properly exercised originality in lobby displays and in the "playing up" of a picture is afforded by the work of Manager Bishop, of the Plaza Theatre, San Diego, Cal., in featuring Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors-Mutual. The films had a record-breaking run of a week at the theatre, and the intelligent showmanship of the manager had much to do with the success which came to his house.

Animated Cut-Outs Used.

One of the most interesting phases of the Plaza lobby exhibition was the use of life-size cannibal figures in cut-outs that were put into motion by mechanical contrivances. One figure was that of a giant cannibal swinging a large club. The arm in which the club swung was made to raise slowly and then quickly drop as though the savage was about to batter in the head of an enemy.

In another corner of the lobby four cannibal heads were placed behind a screen of palm leaves. They were arranged so that the heads would slowly rise behind the leaves, much as savages peering out of the bush, and would, after gazing a moment at the spectators, suddenly drop from sight.

Much Realism Shown.

Real grass mats, palm leaves, bows and arrows, and spears were used in decorating the several posters and photographs which were placed about the entrance, and they gave realism to the whole layout. The secret of the successful showing is apparently found in the fact that the manager was careful in the details of his display and liberal in its extent.

Picture Corporations Will Have Charity Gifts Taxed

MOTION picture and other corporations are not to be permitted to deduct contributions to charity or war work made by them from gross income, in figuring income and excess profits taxes. The regulations of the Bureau of Internal Revenue to this effect were sustained by a decision of the Attorney General on May 19. A number of inquiries concerning the deductibility of these taxes have come to the Washington Bureau of the Moving Picture World.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue announces that the tax on contributions cannot be made the subject of a bona fide claim for abatement, and all such claims filed will be promptly rejected. The Commissioner feels that it is only just to corporations that they be advised in advance of filing their returns on June 15, that corporations deducting contributions from gross income, knowing that such deductions are not permissible under the regulations, may subject themselves to a penalty of five per cent. of the amount of tax improperly withheld, and also run the risk of prosecution and of a 50 per cent. additional assessment for filing false or fraudulent returns. Furthermore, the withholding of tax due on contributions improperly deducted may result in the taxpayer being declared in default with respect to the second installment of tax due on June 15, which would make all taxes payable on 1918 income immediately due.

Corporations should proceed in accordance with existing regulations and pay the full amount of tax due without deduction for contributions. Any corporation which questions the validity of these regulations may test them by filing claim for refund and bringing suit in the manner provided by law.

BIG U FILM EXCHANGE
1600 Broadway, New York
June 9, 1919.

Editor,
Moving Picture World:

I read your article published in the Moving Picture World, issue of June 14th, entitled "Don't Treat the Road Men Roughly."

I am certainly grateful to you, and I believe that everybody in the sales end of the exchange business ought to give you a vote of thanks for mentioning the manner in which salesmen are received at different theatres. I trust that you will dwell on this subject in a good many more such interesting articles, as they will benefit everybody in the industry.

The salesmen report to me that they have to transact their business with the exhibitors in the lobby of the theatre, or on the corner up against a lamp-post, or they have to chase him around the theatre and hold on to him by his coat-lapels, before he will finally give them an audience to explain what their purpose of calling on him might be.

S. ZIERLER,
General Sales Manager.

Jans Will Buy Negatives or Entire World Rights

WE ARE now in the market to buy negatives and entire world rights on any good screen production," declared F. E. Backer, general sales manager for Jans Productions, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

"Mr. Jans determined to take this step some time ago, and our plans were made accordingly. Any completed motion picture of special caliber will be bought outright and we will pay spot cash for the right productions.

Spot Cash for World Rights.

"The days where a producer had to wait long for his money while the territories were being slowly disposed of are now dead and gone, we believe," continued Mr. Backer. "We encourage the making of high class productions by offering spot cash for the entire world rights, and the better the picture, the better the price we shall be only too glad to pay.

"H. F. Jans knows his business thoroughly. He is at present the holder of Metro, Nazimova and Rolfe franchises for New Jersey, but he has also secured New Jersey rights for other big special motion picture productions, such as "The Unpardonable Sin," "Stolen Orders," "Hearts of Men," etc.

"The big success attending his recent purchases for the United States rights on the Tom Mix single reelers from Selig, and single reel Ham and Bud comedies from Kalem, finally convinced Mr. Jans that he could make just a success as a cash buyer for the entire world rights on good pictures. And the faster they come the better H. F. Jans will be pleased."

Frank Hall to Distribute "Film Letter Box" Feature

FRANK C. HALL closed a deal this week whereby he controls the exclusive distributing rights for the United States and Canada to the Screen Letter Box, the big-little feature, the idea for which was conceived by Morris Kashin, exhibitor and theatre manager, and which was produced by Jack Cohn. The first release of this subject, one a week, will be placed in the hands of the Film Clearing House, Inc., exchanges, Mr. Hall's distributing medium, July 15, and each week thereafter.

Embodies Questions and Answers.

The Screen Letter Box, according to Messrs. Kashin and Cohn, is the result of a study of box-office conditions by Mr. Kashin, produced with the idea of giving to the exhibitor and public an attractive short subject, which at the same time advertises the theatre in which it is shown.

As described by Mr. Kashin, the man who conceived the idea, the Screen Letter Box is a series of questions and answers to the public. "Not alone will cold type be used to awaken the interest," said Mr. Kashin, "but the patrons of the theatres will be answered through the medium of animated cartoons, illustrating every question answered. Another feature of this offering is the showing of actual scene is enacted by artists to demonstrate the point wished to be brought out."

Will Localize the Subject.

The Screen Letter Box will be localized and special prints made for the various territories. In this manner questions asked by the individual patrons of any theatre will be answered and the film will give all the appearances of having been made specially for the theatre offering it.

Whooping Cough Worrying Showmen.

Exhibitors in Washington, D. C., are becoming anxious over the whooping cough situation, and the rapid increase in the number of cases reported to the Health Department is causing considerable worry as to what steps may be taken in the future to restrict public gatherings.

It is a violation of the law for any person with whooping cough to go into motion picture houses, street cars or other places where large numbers of people congregate, and the Health Officer has announced his intention of seeing that this law is complied with.

MUNICIPAL THEATRE OWNERSHIP FAILS

So Experience Has Taught W. Barrington Miller in New Zealand, Country of Advanced Theories

THE Socialist doctrine of municipal or state ownership of theatres will not pick up any headway if W. Barrington Miller, of Sydney, Australia, for five years managing director of Union Theatres and Australasian Films, Ltd., can do his bit in frustrating the socializing of amusement.

Attracted by an article in the Moving Picture World of June 7, concerning the operations of the film Bolshevists in Norway, Mr. Miller was moved to express his views to a representative of the World on the total failure of municipal ownership of motion picture theatres in New Zealand, where his activities have given him experience of the first water.

New Zealand Bold in New Ideas.

Although Mr. Miller has retired from Union Theatres and Australasian Films, in which he was associated with Harry G. Musgrove, and is taking a "vacation" of a year, his interest in the industry could not let him sit back and see the communistic idea in amusement ownership prosper. At the Hotel Astor, in his room whose photographic decorations bore evidence of the fact that he had been having a good time at the Chaplin studios on the Coast during his visit there, Mr. Miller put his best shock troops into wordy war with the Bolshevists.

"Yes, I have seen a little of the working of moving picture theatres under municipal ownership," he said, "and I cannot believe the movement will succeed in any country.

"In the amusement business you must have competition and capable and independent managament to secure the best results. New Zealand, as you probably know, has done much in the way of advanced and bold legislation. Many of the labor laws now existing in England and America were first seen in operation in New Zealand. That possibly explains why New Zealand took up the idea of municipal control of theatres.

Municipal Control Given Fair Trial.

"It was even seriously suggested in certain quarters that the moving picture business be nationalized by bringing all exhibition under the control and direction of the state.

"The suggestion never was taken seriously by the country as a whole, but certainly was given a fair trial in several towns and in every case proved a failure. In most instances the management was under the direction of the town council, whose estimable old gentlemen were under the illusion that the money being made by the individual owners could just as well be made by the town and devoted to the reduction of local taxes.

"But the theory never worked. The management of the theatres was given to friends of the politicians and square pegs were put into round holes. State owned enterprises seldom succeed against private corporations, I find.

"When the New Zealand Government, in response to the demand of the labor leaders, purchased certain coal mines and worked them as state enterprises, it was thought that the movement would go a long way toward preventing strikes among the coal miners and at the same time realize a profit for the citizen.

"But the mines are not paying, and there are more strikes and labor troubles than ever. In Australia we have had similar experience, where state ownership of the fishing industry, bread baking, and the lumber business have all proved failures."

First National in Australasia.

A specific instance of the failure of municipal theatre control was cited by Mr. Miller in the case of Palmerston North, New Zealand. The local government took control of the one theatre there, turned it from a house for traveling shows into a motion picture theatre, but, managed illy, the house went from bad to worse, and is now back on the traveling show basis, making less money than ever.

The operations of Union Theatres and Australasian Films were given detailed attention in the June 7 issue of the World. The First National franchise is one of the holdings of the two concerns whose leaders are in full sympathy with the work of James D. Williams' circuit. Both Mr. Williams and C. L. Yearsley, advertising manager of First National, had a large amount of experience in Australasia and brought some advanced moving picture ideas from there to America.

Mr. Miller intends visiting his mother country, England, and returning to America after the hot months have passed. It is possible that he may "settle down" in America, whose moving picture manners he admires warmly.

Metro Entertains Doughboys.

Metro gave a show exclusively for the overseas veterans the other day, and in the audience assembled in their projection room in the Longacre Building, New York, were a score or more O. D.-clad, brown-skinned fighters who have just returned from the trenches of France.

"Which one of the Metro stars do you want to see most?" asked W. E. Atkinson, Metro's new general manager, and the unanimous verdict was "Viola Dana —Dana—Dana," from the boys. "All right, then. Sam, start with 'The Gold Cure,'" said Mr. Atkinson to the operator, and the lights went out.

The boys were "tipped off," they said, by Captain J. M. Loughborough, who told them that if they called on Metro they would be glad to give them a picture show for themselves, and they forthwith presented themselves.

That's a Nice Pose, Hold It.

Say we to Virginia Pearson, who gives us this pretty picture to celebrate the starting of "Impossible Catharine," her second production for Pathe.

MacManus' Reconstruction of History a New Departure

MUCH emphasis is laid by the producers of the "Lost Battalion" on the fact that this production has combined reality of cast with authenticity of narrative. The picture is played by famous military leaders and the actual survivors of the episode. Hitherto the dramatic episodes of history have reached the screen by a representation of fact accomplished by assembling professional actors and recreating scenes. The MacManus film, although not utilizing the actual scene of the action of the Lost Battalion, has utilized the actual participators in the action.

"Where has this form of film making been paralleled?" asks Mr. MacManus. "You may recall that there have been a few isolated cases of single war heroes or persons of public prominence appearing in films purporting to visualize fact. But these instances never pretended to be flawless reproductions, and in no case did such a film present a full cast of the original characters."

"The Lost Battalion" is completed, and next week will probably see an announcement of the date of its initial showing to the trade press, leading military officials and men prominent in the public life of the nation.

Select Makes McCormick Head of Washington Branch

SELECT announces the appointment of J. U. McCormick to the executive control of Select's Washington branch, which position had been made vacant by the appointment of former branch manager, V. P. Whitaker, to the office of Eastern representatives in the Select organization. Branch Manager McCormick took charge Monday, June 9.

Mr. McCormick has been connected with Select's Washington exchange for many months, having previously held the position of assistant branch manager. Select's business in the Washington territory, which has been heavy during the past months, has been largely due to the able manner in which Mr. McCormick backed up the efforts of Mr. Whitaker, who was then branch manager. Mr. McCormick's promotion to the executive control is a popular move and meets with the approval of his host of friends in and around Washington.

Branch Manager McCormick will be assisted by the services of R. Childs, formerly of the Washington exchange sales force, who has been promoted to the position of assistant manager.

NEW DISTRIBUTOR OPENS IN NEW YORK

Realart Pictures Corporation to Start Releasing in September—Twenty Exchanges Open in July

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION opened for business at 112 West Forty-second street, New York, last week. The organizer and president of the new company is Arthur S. Kane. Mr. Kane retired from the general management of Select five weeks ago to perfect his plans for the new organization

Realart expects to begin releasing September 1, and plans to have three pictures ready that month. It is the intention of the new organization to distribute from thirty-five to fifty pictures the first year.

Offices in Theatre District.

The suite of offices the new company has opened is on the second floor of the building at 110-112-114 West Forty-second street. This is a half block east of the Knickerbocker Hotel at Forty-second street and Broadway, and is above the United States Railroad Administration Ticket Office. The quarters are divided up into a large reception room with leather furniture, two large private offices on Forty-second street and numerous smaller rooms for department heads, working forces and executive staff.

Realart's selling plans include opening twenty exchanges in the principal cities of the United States. These exchanges will be started at once and are to be located in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Atlanta, Dallas, Kansas City, Omaha, Minneapolis, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle.

Expect to Open Exchanges by July.

J. S. Woody and Ben F. Simpson left New York headquarters separately the last of this week to visit all of the above cities, engage managers, secure offices and open exchanges. One or the other will establish the office in each city named. It is planned to have most if not all of the exchanges going by the middle of July. Fast work will be staged to be all ready for the releases starting in September.

Kane Long in Motion Pictures.

Mr. Kane began his career as a theatrical manager along about 1902. In July, 1907, he took up the motion picture profession when he became personal representative and general manager for O. T. Crawford at St. Louis in the manufacture, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. He continued there for three years and since he has been continually identified with the distribution of motion pictures for some of the biggest producers. Upon the organization August 1, 1917, of Select Pictures Corporation, he was made general manager and many regard him as one of the potent factors in the success of that institution.

J. S. Woody will be general sales manager for the Realart corporation. In 1912 Mr. Woody became associated with the General Film Company in a special capacity covering all territory west of Denver. He stayed with this concern until 1914, when the Mutual Film Corporation signed him to handle their Pacific Northwest District with general headquarters in Seattle. Two years later Woody came East and joined forces with the Triangle Distributing Corporation in New York. Mr. Kane, then general manager of Select Pictures, appointed him field manager for Select covering the entire United States. Shortly after he was elevated to the post of general sales manager. It was in this position that he won wide recognition as an organizer and director of sales.

Simpson Is Field Manager.

Ben F. Simpson, who has just resigned as San Francisco manager for Triangle Distributing Corporation for three and a half years to become field manager for Realart, will share the work of opening exchanges and installing managers with Mr. Woody. His last work was with the late Henry B. Harris in putting over the advertising for "The Third Degree."

Mr. Simpson began his motion picture career in 1912 with George Kleine, exploiting "Quo Vadis" over the United States. He afterward opened an office in Atlanta to develop the Southern territory for the Kleine enterprises. He went with the Triangle Film Corporation when it was organized in November, 1915, as manager of its San Francisco branch. He has been with Triangle ever since, being the oldest man in point of service with that company.

Arthur S. Kane.
President of Realart Pictures Corporation.

John Pond Fritts is director of publicity for the new organization. Mr. Fritts was for many years associated with Mr. Kane in newspaper work in the West. Fourteen years ago he took up magazine and publicity work in New York and latterly has conducted the printing firm of Clark & Fritts at 229 West Twenty-eighth street, New York.

Strand Has Rest Room for Ushers.

Managing Director Joseph L. Plunkett, of the Strand Theatre, New York, has arranged a rest and recreation place for the women ushers on the roof of the theatre. The space will be fitted out with wicker armchairs, a large table with periodicals and daily newspapers, a swing and flowers. A corner in which the table and chairs are to be placed will be covered with a canopy. In the fall the furniture will be moved to the basement under the stage, where a rest room will be fitted out for the female employes.

Fox Films Are Victims of Censorship Unreliability

THAT the ways of picture censors are sometimes extremely contradictory appears to be evidenced by the experiences of two exhibitors in different cities—Springfield, Mo., and Buffalo, N. Y.

The Buffalo Evening Times, issue of Friday, May 23, tells of the censorship imposed on Manager Samuel Carver:

Captain John Marnon, of the third police precinct, walked to the front of the Family Theatre, yesterday afternoon, and ripped from the lobby display frames three pictures of Miss Annette Kellerman, who shows at the Family next week, in "Queen of the Sea," the film which has made a tremendous sensation in Boston, New York and Chicago.

"These pictures are not fit to be exhibited," said the Captain to the caretaker. "Tell the manager I want to see him."

Manager Samuel Carver later, when seen by a reporter for The Times, said:

"I did not go over to police station No. 3, but I called up Captain Marnon on the 'phone and had quite a talk with him. I am sure I can satisfy him that the picture is not offensive. I defy anybody to say that it is improper. Of course, anybody knows that Miss Kellerman does not wear sealskin coats and voluminous skirts when she does her swimming stunts, but the whole film is the picturization of a beautiful fairy tale. I invite Mayor Buck to come and see it. I invite Chief of Police Higgins to come and see it. I know they will like it. Why, this picture has had a run of three months at one theatre in New York, and the very lobby pictures which Captain Marnon tore down, were shown for three weeks in front of a Boston theatre without anybody being offended."

Springfield Story Different.

A strong contrast to the Buffalo attitude is shown in an article in the May 16 issue of the Springfield, Mo., Leader, which reports the showing of the Fox production "Salome," in the following words:

"The first day's presentation at the Landers Theatre of 'Salome,' a Fox production with Theda Bara in the leading role, compelled that kind of admiration for which the superb star is said to draw a fabulous salary. The film was witnessed last night by a city official, who said that it would not be interfered with. There were few members in the audience who would have recommended any changes."

Kraft Joins Big "U" Press Staff.

William Kraft, at one time associated with the staff of the New York Evening Mail, and who has had a wide newspaper experience as well as magazine work, has joined the staff of the Universal home office publicity department. For some time Mr. Kraft has been writing the daily Anniversary Bulletin which is being sent to the Universal salesmen during the anniversary month. This little daily has done excellent work.

DES MOINES BOARD JOINS WITH OMAHA

Exchangemen in Two Cities Unite Organizations for Enforcement and Standardization of Rules

DES MOINES exchangemen have organized a local film board or trade chapter in conjunction with the Omaha chapter. Meetings are being held once a week with M. J. Frisch, manager of Universal, in active charge of the local organization. The co-operation with Omaha and with the exchanges of Minneapolis and Kansas City is going to put Des Moines on an equal basis as regards the proper enforcement of contracts and will do away with the few unreliable exhibitors who are refused shipments seeking to secure service from other points.

The local organization is pledged to carry out all the provisions of the various boards over the country, which means that a concerted effort is being given to a standardization of the business. The exhibitor who does not pay his bills and who refuses to live up to the terms of his contracts will be compelled to alter his method of doing business or go out of business.

"Skinny" Enrolls Creator as Associate Boy Scout

CHOSEN by Boy Scout officials as the boy who best represents Young America, "Skinny," famous as the hero of the Paramount-Briggs Comedies and the cartoons of boy life by Briggs, of the New York Tribune, went to the assistance of the Boy Scouts of America, last Friday, and fired the preliminary gun of the big nation-wide Boy Scout membership drive, being conducted this week throughout the country.

John Carr, who plays the role of Skinny in the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, took the creator of the comedies, Clare A. Briggs, to the office of Ex-Secretary of the Treasury, William G. McAdoo, in the Equitable Building, New York, and had Mr. McAdoo enroll Mr. Briggs as an associate member of the Scouts. Mr. McAdoo is chairman of the Citizens' National Committee, which has charge of the Boy Scout membership campaign. President Wilson is the honorary president of the Boy Scouts, and former President Taft is honorary vice-president.

The enrollment took place at noon. Skinny's introduction was simplicity itself. "I'm Skinny," he announced to Mr. McAdoo. "And this is Mr. Briggs, who made me famous!"

Mr. McAdoo sat down at his desk, filled out an enrollment blank, and then, while the cameras clicked their barrage, Briggs paid over his dollar enrollment fee and became a Boy Scout.

Skinny in real life is a Scout himself, being a member of Troop 55, Division 5, of New York.

Poli Circuit Books Warner Film.

Poli's Circuit of Connecticut is the first big chain of theatres to obtain bookings on "The Man Who Turned White." Following the premiere of the picture at B. S. Moss' Theatre, when, despite some of the hottest June days on record, the box office figures exceeded expectations, a representative of Poli's who witnessed the showing arranged for fifteen days' bookings in the Connecticut theatres. Each of the following Poli houses will play the picture three days: Plaza, Bridgeport; Garden, Waterbury; Palace, Hartford; Bijou, New Haven; Poli's, Meriden.

National Board Praises "Lady Windermere's Fan"

STATING that the screen production of Oscar Wilde's "Lady Windermere's Fan" is "an unusually well done portrayal of Wilde's classical drama," the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures not only gives this subject an absolutely clean bill of health, but under the heading "general comment" in its report on the picture says: "Intensely dramatic scenes are transferred to the screen from the spoken drama with added tenseness. It is a photoplay well acted and well worth seeing."

The report properly gauges the entertainment value of the production as "excellent"; the educational value as "good as a portrayal of classical literature"; the dramatic interest of the story as "excellent"; the coherence of narrative as "very good"; the acting as "splendid"; the technical handling as "very well done," and the photography, costuming, scenic setting and moral effect as "good."

"Third Degree" Commended by Chicago's Chief Justice

A GREAT jurist and criminologist, Chief Justice Harry Olson of the Municipal Court of Chicago, has been moved by a viewing of "The Third Degree" to write to Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, Inc., a congratulatory letter.

In his letter, Judge Olson reviews what is probably the most startling case in which the so-called "third degree" was ever employed, and gives an inside bit of criminal history which bears directly on the lesson taught by the Vitagraph picturization of the Charles Klein play.

The case singled out by Judge Olson is that of the "carbarn bandits" of Chicago, Marx, Niedemeyer and Van Dime, previous to whose conviction a man innocent of the crime but who was first on the scene, had been coerced by the police into signing a confession of murder.

In concluding the letter, Judge Olson says that "The Third Degree" is an interesting exhibition of that grievous system and "should be a warning to police officers not to extort confessions."

Joy to Produce Next Holmes Film.

Ernest C. Joy, formerly manager of productions for Harry Warner at the Biograph studio, has just been engaged by Triangle as production manager for the next Taylor Holmes special. C. T. Horan, the author of the comedy, which temporarily is titled "Three Black Eyes," will direct the production, which will be under way the early part of next week in a New York studio.

Eugene O'Brien Takes Up the Light and Stumbles Along in Search of the One Woman in "The Perfect Lover." These two touching scenes from his first Selznick indicate the dramatic beauty which spreads through the picture.

Meyer Banqueted on Eve of Departure for Chicago

MEMBERS of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade gave a banquet at the Radisson Hotel in honor of Fred S. Meyer on the eve of his departure for Chicago, where he was called to enter the home office of the American Film Company.

Mr. Meyer was one of the oldest Minneapolis exchange managers in point of service. He is succeeded as manager of the Minneapolis American office by Henry Fischer, formerly of Toronto, brother of A. H. Fischer, manager of the Mill City Metro Exchange.

Mr. Meyer came to Minneapolis in 1912. Since that time he has managed his own exchange, operated the Minneapolis offices in Minneapolis and Milwaukee and also the General Film Company in Minneapolis.

He returned to Minneapolis last October after an absence of one year to take charge of American Film interests in that territory.

Precedent Set When Rialto and Rivoli Bill Same Film

FOR the first time in the history of the Rialto and the Rivoli theatres, of New York City, the same production has been scheduled for a week's engagement at each house. The picture to which Managing Director Hugo Reisenfeld is according this honor is the Paramount-Artcraft special, "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," starring Douglas Fairbanks. In the case of the repeat engagement of "The Red Lantern," the Nazimova subject was returned to the house of its first appearance.

The production of the Fairbanks film played the week of May 25 at the Rivoli Despite the warm weather, it packed that big house throughout the week, and thousands who could not gain admission were disappointed. Public demand for an immediate return date of the film became so insistent that Dr. Reisenfeld had no choice but to rebook it for the week of June 8.

FOLLOWING the recent convention of district managers and special representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation held at the home office in New York, meetings of the exchange sales forces have been held during the past week in six cities throughout the United States. These meetings have been for the purpose of disseminating complete information concerning next year's distribution plans to the entire sales organization.

One of the largest meetings was the one held early in the week at the New York exchange, 729 Seventh avenue. This embraced the organizations of the New York and Buffalo offices, comprising District No. 2. General Manager Al Lichtman, F. V. Chamberlain and Arthur G. BEACH DEFINES DIRECTOR'S STATUS

President of Eminent Authors Pictures Says Wielder of Megaphone Will Have Full Scope

THAT American made films will dominate the world, just as American short stories far surpass the output of any other country is the opinion of Rex Beach and Samuel Goldwyn in organizing Eminent Authors Pictures. They have brought together leading writers of American fiction to bring to the screen the same great gifts for telling a story that has made their names features of the fiction periodicals of America.

Perhaps the question of the position of the director in Eminent Authors Pictures has created the most immediate comment among exhibitors. Where does he stand, when the adaptation of each narrative is under the supervision of the author?

Beach Talks About Directors.

To this query, Rex Beach answers: "The best directors today recognize that the story is the dominant thing, and that the author who has achieved great popularity by striking a timely note in fiction must be encouraged to sound the same note of interest and personality in pictures. He welcomes co-operation up to the limit of the author's capacity and that has to do with the writing of the continuity and the titles. In his own field the director is recognized as the artist whose abilities will have the full scope of his genius. What we shall have in Eminent Authors' Pictures is the whole-hearted co-operative effort of the author, director and actor.

"And let me say that the new organization is not a boastful one. We do not expect to revolutionize the industry. We do not expect to produce only the most wonderful pictures in the world, than which there is non such. What we can be sure of is that none of the pictures will be badly conceived and poorly done. Each picture will be a special picture, and we are prepared to spend all the time and money necessary to insure its quality.

"Ours is a get-together proposition for the mutual benefit of the producer and author and for the tremendous audiences these authors have won by their gift for telling the most vivid and vital stories of life as they see it.

"Two things will determine the success of the enterprise, and I believe they are both established facts. One is that the motion picture industry can no longer be divorced from its source of supply—the stories. And the second is that the industry and the art of motion pictures together depend upon the brains and intelligence of creative writers."

Clifford A. Carroll Moves from Utica to Pittsfield

CLIFFORD A. CARROLL, well known throughout central New York in motion picture enterprises, and more recently as acting manager of the Hippodrome, Utica, and director of W. H. Linton's Theatres, will leave this week for Pittsfield, Mass., where he has accepted a position as treasurer of the Colonial Theatre in that city.

For the past seven years Mr. Carroll has been connected with Utica picture interests and was at one time manager of the Douth Street and Corn Hill theatres. During the early part of last summer he was motion picture and dramatic editor of the Utica Saturday Globe.

Since 1917 Mr. Carroll has been press agent of Mr. Linton's Hippodrome Theatre in Utica but after the opening of the new Lintonian Theatre, Little Falls, last month became publicity man for both the Hippodrome and Lintonian, as well as private secretary to Mr. Linton.

Exhibitors Help to Secure Jobs for Returned Soldiers

THE Re-employment Bureau of the City of New York has been established for the purpose of finding jobs for soldiers, sailors and marines. It is a joint undertaking of all welfare organizations of New York and of about eighty mercantile and manufacturing associations and it is backed by the War Department, which has assigned as director of the bureau Major Warren Bigelow.

It was believed that centralization was the only way to solve the problem of re-employing soldiers, sailors and marines. If all the jobs are sent to one place and all the discharged service men go to that place, there should be no difficulty in having the right man placed in the right job. The problem is more one of adjustment than anything else. There are lots of jobs in New York and lots of men looking for them, and the problem is to put the man in touch with something he is fitted for and something he likes when he gets it.

The necessity for bringing a large volume of jobs into the bureau is manifest from the fact that all the camps and discharge points around New York are sending men to 505 Pearl street. In giving publicity to this movement, the screen in the motion picture theatres in Greater New York and vicinity have been of great value. The co-operation in showing slides and trailers is very much appreciated both by the War Department and the Re-employment Bureau.

Henry Cole, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is ably assisting the bureau in placing slides and trailers and the director desires to say that any courtesy shown him and co-operation given him in this work will be appreciated and will do a great deal toward helping the work along and bringing the job to the place where the soldier comes to find it.

Major Warren Bigelow.
Director of New York City's re-employment bureau.

Motorists Given Summons to Appear at Metropolitan

A NOVEL way of putting the show over was adopted this week by Crandall's Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, D. C., in advertising Alice Joyce in "The Third Degree." A number of cards simulating those used by the police in summoning automobilists who violate the regulations restricting parking time were printed.

These cards were used in the same manner as the police cards; that is, the number of the automobile was filled in on the blank line and the card was stuck in the steering wheel. Naturally, the first sight of the card was something of a shock, especially to motorists who knew they had not violated the regulations, and led them to read the cards carefully. While the great majority of the motorists saw the point immediately, it is understood that one or two —probably very familiar with the little cards—gave them but a hasty glance and actually appeared at headquarters where, of course, the joker was pointed out to them.

The card read as follows: "Headquarters, Washington, D. C., Summons to Operator of Vehicle, D. C. License No. ———. You are hereby notified to appear at Crandall's Metropolitan Theatre during week of June 8 to witness Charles Klein's Greatest Play, 'The Third Degree.' Captain Alice Joyce."

Price of Palm Beach Suits Goes Up in Washington

EXHIBITORS of Washington, D. C., who are desirous of having their musicians appear in tuxedos or, in the summer, in palm beach suits, will have to pay $2 a week a man for that extra bit of service. The musicians have recently presented a new wage scale to the managers to sign and this provision is included together with increased rates of pay.

Hereafter the theatres that are open all day will have to pay their men $40 a week, the leader getting $58 a week. Formerly the salaries were $50 for the leader and $35 for the men. The day is one of six hours and the union requires that one-fifth of the actual play time shall be for rest. The night houses are those requiring but four hours of play, subject, of course, to the same provision, of one-fifth of the time for rest. They are to pay $23 a man for a six-day week, an increase of $3 over the old scale, while the leader is to get $34 instead of $28. Where the men are to play on Sundays for six hours, the pay is to be $7 a man additional, giving the men $30 a week and the leader $41. Extra matinees of three hours each are to be charged for at the rate of $3 each, instead of $2 in the old schedule.

BANK PANIC, FIRE CALL AND CONFUSION

Exciting Times for Populace When Mary Pickford Played "Daddy Long Legs" at Moore's, Washington

A PANIC among depositors in the Security Savings Bank of Washington, D. C., and a narrow escape from mob violence by the fire department of the capitol city were two of the series of unusual events caused by the first run presentation of "Daddy Long Legs," first of the Mary Pickford special attractions to be released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, at Moore's Rialto Theatre.

The production was booked for a run of two weeks. Preceded by an unusually novel newspaper advertising and publicity campaign, in which Mary Pickford as the star, the universal interest in the story of the attraction, and the appeal to all classes, were featured, "Daddy Long Legs" opened to more than capacity business.

Throughout the week, according to Manager Tom Moore, the capacity of the Rialto was taxed at every performance, matinee and night. The local newspapers had been unusually lavish in their commendation of the production and of Miss Pickford's work in it. This contributed to the interest Washingtonians took in "Daddy Long Legs" and helped to make the work of the doormen and ushers more difficult.

Mobs Fought Fire Fighters.

"The most unusual incident," declared Mr. Moore, "happened on Thursday evening, when a slight fire was discovered in the second floor of Fisher's dyeing and cleaning establishment, just below the Rialto Theatre building. There was a line four deep, extending to the corner, more than half a block away, and around the corner for a considerable distance. In addition, there were hundreds of people packed in front of the theatre with tickets purchased during the morning and afternoon, waiting to get in.

"Someone sent in a fire alarm, and when the fire engines, hook and ladder trucks and the marshall reached the corner nearest the scene of the blaze, they found the street absolutely blocked by the crowds. None in the packed mass of humanity had seen the blaze from the street, and someone shouted that the management had called out the department to break up the crowds and get them away from the theatre. The results was an outburst of protest when the police attempted to clear a way for the firemen. By nosing the big trucks so close people had to move or be run over, they finally succeeded in breaking through."

Rumored Run on a Bank.

On Saturday morning there was a repetition of the Thursday night mob situation, with results that were even more serious. "As early as 9.30 on Saturday morning, the last day of the first week of the run," continued Mr. Moore, "there was a big crowd in line waiting for the box office to open. An hour before the Rialto opened the crowd had become so great that it reached down Ninth street to G and turned over G to Eighth street, completely encircling the Security Savings Banks building.

"Within thirty minutes after the line had reached these proportions officials of the bank telephoned the city commissioners to send police aid to disperse the crowds. They explained that depositors passing had seen the line and started the report that there was a run on the bank. The predicament was a serious one for another thirty minutes, until the police and fire departments each sent details of men to help regulate the crowds."

Another odd development of the first week's run was an item of the Rialto's maintenance sheet for several dollars' worth of smelling salts for the ladies' room. This, Mr. Moore declares, was because scores of women who had stood in line for an hour or more, had finally reached the theatre doors too exhausted to stand at the rear of the house and wait for seats. They sought the ladies' rest room and used the smelling salts in such numbers that a new supply of the aromatics had to be ordered.

Governor Smith Takes Part in Thomas' "The Volcano"

NEW YORK'S Governor turned motion picture player the other day for the filming of a scene in Augustus Thomas' recently completed social-industrial drama, "The Volcano," starring Leah Baird, for Four Star Pictures, a W. W. Hodkinson release.

The event was staged in the Governor's Room at City Hall. The executive portrayed the role of Governor Alfred E. Smith, and his chief function was "signing" the bill prohibiting the use of red flags in parades or other demonstrations. For the purpose of the picture a telephone was rigged up on the historic desk once used by George Washington, the first time it ever came in contact with such a modern device. The scene had the Governor answering a telephone call from the Sheriff of New York County, who asked executive aid in an effort to rid New York of the "Red" menace.

Harry Raver, producer of the film, and director George Irving were there to give the Governor the necessary motion picture training, but that was an easy task, so well did Mr. Smith adapt himself to the requirements of the unusual occasion. "There's little you don't know about picture-making," Mr. Raver remarked to the Governor. "Well, I haven't seen hundreds of pictures for nothing," the executive smiled.

Baltimore Theatre Engages Lecturer for "Red Lantern"

WHEN the Parkway Theatre, Baltimore, of which Bernard Depkins, Jr., is manager, showed the Metro production, "The Red Lantern," with Mme. Nazimova playing the leading part, during the week of June 2, a special system of lighting was employed. Large Chinese lanterns of red paper were placed over the electric lights under the balcony in the lobby and one on each side of the screen. When the dramatic part about the red lantern came up in the film these lanterns were gradually lighted until they became a glowing red. Then, as the part of the story dealing with the red lantern went past, the lights gradually dimmed. The orchestra under the direction of Herman Federoff, played specially arranged oriental music.

In conjunction with the picture, Captain H. J. Lewis, who was the official Chinese guide of the Barbary Coast in San Francisco, before the fire, was engaged to lecture on the customs and activities of the Chinese. The moving pictures he had with him graphically depicted the Chinatown life.

Strand Stages "Upstairs and Down."

In presenting "Upstairs and Down" at the Strand this week Manager Joseph Plunkett has invented a pretty introduction to immediately precede the showing of the Olive Thomas feature. At the back-center of the stage stairways comprising six steps have been erected leading to a short platform that joins the two short flights at the top. There is a duet, "Upstairs and Down," sung by a mild voiced young man and an attractive girl who sings well. As the couple sings the second verse they move up the stairs, cross the connecting platform, go down the second short flight and return to the bench from which they started, to finish the number. The stairs and banisters are painted white and the lighting and color effects make a decidedly pretty picture.

Norma Talmadge Returns from Florida.

Norma Talmadge, accompanied by her husband, Joseph M. Schenck, Director Edward Jose, Natalie Talmadge, Wyndham Standing, Garreth Hughes, and Cameraman David Abel, returned from Florida this week, where they have been making scenes on a deserted island near Miami, for "By Right of Conquest." This photoplay is from Arthur Hornblow's novel by the same name. It has many thrilling and sensational scenes, such as yacht catching fire in midocean, while the guests are in the midst of their merrymaking at a costume ball on deck.

WHAT THE EDUCATIONAL SCREEN SHOWS

Subjects Varying in Latitude from Florida to Labrador Carry Much Interesting Information

CURRENT educational releases cover a variety of subjects, some of which have shown on the screen before, photographed by different people at different angles, and others which are new to the average spectator. The following group will be found interesting and informative.

"Piking After Pizarro."

The town of Cajamarca, Peru, occupies the opening scenes in the Outing-Chester picture "Piking After Pizarro." Here we are reminded of the sad story of an Inca brave who lost his life in the square of Capamarca. Scenes in the streets of the town are interesting, including the weaving of the poncha, which seems to be a "national institution" in Peru. From here we go to the gold mines, and after a brief stay continue to the silver country where primitive methods are still in vogue in some sections. Interesting Indian types are seen in the picture.

"Where the Screen Tree Grows."

The Outing-Chester picture "Where the Screen Tree Grows" was photographed off the south coast of Florida, and treats the spectator to a delightful series of views in which the sea fowl figures. Different kinds of wild birds with their eggs and young lead up to some of the most remarkable pictures of heron roosting in trees. These graceful birds silhouetted against the sky form an unusually beautiful sight. The picture exhibited at the Strand Theatre, New York City, has been much admired.

"Flying Cannon."

The Bray Pictograph No. 6120 contains a series of animated technical drawings which serve as an example of what Uncle Sam was getting ready for the Germans when they decided to quit.

The film shows an animated cross section of a relay shell, which explodes twice instead of once. As the fire travels the fuse, it comes first to a primary explosive which discharges a series of smaller contact shells. These contact shells demolish the battery shields and other enemy protection so that when the fuse fire works down to the main explosive, which distributes the shrapnel balls, the shrapnel spread works free havoc in all directions. The picture shows the flight of the shells in the air, the two explosions in sequence, and just how the shell operates. It is a surprising revelation of what our inventors were devising, and is extremely interesting to persons of mechanical inclinations.

"Beans."

Activities on a 150,000-acre bean farm in California is one of the interesting subjects of the Bray Pictograph No. 6120. The planting, and harvesting of the beans as shown in the picture points to the ingenuity and inventive genius necessary in solving the problem of the world's largest bean farm.

"Interior Decoration."

In the Bray Pictograph No. 6119, Marjory Wickware, an interior decorator, demonstrates the work of getting ready to embellish a New York house which she has been engaged to decorate. First she consults the plan of the house and makes drawings of the rooms when furnished, allowing her imagination and good taste to guide her. She then water-colors her drawings and completes the decorations on paper, after which she gives out contracts for woodwork and paint, selects fabrics for decorations, designs the furniture, and, most important of all, takes care of proper lighting—the selection of lamps being an art in itself. This is a subject worth while seeing.

"Pure Havana."

One of the Ford-Goldwyn educational weeklies of current release gives a series of views in and about Havana, Cuba. The picture has been carefully taken, and little that is of interest about the city has been forgotten. Old Morro Castle, panoramic views of the city from the waterfront, the spot where the battleship "Maine" was sunk, and the Senate house are among the more interesting features. The National Opera House, an edifice of architectural beauty, is also seen, as well as the Prada and the famous Colon market.

"The Only Way."

An excellent "safety first" film appearing among the Ford-Goldwyn weeklies is "The Only Way." Almost every form of street accident is covered, from that caused by the careless throwing off refuse, such as banana peelings, on the street, to that caused by carelessness both of drivers and pedestrians in the midst of traffic.

Pathe Review No. 11.

The eleventh issue of the Pathe Review contains some interesting pictures of wild horses, photographed by Raymond L. Ditmars. These include the zebra, and the wild horse of Thibet. African natives making pottery forms an entertaining educational subject; some surprisingly good views of native women at work, with their children on their backs, are included. A slow camera analysis of ice skating, and various other features are shown.

"Wild Wedding Belles."

One of the most interesting of current travel pictures is "Wild Wedding Belles," a comedy version of the Zulu marriage customs. The picture is an Outing-Chestor released by the First National, and has been entertainingly titled by Katherine Hilliker. The picture, played by real Zulus, tells the story of one Horace, whose "fancy lightly turned to thoughts of love." A rival appears on the scene in the shape of the son of the headman of the tribe, and by sheer force takes possession of the lady in the case, and marries her. In revenge Horace poisons the headman, who allowed his son to usurp the bride elect of another, and so the story ends in tragedy. This is an unusually entertaining film.

"Men Met in the Mountains."

From among the many scenes photographed in the western mountains, Robert Bruce has chosen a series of scenes taken in the Cascades and in the Shasta region for his picture, "Men Met in the Mountains." This picture, while it contains many lovely scenes in which men, dogs and horses, trees of wonderful growth and circumference, and glacial slopes, figure entertainingly, does not back up its title sufficiently.

Half breed Joe is the one particular example pointed out in the picture as true and tried in the class who can remain companionable in spite of slush, snow and poor horse feed. As shown at the Rialto Theatre, New York, during the week of June 1, the picture was rather brief, but delightful in photographic and scenic quality.

"Labrador and Newfoundland."

The Post Film Company has several hundred feet of film taken in a land of which the ordinary individual knows little. In view of the fact that Newfoundland has gained considerable publicity through being made a stopping place in the aeroplane flight across the Atlantic, this picture formed a wisely chosen number of a recent Rialto program. The town of St. John's is included in the scenes of the picture, and types of Newfoundlanders and natives of Labrador. The customs of the country, industry, and methods of transportation are shown in the picture.

Atlanta's Prison Has Moving Picture Classes

THE state prison at Atlanta, Ga., has been conducting for the benefit of its inmates educational moving picture classes. Its final session occurred on May 23, when a fine program of moving pictures was given, including the Outing-Chester African hunt pictures, "Teddy Birds," "Ballahooing on the Anarika," "A Waswanipae Week End," "Rail Birds" and "A Jungle Joy Ride."

An article on the subject which appeared in the June 1 issue of "Good Words," the prison newspaper, states "As an example of what can be done in the way of educational work with moving pictures, our Friday evening classes have given a wonderful example. No more desirable mental stimulus could be possible; and not a man who has attended the classes is without a more comprehensive idea of the world, its people, habits, dress and physical characteristics, than could have been obtained by many years' study of books.

"It is notable that the demand upon the library, by men who have attended the classes, has been unusually heavy, for books of travel and history covering the countries shown in the pictures."

Washington City Store Uses Film to Instruct Salesmen

THE motion picture as an education aid in commerce is well recognized by one of the department stores in Washington, D. C. Lansburgh & Brother, one of the city's leading concerns, has for some time used motion picture films as part of its welfare work among the employes, and pictures showing the manufacture of various commodities have been exhibited, accompanied by descriptive talks by representatives of the manufacturers.

It was recently brought to the attention of the firm that the employes' club room in the store was violating the District regulations regarding the exhibition of motion pictures by failing to have proper emergency exits. To instal the exits and meet with other regulations entailed the expenditure of considerable money, but so important are the motion pictures considered by the company that work on the necessary alterations was immediately started.

Films an Aid to Education.

Films are considered by the firm to be one of the country's foremost means of education. "We wish to show our people, from time to time, pictures of how all the different kinds of merchandise are made from raw materials to finished product," declared the head of the welfare department in speaking of the alterations.

"The more salespeople know the better able they will be to serve intelligently and interestingly. All of us could get more satisfaction and more pleasure from our daily tasks if we knew more about them. And in these days of unlimited books and magazines and courses of all kinds, there is little excuse for our not knowing a great deal about the thing we depend upon for our weekly or monthly salary."

RAPF ANSWERS AUTHOR'S CONTENTIONS

Says if Writers Study Film Needs, They Run no Risks of Having Works Mutilated by Producers

HARRY RAPF, general manager of the Selznick studio, takes issue with certain authors who recently made scathing remarks on the silent drama in general and producers in particular. These authors said that film producers cannot expect the support of big authors when their works are hacked beyond recognition in their adaptation to the screen, and that the authors cannot be expected to write original scripts for the screen until they are paid in accordance with the time and effort they put into the scenario.

"Nearly every piece of fiction written has to be considerably altered when adapted to the screen," says Mr. Rapf, "for the simple reason that it is fiction, and not real. Authors who write fiction are able by their clever style, working, and pen personality to cover up glaring inconsistencies and disguise illogical situations. When a story is presented in film form, however, it is stripped bare of all unreality and every situation must be logical and lifelike or else it will not be accepted by the picture-going public.

Situations, Not Words, Wanted.

"The trouble with most novels and fiction is that they consist mostly of words, clever dialogue, description, etc. What we want for the screen are situations, not words. When the big authors can give us these they will find that their stories are not being 'hacked to pieces.' Evidence of this is in the fact that when an expert continuity writer creates a story, it reaches the screen in practically its original form.

"Some novels that take up over 300 pages of reading matter have not enough real story matter and situation to make a two-reel film. Yet although Leila Burton Weil's short story, 'The Naked Truth,' from which the Eugene O'Brien production 'The Perfect Lover' is being made, consumed only a little over half a dozen pages as it was originally published, it is so rich in real human situations, dramatic moments, so full of story matter and plot, that it simply crams a five-reel picture to the brim with action and suspense, and that is what we want above all—action.

Novels Bought for Single Idea.

"Many novels are bought simply because they contain one idea that is considered of unusual value for a screen production and not because the entire plot of the story is of any importance. In these cases the story is naturally altered somewhat to meet screen requirements.

"When authors say that producers will not pay them in accordance with the value of time and effort they put on an original scenario, I disagree with them," says Mr. Rapf. "I know that there is no limit to the amount that Myron Selznick will pay for a good scenario, and I believe that the same holds true with many other big producers. Facts show that the producers have been paying way up into the thousands to get the proper material.

Authors Should Study Photoplays.

"The trouble with the contrary authors is that they will not give the time to study photoplay construction and the demands of the producers. When they do write an original story for the screen it is not a photoplay, but mere fiction in scenario form. There is all the difference in the world between the two. Fiction in scenario form is no good to film producers because it has not enough real substance to make a five-reel photoplay.

"Just as soon as the big authors send us in stories that are written according to photoplay demands and not in typical fiction style, they will find that motion picture producers will pay them as generously as anyone else, and perhaps more so," concluded Mr. Rapf.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Summer Stuff.

EVER make capital of the fact that it is summer? Did you ever plan to make the season help instead of hurt you? Suppose that instead of kicking about the heat you lay in some nice cool scenics and make a special bid with these. You can get some old stuff cheap. You can pick for return books some old plays, which may be new to your patrons, with a large proportion of snow and ice. Take "The Brand," for instance. What do you suppose you could do with that blizzard in the middle of July? It was more or less interesting in March, but in July a huge "Actual Blizzard Inside" will pull almost as much money as Mary Pickford's name. Never mind if the picture is not first run. If it makes money for you, what do you care about the date? And for a dollar a reel or so you can get scenics with snow-clad peaks and frozen waterfalls. What is a puny little "15 Degrees Colder Inside" compared with "One million tons of snow and ice inside?" Put in a few electric fans, work on the ice suggestion and you won't have to worry about the hot weather. You can make capital of it.

McCormick's.

Advertising "The Brand," S. Barret McCormick took three fourteens for his Saturday and Sunday display with a thirteen for the less important papers. The story is made the feature above the players, who are dropped completely after the Sunday display. The drawing on the right shows that used as a base for the colored advertisement. In the colored design that portion printed in black behind the players comes up in an orange with the mountain peaks white and a blue sky, running down the side and into the house signature which shows a red house name on a black ground. It is worked in only two colors, but is showy. In both displays the story is the chief angle played up with a leading paragraph for the author and his work. There is no mention, even, of the big blizzard scene or the production generally. The entire appeal is hung upon the fact that this is a Rex Beach story, with a mention of the story in support of the appeal. For the Monday to Wednesday he used four sevens, and these make a more direct appeal with situations from the story rather than the whole of the drama, but Beach is played up in the title as strongly as the play. Effective use is made of black and white, to suggest the snow-covered wastes, with lettered quotations and type talks to back up the scene cuts. All four of the displays offer strong tableaux, the weakest being that on the left in the smaller cut, though here the quotation gives greater strength to the situation than the action in the other stills. "Sis Hopkins" followed for the latter half of the week, affording a strong contrast, and here the slate idea was employed to advantage. The text is the same in both displays, but the designs differ. Mr. McCormick has had unusual luck with the reverse in getting the half tones to stand out. In a slate idea the usual device of routing out around the cut could not be employed, but a careful choice of cuts has brought a good result. This is the first time we recall seeing a Circle advertisement without the usual house signature, but the sketched parody is helpful in marking the contrast, and will probably bring a laugh from most regulars that will help the general effect. We think this is the final touch. Fred Stone got three eights to announce his coming in "Johnny, Get Your Gun." Both designs, it will be noted, are framed in a rope, in allusion to the stunts he does with a lariat. The space is shared with

A Three Thirteens and Three Fourteens for "The Brand."

A Pair of Three Eights Announcing Fred Stone.

Arbuckle, but Stone gets the best of it on the left, though the division is more nearly equal on the right. Fatty appears to be a big favorite in Indianapolis, and it will be recalled that he was boomed above Caruso not long ago. No effort is made to play up his story. His name and the main title are apparently all that is necessary.

Dies Hard.

Hand lettering dies hard in Dayton, Ohio. Mark Gates, of the Dayton, no longer uses all hand-lettered displays, but he does give aid and comfort to an enemy alien in the shape of an artist who knows more about art than he does about advertising. We show half of a recent advertisement in which the effort to make the title mysterious results only in the suggestion that the play has a Chinese locale. If the title is to be kept a dead secret, it would be better to represent it by dashes. The lower half of the display is sane and good.

Gardner Quits.

H. E. Gardner has left the Princess, Colorado Springs, to go into commercial work again where his advancement will keep pace with his efforts. He will probably be back again, because he is a born manager, and will never be happy in commercial work; but we are sorry that he is dropping away even temporarily, for he is a really able advertiser, and such men are few and are needed as examples to the rest. Mr. Gardner is going to locate at Great Falls, Mont., and exhibitors in that territory are tipped off that they can probably get Mr. Gardner to work with them while he is making up his mind to take a connection. That is the way he got in the first time, doing volunteer press work.

Likes Us.

In sending in some stuff for comment, H. F. Kincey, of the Strand, Birmingham, Ala., adds: "Advertising for Exhibitors is a valuable aid for us, and you can bet it certainly is appreciated." After that it seems tough to have to disagree with Mr. Kincey's art work, but that piebald lettering in the larger of the spaces is something that we cannot admire. The idea is generally supposed to be very effective, but nothing is effective in an advertisement which is difficult to read, and the change from white to black in this layout is not easy to read. Either the black should have been brought down below the title or—better still—held above it. The text of the display, mostly press book material, is good, and will make for strong interest, but the lettering is poorly done in that it is done without the advertising value in mind. This is a five seventeens, which is a pretty husky space. The Pickford is a three tens, and gets good display, though full of type, because the lesser banks are not permitted to run in full face and fight the star and title. The same holds good of the Reid two sevens. Mr. Kincey follows the McCormick idea, and does not let his selling talk interfere with his greater selling points of star and title. There is not much to criticize in these displays, but they form interesting studies.

Samples.

P. E. Coe, of the Louisiana, Baton Rouge, La., launches his serials by offering free admission before four in the afternoon of the day of showing the first episode. This makes for interest, and once the people start coming they feel they have to keep it up.

A Hippodrome.

One of Harold B. Franklin's recent advertisements for the Hippodrome, Buffalo, looks very much like the reduction of a twenty-eight-sheet. It is a nice proportion (a three fours), and the main titles stand out so that the eye can catch them at a glance. This is a real test of advertising. If the stuff is properly conspicuous it might be a three-column advertisement or a four by seven stand. The stand is laid to let the man across the street get the big facts. The two or three column space should also get the message over to the man who is not looking for amusement advertising. Then it reaches everyone, but if it is set so that it has to be studied, if the facts are to be arrived at, then it will appeal only to the frantic fan. The big trick in advertising is to get the man who does not want to come and make him feel that he must go. That's advertising, and it is done by making the big facts stick up out of the page. Mr. Franklin uses all hand lettering, but most of it is almost as clear as type, and he never makes the error of confusing the eye with fancy stuff on names and titles.

Lobbies.

Make your lobby so attractive that the passerby instinctively thinks of your show as attractive. Build your lobby to your clientele, but remember the clientele you want is seldom attracted by dime museum methods.

Square Cuts.

Lately we showed an example from a Baltimore paper of the unlovely effect of square cuts. Now a second house comes in with the same idea, though it does a little better in that the cuts are a trifle smaller and are not placed side by side. The original offender gets something worse than usual by using a black border and a heavy house signature. Both examples are poor, and do not suggest entertainment. The Picture Garden display looks more like those circulars the police send out for criminals who are wanted by the authorities. Square cuts are all right on police circulars, but they make darned poor advertisements. Compare the effect with this three fives for Loew's Theatre. The routed cut gives lightness to the layout and looks attractive. It suggests entertainment, and it makes the subject look pleasing. The heavy black backgrounds of those square cuts are not only detrimental to the house but to the page.

A Chaplin Half.

This half-page would not be unusual were it not that it is taken from the China Press, of Hong Kong. Few films get over to China quickly, but this Chaplin, it will be seen from the dates, got over early, and was shown at fancy prices, though it is probably the Mex dollar, which is worth around fifty cents in real money. Even at that the dollar top is going it pretty strong. It is remarkable that Chaplin and other stars are as well known in China and Indian as in America and to the natives in the cities, as well as to the foreign residents. The motion picture is the most nearly universal form of entertainment there is.

the best is a schedule which gives the showing times of the stories. We reproduce it that your printer may get the ex-

The Family gets out a snappy little program with good clip stuff and some original material to make people ask for it. The best way to get your program into circulation is to make it readable, but so many managers drop the effort after a half dozen issues. We could fill half a column with the names of those who have fallen by the wayside, and it would not take ten lines to enumerate the stickers. But the Family has run fifteen numbers so far, and they may be listed among the stickers.

Ralph Ruffner believes in playing up a comedy now and then, as this four seventeens on the right shows. patrons realize that the comedies are a part of the show and not merely an infliction intended to make the show long enough. The display on the left is four fulls. It is all type save for the three scene cuts and portrait in the margin, but he talks strongly. The upper half of the display would class an an advertisement by itself, but the lower portion carries on the argument and clinches the desire to see the play. It is characteristic Ruff stuff, particularly the line "Beach at midnight s-h-h-h No one around but a seal and he's on the rocks." These little touches give distinction just as the underline, "The girl who threw the brick" in the Gish advertisement, backs up the cut in the lower right hand corner. He took a whole page for Bill Hart in The Poppy Girl's Husband and describes this as "A smashing, crashing dynamic story of a raging, surging hell in the breast of a man robbed of his wife and boy and sent up for fourteen years in solitary. Photographed in one of America's most celebrated prisons." The cut is a combination of line and halftone, but the background looks more like a fort than a prison. Barred windows are better than battlements for a prison suggestion. The same cut is used for a four tens for the last day, the descriptive line remaining the same. The display on the left for Shirley Mason included a three inch bank of type below the portion shown. He trusts more to the star than the attraction here, and announces her as "Shirley Mason, (95 pounds, 6 feet 4 inches high. Good looking? Well, rather!)." The "She went and done it," is not particularly descriptive, but it rivets attention and then you pick up the fact that the design below shows that she spilled the beans, for the can is properly labeled and the beans are in evidence. The goose on the right is thrown in to help along, and it balloons "Gosh it must have been awful." This is not dignified advertising, perhaps, but it is wonderfully effective. Ruff gives his stuff a certain twist that people come to look for and they read his advertisements even if they are not looking for a show, and then they go because they have been sold by the advertisement.

From Reading.

C. L. Carr, of the Colonial Reading, Pa., sends in a four seventeens for Nazimmova in Out of the Fog, and asks for an opinion. The first impression is that it is far too full of type, but this is not the case. The column of text to the left is not as intrusive as it seems. Anyone reading quickly can get the message from the big lines without having to stop and read the rest. This portion of the display does as much as would the same space minus that side column because the type is kept small and is not permitted to intrude upon the more important lines. It is not quite as good as white space, perhaps, but it is almost as good and tells a lot more. Half as much in a heavier type would have spoiled the advertisement utterly, but as it stands it is a combination of sight and reading.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Lens Charts for Framing.

The December 28 issue containing the lens charts was exhausted very quickly. The demand for lens charts was so great that we have had a limited number printed on heavy paper, size 11x17, for framing. Covers amperage 25 to 60 A. C. or D. C., and Plano-convex or meniscus biconvex; also gives necessary projection lens diameter to avoid waste and distance of revolving shutter from aperture. Every progressive, up-to-date projectionist should have one. Price, 50 cents, postpaid to any part of the world. Send U. S. 3-cent stamps or money order.

As to the Narrow Width Standard.

At the Rochester meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers that distinguished body treated itself to a fine large bundle of trouble by adopting a special width "safety standard" for film, to be made in slow-burning stock only, for use on what is commonly known as "portable" projectors. The intention was to discourage, and, so far as possible, prevent the use of ordinary inflammable film stock on projectors which are not located in a fireproof projection room. That was the intention, and so far as applies to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers as a whole, at least, the sole motive for adoption of the safety standard. We also firmly believe it was the sole motive of the man who proposed the action, Mr. A. F. Victor, of the Victor Anamatograph Company. We fail to see where the action could possibly react to his benefit, or that it would not operate to his damage just as much as it would operate to the damage of other portable machine manufacturers.

This department has already set forth its position in this matter, insofar as applies to certain features thereof, but charges which have been made make it seem imperative that we go further, and place a light where it will shine in certain shady places of the controversy now raging.

Like every human invention, the new "safety standard" is not, viewed from the standpoint of preventing the use of inflammable films under conditions where their use is dangerous, perfect. It gets or is expected to get its power from and by the backing of the Underwriters, the presumption being that that body will give its approval only to portable projectors equipped with sprockets carrying the narrow standard slow-burning films. The weakness of the "safety standard" comes from the fact that there is no power compelling portable projector manufacturers to equip their projectors with narrow standard sprockets; also from the further fact that whereas only "portable" projectors are specified, standard projectors are often used without fireproof projection room, under which condition they are just as dangerous as the so-called portable machines—perhaps even more so since they are, as a rule, used with a much more powerful light. So that after all, the standard is little more than a step in the right general direction.

But certain ones, whom we venture to say would not have started any very strenuous fight for the general adoption of slow-burning film had this new "safety standard" not been adopted, realizing that with the Underwriters' stamp of approval on machines carrying the special width sprockets, a heavy handicap would be placed on the sales of machines not so equipped, and therefore not approved by the Underwriters, and that the use of the special sprockets would seriously contract the supply of films available for use on "portable" machines, have proceeded to attack the new standard as dishonest, foolish, inefficient, impractical and improper. These objectors have, perhaps rather too suddenly, woke up to a realization of the "tremendous danger" due to the use of ordinary inflammable film, and are vociferously demanding the use of slow-burning film BY THE ENTIRE INDUSTRY. They have carried the fight into the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, with large possibilities of serious damage to that most useful body. They have questioned the integrity of the Safety Committee of the society, of which the editor is a member, and have even suggested that Dana Pierce, of the Underwriters, has been deceived, perhaps over-easily, by the committee.

As to the attack on the safety committee, and the somewhat uncomplimentary suggestion with regard to Mr. Pierce's "easiness," we do not think them worthy of serious consideration, much less argument or denial. The whole attack is so very obviously based on commercialism that it requires considerable assurance on the part of those making it to accuse the other side of dishonest motives. We fully understand the views of the opposition, and in a measure sympathize with them, because we do not ourselves like to see the great library of films in any way contracted for general use, but let the said opposition cease from hiding behind a camouflage of "safety to the public," come out into the open and state their case as it is, which is just this: We object to the new "safety standard" because it is approved by the Board of Fire Underwriters, and we may be forced to use narrow width sprockets on our machine, which will leave available for use on our projectors only such films as may be copied into the "safety standard," instead of having available the entire product of the studios.

This department stands squarely in favor of the safety standard for use on all projectors, professional or "portable," when used without a standard fireproof projection room, such as is approved by the Underwriters. We take this position because we deem the indiscriminate use of inflammable films on machines which are, more often than not, in charge of rank amateurs, as being distinctly dangerous, except those projectors be enclosed in a standard projection room as above named. On the other hand, it does NOT favor the adoption of slow-burning film stock for use in theatres, or where the projector is enclosed in a fireproof projection room, because (A) Ordinarily, in theatres at least, the man in charge is possessed of considerable experience and some degree of skill in the handling of projectors. (B) Should a fire occur there is absolutely no danger of any sort to any one except to the projectionist himself, and very little to him; recent theatre film fires having fully demonstrated the fact that theatre audiences have at last learned the simple lesson that fires in the projection room have absolutely no element of danger for them, except that of panic, and that bit of knowledge itself acts to automatically remove danger of panic.

"But," you inquire, "granting this, why not make assurance doubly sure by using slow-burning film for all purposes. There is still the element of danger from exchange fires to deal with?" And right there you think you have us properly squelched, in which assumption you err.

In the first place, we may largely set aside the danger to life in film exchange fires as being negligible. True, in rare instances serious injury, and even deaths, have resulted from such fires, but when we look about us and consider the fact that dozens (we believe we might say hundreds) are killed every day in the great mill of industry, whose lives could be easily saved did we care enough about the matter to spend the money necessary to make things as safe and as healthy as they might be made, the extremely few victims of film exchange fires sink, by comparison, into something very like entire insignificance. The few deaths and injuries are deplorable, yes, but still, by comparison, nothing to claw up the earth about.

But if the universal use of slow-burning films would operate to prevent even these few casualities, without involving serious objections to its general use, we would, of course, heartily indorse the demand for the adoption of slow-burning films for all purposes. In fact, however, there is very serious objection to the universal use of slow-burning films. In the first place, without any substantial gain in safety to theatre audiences we would be faced with a tremendous added overhead expense. Film manufacturers tell me that this would at present be about two cents per foot on all film, and probably never would be less than one cent. At two cents this would mean, for this country and Canada, if we take the life of film to average four months, at least two and one-half million dollars every four months, or $7,500,000 a year. Quite some item, if it is to be shouldered without substantial gain in safety, and to this must be added a decrease in film life said by film men to be about 20 tionable, as it is quite possible to arrange an automatic break which will stop the reel almost immediately when the film leaves it, at the same time stopping the motor. But my plan is to use a slow-running rewinder, so that there will be no slapping. I have said, and do now repeat: no film should be rewound at greater speed than 1,000 feet in six minutes, which is at the rate of 166 feet per minute. Even this is entirely too fast. Ten minutes to the thousand feet is fast enough, but I concede six minutes, because of Mr. Shoot 'Em Through. With slow rewinding, even at six minutes to the reel (less than 3 feet per second), it is unnessary that the projectionist watch the process. All he has to do is place the reels on the rewinder, start the motor and go on with his projection duties. The stock objection is that the projectionist should watch the rewinding to detect possible loose patches, etc., but this I deny, absolutely. With a photoplay on the screen, it is nothing less than a crime for the projectionist to be doing anything else under the sun but project that photoplay.

Come again, brother. Maybe we won't always agree, but I like a man with ideas, whether I always agree with them or not.

From Victoria, B. C.

Marvin H. Thoreau, Victoria, B. C., orders lens charts and sends letter, together with drawing of his projection room. The drawing is in lead pencil, and lack of time prevents me from redrawing it in ink for reproduction. Correspondents should remember that drawings MUST be made either with draftman's ink, or at least with a good grade of BLACK ink. If the sketch is a simple one, and of sufficient importance, I may re-draw it in ink for publication, but that is not possible in such an elaborate drawing as friend Thoreau sends in. It would require at least an hour to re-draw it—maybe more. His letter reads:

"Send lens charts. Don't need question booklets, have saved all the Worlds since 1911. Am sending carbon stubs as you requested. There is no such thing as a 'Vancouver Class A' card. It is a 'British Columbia First Class.' I've had one since they made 'em. Was, until recently, a member of Vancouver local union 348, but hold card in 168, Victoria, now. Am of the opinion that the place to focus the crater is about one inch on condenser side of the aperture. Seems to me this gives most even screen illumination. A practical aperture lens or short working distance (back focus) objective, with crater image located as suggested, should give good results. In cases where lens diameter or long working distance of objective would cause excessive loss with crater image on condenser side of film, it might be practical to advance it somewhat beyond the aperture, but this has tendency to cause ghost or uneven screen illumination. Seeing that I am from your old stamping grounds, Colorado—Canon City, to be exact—deal lightly with me.

"As to projection room, last time I wrote was projecting a 22 foot picture at 140 feet, with a 50 foot drop. D. C. supplied by an old Fairbanks-Morse. During the flu scare, a new projection room was built. Projection now is level, with a 17 foot picture at 88 feet. Screen surrounded by a 3 foot black border. D. C. supplied by a new Double Arc Transverter. Room is 15 feet wide by 9 deep. All wiring in conduit, with rheostats and house dimmers in room above, controls extended down to projection room. Front wall and inside of all ports dead black. Other walls will soon be black also. Spot port 18x24 inches is kept closed during projection. Between projectors is observation port 10x17 inches, covered with plate glass set at an angle near outside, which gives an 8 inch shadow box. The small observation port (8x12 inches) at right of right hand projector, and the lens ports, will also be glass covered as soon as air intake is completed. Revolving shutters are fitted to the conditions of the theatre. Lens ports also are stopped down to pass only the effective beam. Re-Winder geared down, but no automatic stop—yet. Spot covered to protect eyes, and colored glasses installed in lamphouse door ports so that arc can be observed without eyestrain. All incandescent lamps are so shaded that no light from them can reach the walls above bottom line of ports. Have a powerful pair of binoculars for focusing. Floor is covered with heavy cork linoleum. Transverter is located in easily accessible, well ventilated daylight room. Use Speer Hold Arc lower and Speer regular upper. Condensers meniscus plano-convex. Ordered Bi-convex, but they sent wrong focal length. Spot and stero use A. C. Spot amperage variable, 30 to 60, using National Special A. C. carbons. Current through Ft. Wayne Compensarc. From my chair between projectors I can easily see or reach following: ammeter, voltmeter, field rheostat control, clock, lamp control switches, motor control switches, dowsers, carbon feed handles, string controlling dowser on stero—in fact almost everything necessary to projection, including friction speed control. Am building an arc control which, due to a new principle will, I believe, have them all going South, insofar as concerns simplicity, cheapness and results."

Show us, brother, as to the control. Words cost little, but "the goods" delivered is what counts. We wish you success. Your installation seems to be pretty well beyond criticism. Friend boss has given you the things to do with, see to it that you deliver the goods on his screen, not sometimes, but ALL the time. The two switches you ask me, in a side note, to "guess what they are for," are the shot circuiting switches which act to place the two lamps in series. Please act as my messenger and convey to the members of No. 168 my very best regards. If I said "Vancouver license," it was an error. I knew it was for all British Columbia.

Resistance Problem.

Frank Gattie, Pheonix, Arizona, member Newport News, Va., L. U. No. 264, desires light on the following:

"This is my first letter to the department, though I have been reading it, and getting good dope from it too. Saw an account of the Vancouver, B. C., examination for projectionists and would like to know how to hook up that bunch of rheostats so as to get 100 amperes from a 220 volt supply. There are three 50 ampere, 110 volt, two 30 ampere, 110 volt, three 25 ampere, 110 volt, and two 15 ampere, 110 volt rheostats. I also would like to know what difference in amperage would result if four 110 volt, 25 ampere rheostats which were connected in multiple series to a 220 volt supply were changed to series multiple. My own idea is that the series multiple connection would give 100 amperes, whereas the multiple would only give 50. Am I right or wrong?"

As to the matter of getting 100 amperes out of the rheostats named, I don't myself know whether it could be done, and cannot stop now to figure it out. When I wrote the article in question I merely intended to convey an idea of the way things are done. I could not possibly remember exactly what rheostats were actually in use, except that there were several of them, of varying amperage and voltage; also that the examiner said the candidate was asked to figure out what combinations to use to get various amperages. And anyhow, it is a good brain exerciser for the fans, so I'll just pass it along. Can any of you get 100 amperes out of that mess of rheostats, supply being 220. Figuring it out is quite simple. First you will ascertain what ohmic resistance you need for 100 amperes with 220 volts supply. You then figure the resistance of each separate rheostat, remembering that the 110s must be in series groups of at least two. Go to it and let us see what you can get out of it. Remember the resistance of the arc. As to the other matter, why with only four rheostats there would be no difference at all. This for the reason that you could not have but two rheostats in each series of your multiple series, and the series multiple would necessarily amount to precisely the same thing. See drawing. At first glance you might be inclined to say there is no difference, but closer examination will convince you that when it comes to incandescent lighting, for which the systems were designed, there is. I cannot imagine a case where series multiple (parallel series is the correct term) would be used for resistance, though multiple series (series parallel) might be used in case of high voltage and small capacity, low voltage rheostats. In series parallel a number of incandescents were used in each multiple, so that the burning out of one lamp would not have so much effect on the others.

per cent., which would act to add other hundreds of thousands of dollars to the bill, WITHOUT SUBSTANTIAL GAIN IN SAFETY, insofar as theatres be concerned. So much for finance, in the rough. Were this all, we might consent to sit silent, but it is by far the least serious objection. As matters now stand, the industry has, after years of effort, made the projection room of theatres entirely safe, insofar as concerns danger to the audience; also has succeeded in instilling into the average projectionist a very considerable degree of skill and knowledge and into practically all of them knowledge in some degree. Moreover, even the most case-hardened to-hell-with-the-public theatre mis-manager will admit that the man in charge of projectors where inflammable film is used must have at least some degree of skill and experience. Change this by making the use of slow-burning film universal, and watch the school boys flock into the projection rooms of small theatres, at about five dollars a week per flock, and cheap men of no knowledge or experience take the place of a projectionist in many more pretentious theatres. Which means that, with no gain in safety as applied to fire, or next to none, huge danger is set up for the industry by reason of inferior screen results, to say nothing of added elements of eye strain through complete ignorance of the new men, whose sole "virtue" (?) will be their cheapness.

For these reasons, chiefly for the last named, we are NOT enthusiastic about the universal adoption of full size non-inflammable film which will gain us next to nothing, and bring in its train heavy additional expense and great damage. As to those who think we are, as a member of the safety committee, swayed by anything in God's world but what we firmly believe is RIGHT, why they are entirely welcome to their views and opinions. If we were guilty we might feel worried. We are NOT worried.

A Gold Mine of Information.

A. G. Smith, Calgary, Alberta, says:

"Will you kindly advise as to where I can get copy of 'Optic Projection,' by Simon Henry and Henry Phelps Gage? Would also like to know the formula for matching up the optical train of the projector, which same has been recently published. Although your handbook is a gold mine of information, I am seeking the very latest and am willing to pay for it."

Good! That's the sort of man who will get ahead. Optic Projection may be had from the Comstock Publishing Company, Ithaca, New York; price, $3.00. The latest lens charts were published in December 28 issue, but every copy of that issue has long since been gobbled up. Yielding to the demand of many projectionists we have had the charts printed on heavy paper for framing. Size is 11x17 inches. Remit fifty cents to Moving Picture World and one will be sent you by mail.

The Matter of Mazda Lamps.

Fred H. Miller, Dayton, Pennsylvania, asks advice as follows:

"Was advised to write you regarding following. Account limited power in this town, same derived from one 32-volt, 3 KW Delco light plant, am compelled to change to 600-watt Mazda. Will you advise me as to length of throw I should use with this lamp ? Want a picture as large as I can get. Am advised should use about a 35-foot throw and a No. 2½ lens to get a picture 12 feet wide. Will you kindly advise as to this also?"

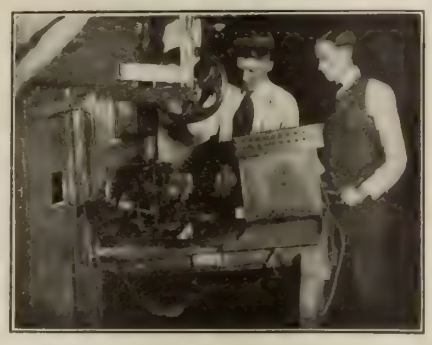
This department desires to serve, insofar as it may, but up to this time it has not felt justified in offering much advice in matters concerning the Mazda lamp projection proposition. Take the matter up with the Nicholas Power Co., 90 Gold street, New York City, whose machine you have and who will presumably supply the new equipment. I thing there is nothing to be gained by so short a distance of projection as 35 feet, and at that distance, with a 12-foot picture your definition (sharpness of picture) will inevitably suffer. Would rather you would be guided by the Mazda folks, however. Some day I hope to be able to really study the whole Mazda proposition and be able to get to the bottom of its many phases.

A Tank Town Equipment.

Ray Miller, now on the road with "Hearts of the World," sends in a photograph which is interesting. He says:

"Enclosed find picture of what was a projector, beside which is my 'umble self (X) and my manager, Mr. Lybrook. I don't want to take up much space in our helpful department with small-town stuff, but just have to bust out to some one, and, as you seem to be the only trouble doctor who is a friend to the projectionist, I have picked on you. I have been with 'Hearts of the World' for five months, playing the tank towns. Attached picture is a sample of what I too often run up against and have to use to put on a high-class show. This particular horrible example was in Spencer, Ind. However, the outfit is not quite so bad as it looks. It did not damage my films, and for a one-projector affair the show went over quite well, with very good screen results. But the very worst I have ever seen was in the theatre we showed in in Bloomington, Ind. There were two very ancient Power's Six projectors for which the theatre manager refuses to buy repairs. These wrecks did about $200 damage to my films. Bloomington is an excellent show town, but both picture theatres are owned by one man, and the projection is pretty awful; not through fault of the projectionists, but from lack of proper equipment.

The photograph shows you city men what some (some, mind you) small-town projectionists are handed with which to give a "show." Notice the upper reel-hanger. Smacks of 1898 or so, does it not? Take note of the wooden walled "fire-proof" projection room. Once over the real classy machine table! Take a slant at the wiring. Apparently the conduit has gone out to get lunch and the National Code is taking a nap. Verily I say unto you it is some outfit. And that thing is to place before an audience "Hearts of the World," which cost into the hundreds of thousands in the making. That wreck is to portray the art of an aggregation of artists receiving into the tens of thousands of dollars a week! Really, isn't it just a bit absurd? Violates the eternal fitness of things a bit, does it not?



Some Small Town Equipment.
Discovered by Ray Miller and his manager in Spencer, Ind.

Automatic Arc Control.

Parrott and Virgil, Projectionists, Spokane, Washington, seem to have invented an automatic arc control, concerning which they write as follows:

"In recent issue we noticed something said concerning G. A. Metcalf, San Francisco, having the only practical arc controller now on the market, same being for Power's projectors only. We are using an arc controller on our Simplex projectors which has proven satisfactory, and which could be used on any standard projector. The device is absolutely dependable. We never have the slightest trouble with it. It can be regulated for any amperage. Would cost about $45 to install. It has the advantage that it is out of the way and requires very little attention.

"You did not visit the Casino while in Spokane, and we boast of having one of the best equipped projection rooms in the West. Have read the department for five years past, and have derived much benefit therefrom; also have a handbook. 'Un libro muy buno para todos los operadores y munchas gracias por el buen trabajo que nos as dado!' Would very much like your advice as to whether or no a practical controller which could be installed at cost named would be worth patenting. Find enclosed stamps for question booklets and carbon copy."

That is too much of a question for me. Even had I examined the device and found it to be strictly first class, I could not tell you whether or no it would pay you to patent it. There was a really excellent controller made in San Francisco, two years ago. It could be installed for less than $50, but so far as I know, it is not now being made or sold. Apparently, while there is a sale, and a considerable one, for arc controllers, the sale is not enough to make their marketing very profitable, if we are to judge by what seems to have happened to those that have gone before. Possibly their taking off the market is but temporary, due to war conditions. Possibly they are not all off the market. I do not know. Assuming your controller to be all that you claim, still I would not care to advise you to put it out, unless you could get some large firm engaged in making and marketing motion picture specialties to take hold of it, manufacture and push it, on a royalty basis, of course. That would be my attitude toward the matter, were I in your place. But it is only my own view. The thing is really up to you. If you had such a nice projection room, why the D—avy Jones did you not set forth that fact while I was in your city instead of now, huh?

Automatic Rewinder Brake.

W. R. Gwynn, Cheyenne, Wyoming, contributes the following:

"The device illustrated in attached sketch would, if properly and universally employed, save thousands of trailers from being whipped to pieces on the rewind table, as well as prevent audiences from being subjected to nervous breakdown at the very most absorbing moment of the play by the unearthly racket caused by slapping film. The sketch is, I think, pretty well self explanatory. Lever attached to brush follows film roll down until brush disengages metal disc 3, which acts to break the circuit. This disc may be adjusted to any desired position merely by turning the knob at right. This knob may be procured from any dealer in typewriter repair parts. With just a little practice the projectionist may so time the breaking of the circuit that it will occur before all the film is rewound and the momentum of the motor armature will finish the job, so that the rewinder will come to a gentle stop.

"I have always used the table in your handbook in adjusting projector optical system, and with astounding results in improvement against the old hit or miss (usually miss) system of guess work. Am enclosing fifty cents for new lens charts. I just read, with considerable interest and some amusement, your article in April 19 issue on tension and tight takeups. Must say that therein you did certainly say something."

As to the rewinder circuit breaker, unquestionably it will work, but there are, I think, better ways of doing it. The lever dragging on the film is a bit objec-

OMAHA HOUSES BEAT THEIR OWN RECORD

Big Features, Well Exploited Have Crowded the Theatres and Made the Longest Runs Possible

BIG features, exploited in a big way, are holding the boards at Omaha theatres in a manner that the motion picture people of the Middle West never saw before. Week runs are common, two week runs are becoming more ordinary, and popular features are being re-booked in a way that the trade would not have believed a year ago.

"Mickey" Was Sensational Success.

"Mickey," at the Brandeis Theatre, the largest legitimate house in the city, was a sensational success, breaking all records during bad weather and competing events that would have occupied the city's unanimous attention under ordinary circumstances. The picture returned for a run of four days at the same house, at increased prices, and again met capacity business. It returned for a week's run at the Muse, a prominent downtown house, at popular prices. Then it is "standing them up" at the Magic, a big house in the southern part of the city.

"Red Lantern" Runs Two Weeks.

"The Red Lantern," exploited with a giant front, costly lobby display, large orchestra and a ballet of fourteen pretty girls led by a famous dancer, brought in a surprising total during a run of two weeks. The picture is now making one and two-week runs elsewhere in the territory.

In one week "Mickey," "The Red Lantern," "Destiny" and "Daddy Long Legs" were running at the same time in big downtown houses, and every one of them playing to surprising business. The Mary Pickford picture, with the admission price raised at the Rialto, the newest and largest exclusive motion picture house in the city, set new records in attendance. It is returning soon for a four-day run at the Strand, another large downtown house.

"The Unpardonable Sin" Plays to Capacity.

"The Unpardonable Sin" played at the Boyd all one week to high prices and capacity crowds. Half-page advertisements were used, the canopy in front of the theatre was housed in a specially built front, and the musical effect introduced caused much comment. "For Better, for Worse" was running at the Rialto, and "The Third Degree" was being put over at the Strand in a big way, at the same time. The Sun Theatre was showing Theda Bara in "A Woman There Was" for a five-day run, and Manager Goldberg reports business above the average.

This is the situation in Omaha in June —an unheard of boom in business—and showmen are confident that the rush will continue all summer, with even bigger things in prospect next fall.

Admission prices of 50 cents and $1.00 are common in Omaha on the bigger productions.

MacIntyre Succeeds Skirboll.

William N. Skirboll, for several months manager of the Metro Omaha exchange, has been appointed to the Metro branch in Detroit, and will take up his work there, June 16. He is succeeded in Omaha by S. MacIntyre, who has been with the Metro Film Service in Minneapolis.

W. C. T. U. Advocates More Clothes.

The Frances Willard branch of the Women's Christian Temperance Union in Omaha, recently passed a resolution condemning the ballet used in introducing Nazimova in "The Red Lantern" at the Boyd Theatre, Omaha, where the picture made a record breaking run of two weeks. The W. C. T. U. protested that the ballet girls did not wear enough clothing.

And Now Comes a New Fan.

Fred Largen, of the Lyric Theatre, Creighton, Nebraska, has invented a ventilating fan, types of which he has installed in the Lyda Theatre, Grand Island, the Crystal, at Holdredge, in three houses in Hastings, in the Muse, Omaha, and the Liberty, Council Bluffs.

Show Free Pictures to Draw Crowds.

At Hordville, Neb., the merchants of the town have formed the Hordville Amusement Company and bought out the local theatre. They show free motion pictures in the theatre and on the streets Saturday nights, to attract the farmer trade. The pictures shown are Universal releases.

CINCINNATI HOUSES DO BIG BUSINESS

Wisely Selected Programs and Well Ventilated Theatres Proved To Be the Winning Combination

BUSINESS in the Cincinnati moving picture houses during the past week has been exceptionally good, even when compared with the general good run of business prevalent for the past several months. Few weeks in recent years have shown bookings of such strength, all of the houses presenting bills that appealed strongly to all classes of patrons. The attendance at most of the houses in the central portion of the city was of record-breaking proportions and two of the films will be held over for a second week, while another will be booked for an early return engagement. The Grand did a land office business with "Mickey," and at no performance was it possible to accommodate all of those seeking admission. Manager Aylward says that 25,000 people saw the picture the past week and he expects the second week's business to equal the record set for the first. "The Unpardonable Sin" at the Lyric, duplicated the success of the Grand, and Manager Libson will hold the film over for a second week's showing. The Walnut with "Daddy Long Legs" enjoyed an exceptionally successful run, and this picture will be booked for a return engagement in the near future. All the other downtown houses played to big crowds, and from present indications there will be no let up in patronage. The combination of good pictures and efficient cooling and ventilation has proved the attraction that draws money into the box office.

Wants Reduction in Picture Theatre Taxation.

The Nordland Amusement Company, of Cincinnati, has protested against the proposed repeal of the so-called luxury tax unless similar action is taken with regard to the amusement tax. It is pointed out that the moving picture theatre is the most overtaxed institution in the country, paying a license tax to the Government and to the city, a property tax, personal tax, income tax, tax on reels, tax on admission tickets and other taxes too numerous to mention. This but gives concrete expression to the views of many of the men engaged in a business, which, they claim, has been doing its bit and more toward the financial support of the Government.

Grossman Returns After Closing Many Big Sales

HARRY GROSSMAN, vice president and general manager of Oliver Films, Inc., has recently returned from an extended trip to the Pacific Coast and a number of important territorial centers, where he arranged for the distribution of "The Carter Case," the Craig Kennedy serial featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh.

Mr. Grossman states that prospects for good serials are more than encouraging and that there is a wide market for this type of picture. "I encountered no difficulty in placing "The Carter Case" with the best exchanges," said Mr. Grossman. "I interviewed a large number of exhibitors who gave me the impression that the market for serials is on the upgrade. It was particularly gratifying to have them tell me they intended to book 'The Carter Case' because of its success and popularity. Many had never shown a serial in their houses. My impressions were such as to encourage me to continue the production of episode pictures of the better kind, even better than 'The Carter Case,' if possible."

While away Mr. Grossman arranged for the distribution of "The Carter Case" with the following exchanges: Supreme System, Minneapolis, for Minnesota, North and South Dakota; Crescent Film Exchange, Kansas City, for Western Missouri and Kansas City; Arrow Film Company, St. Louis, for Eastern Missouri, St. Louis and Southern Illinois; Consolidated Film Company, San Francisco, for California, and the Southwestern Film Corporation, Dallas, Texas, for the territory of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

With the exception of several minor territories, "The Carter Case" is now being distributed throughout the country, with bookings being registered for a large percentage records, and it is indicated that the serial is one of the most popular yet marketed.

T. R. Gardiner Will Reissue W. H. Production's Reissues

T. R. GARDINER, president of the Gardiner Syndicate, Buffalo, in a flying trip to New York City this week, closed with W. H. Productions Company for New York state, one of the biggest single deals for reissues that has yet been made. It is announced as involving a deal of $60,000. Under former contracts, Mr. Gardiner has been handling W. H. Productions Company's reissues for the past year, under the new deal, he is taking new prints of all subjects for both his Buffalo office and his newly opened Albany office, as he has decided to reissue the W. H. reissues for a second time.

In speaking of the development of his business in New York state, Mr. Gardiner says:

"About a year and a half ago, I started up in business with about $25 in the bank, having up to this time dropped about $15,000 for film experience. I then arranged to purchase W. H. Productions reissues and from that time on my business developed extraordinarily. W. H. reissues were so successfully in my territory and the request for reshowing from principal theatres of such a nature as to warrant me to purchase additional prints. A majority of exhibitors prefer re-showing these subjects to many of the new short subjects.

"In addition to closing this new deal with W. H. Productions Company, I have also secured 'Mickey,' 'Yankee Doodle in Berlin' and the 'Birth of a Race.'

"In contracting for 'Custer's Last Fight,' one of the W. H. Productions latest revivals, I believe I have secured an exceptional box office asset. I intend to show this in leading theatres throughout the state as a super-attraction.

"I attribute a great deal of my success to booking entertaining pictures and maintaining an efficient organization whose paramount thoughts are efficiency and service."

Sawyer Makes Another Trip in Interest of S-L Picture

ARTHUR H. SAWYER, of S-L Pictures, has left on another special sales trip in behalf of "Virtuous Men," the initial production sponsored by himself and Herbert Lubin. Mr. Sawyer will cover the South and will stop at Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Richmond, Atlantic, New Orleans and Dallas. He will arrange for special openings of the E. K. Lincoln starring vehicle in the first run theatres in the various territories. This is in accordance with a plan of S-L Pictures, to prove through the box-office the drawing power and entertainment value of "Virtuous Men" as a first run production.

State rights buyers will be specially invited to attend these openings in each city. In connection with this plan, Mr. Sawyer will also take the opportunity to point out to the state rights buyers the remarkable exploitation campaign which the exhibitor and buyer may avail themselves of for this attraction. All of the exploitation helps and publicity schemes which perfected at the New York office will be placed into effect at each opening and the buyer will have an opportunity of seeing for himself the value of promotion in connection with the title of the picture and its many interesting features.

The S-L executive is carrying with him a complete line of accessories and supplies, among which several novelties.

Bert Lubin, also of S-L Pictures, is introducing the same scheme of selling and exploitation in behalf of "Virtuous Men" in Western territory.

Excellent Cast Announced for "The Broken Butterfly"

IN the cast of the newest Maurice Tourneur offering, which is to be released as "The Broken Butterfly," the following well known screen players have leading roles: Pauline Starke, who has been starring in many offerings Lewis J. Cody, who will be remembered for his work in "Mickey" and other features. Mary Alden, who in the past has been associated with such prominent directors as D. W. Griffith, Marshall Neilan and Cecil De Mille; others in the cast include "Peaches" Jackson and Nina Byron.

Mr. Tourneur has returned to California after a brief visit to New York. The cutting and titling of "The Broken Butterfly" is completed and Mr. Tourneur's staff is awaiting his final O. K. before sending to his New York office the first print.

Guinans and Mack Swains Being Rapidly Closed Out

THE Frohman Amusement Corporation is rapidly closing out the remaining territory in the United States on the Texas Guinan two-reel productions and report the closing of contracts for the Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico and Southern Idaho with the Arrow Picture Company of Denver, Col., of which Joseph J. Goodstein is president. Mr. Goodstein also signed a contract for the twenty-six Mack Swain comedies for same territory.

Contract was also closed with the Southwestern Pictures Corporation on both the Texas Guinan and Mack Swain subjects for Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

With the closing of these contracts there are but three territories in the United States as yet undisposed of on the Mack Swain Comedies, and every contract is announced as having been closed without even the screening of a single production. On the Guinan Westerns the same situation applies.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation's franchise to state rights buyers provides for thirteen two-reel Texas Guinan subjects with the right on the part of the exchange to renew for thirteen more at any time before the delivery of the tenth picture, and approximately thirty per cent. of the exchanges are said to have already exercised their right of renewal and are urging the continuance of the series.

The only difficulty encountered, says President W. L. Sherrill, is in securing stories that contain adequate material for these Western productions. "It is quite easy to acquire two-reel scenarios, but I seek stories written for five-reel productions, so that we may boil them down to two-reel subjects thereby insuring that every foot will contain action to the utmost. We have completed the first seven subjects, the titles to which are 'The Girl of Hell's Agony,' 'The She Wolf,' 'South of Santa Fe,' 'Some Gal,' 'Little Miss Deputy' and 'The Dangerous Little Devil.' The seventh production, on which we are now working is temporarily entitled 'The Dead Man's Hand.' The Texas Guinan subjects will have as a main title something to indicate the feminine."

Pioneer Has Three Novel Press Books.

Within the next week, press books on The Boomerang, The Sins of the Children, Virtuous Sinners, and The Girl From Nowhere, will be completed and ready for the use of the exhibitor.

These books are said to have been constructed on radically different lines from usual publications of this nature, and are artistic as well as being complete guides for the exhibitor. The sole purpose being to give the theatre manager assistance in putting these pictures over in the most effective and economical manner.

Peggy Hyland in "Cheating Herself."

Peggy Hyland is reputed to be an excellent business woman, but recently she has been "Cheating Herself"—this being the title selected for a Fox picture on which she has been working under the temporary name of "The Bed She Made." The story was written by Charles Mortimer Peck, and pictures the efforts of a wealthy girl to lead her family from idleness into labor and consequent content by a fake theft of their fortune.

"The Carter Case" Booked for Loew's in Washington

SIDNEY B. LUST, president of Super Film Attractions, of Washington, distributors in that territory for "The Carter Case," the Craig Kennedy serial, announces the booking of the picture in Loew's Columbia Theatre, Washington, for half week runs. The serial will open at the Columbia, June 19.

Mr. Lust has begun his exploitation of the serial with an extensive advertising campaign, including full page advertisements in the newspapers of Washington and Baltimore and a widespread poster campaign throughout his territory. He announces that he is making bookings at a rapid rate.

For the Washington opening, at which government officials and other prominent Washingtonians are expected to be present, Mr. Lust has arranged for the presence of Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh, the stars of the serial. Following their appearance at the Columbia the two stars will be the guests at a banquet at the Hotel Willard.

Jerry Abrams of Pioneer on Transcontinental Trip

JERRY ABRAMS, who has been appointed special representative by the Pioneer Film Corporation, is now on his way across the country with the latest Pioneer Features. The reception which has been given him at exchange centers from Philadelphia to Atlanta, is looked upon as an indication that his trip will be a complete success.

He is offering the state right buyers of the country several big Pioneer productions, among them being The Boomerang, the Sins of the Children, The Girl from Nowhere, Virtuous Sinners, and Suspicion.

Gaumont Graphic Shows Effect of Bomb Explosions

THE current issue of the Gaumont Graphic No. 63 shows the destruction wrought in an attempt to blow up the homes of the Attorney General and many prominent judges by means of bombs, together with the delivery of newspapers in England by airplane; the launching of a 7,200-ton ship made of cement; the collision of two steamers in a fog near Boston; the arrival in the United States of the first wounded Czecho-Slovak soldiers, who have served in Siberia for three years.

Particular attention is called by the Gaumont Company to the beautiful photography in the scenes in this issue picturing the opening of the rowing season. These particular scenes reach a high mark of excellence.

The current issue of the Gaumont News No. 63 shows President Wilson receiving an honorary degree in Paris from the Academy of Moral and Political Science; the first aerial honeymoon; French generals who have been awarded American decorations; the wreck of a mail airplane, from which the pilot aviator leaped to his death; stars of the screen and footlights in a hospital aid drive; placing German among the dead languages; new stunts on bicycles; and many other news topics.

Lust Books Swain Comedies for Big Washington Houses

SIDNEY B. LUST, who controls the rights in the District of Columbia for the Frohman Amusement Corporation's Mack Swain comedies announces that Loew's Palace Theatre, one of the most beautiful in Washington, has booked the entire series of twenty-six comedies and will present the initial release, "Daddy Ambrose," during the week of June 3.

In the newspapers, in connection with the main feature, the advertisements list as "a special added attraction, 'Daddy Ambrose,' Mack Swain comedy." This is said to be the first time any motion picture theatre in the District of Columbia has advertised a single reel production as an added attraction in the daily papers.

Mr. Lust also advises he has contracted for two first runs on this series, the other one being Crandall's Metropolitan.

Letters received by the Frohman Amusement Corporation indicate that many state rights buyers are exploiting these comedies as productions of merit and not merely as fillers. These comedies are said to be devoid of slapstick and to be made from stories that depend on straight humor rather than on grotesque situations.

Sale of "Virtuous Men" Made for Three States

THE announcement this week of another sale of "Virtuous Men," starring E. K. Lincoln and directed by Ralph Ince, was made by S-L Pictures. This production has been acquired for California, Arizona and Nevada by the Liberty Film Company, of San Francisco. It was contracted for by Mat Magner, president of the company, which is distributing only productions warranting special exploitation and long runs. It is a mark of confidence on the part of Mr. Magner that he purchased "Virtuous Men" without the usual screen examination.

Due to the presentation of the S-L Picture in several large theatres, together with the unusual exploitation campaign offered as an adjunct to the production, the Liberty Film Company contracted for the E. K. Lincoln feature by wire. Mr. Magner will make arrangements for an extensive distribution campaign in his territory.

Up to date "Virtuous Men" has been sold for the following territories: Canada, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, New Jersey, California, Arizona and Nevada. J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., controls the entire rights to "Virtuous Men" for foreign territories.

Bacon Uses Priceless India Set in "Sun-Up"

GERALD F. BACON, of Gerald F. Bacon Productions, now in the second week of producing the first of a series of eighteen specials for release by Frank G. Hall, has used as one of the "props" for a triple interior set, showing the library, drawing and reception room of an English home of wealth, a library set consisting of two candlesticks, inkstand, flower vase and two fruit jars, that was originally made for a rajah of India by a religious fanatic who was put to death immediately after the completion of the work, which is said to have taken more than two years to do. The work is in platinum and gold, and according to a prominent New York jeweler is of priceless value. The set belongs to Mr. Bacon.

Mr. Bacon is photo-dramatizing an original play by Max Marcin, author of "The House of Glass," under the title "Sun-Up," with Luck Cotton in the featured role, Oliver D. Bailey, is directing the work.

M. H. Hoffman Visits Chicago

M. H. HOFFMAN, the general Manager of the Pioneer Film Corporation, is now in Chicago attending several business conferences of an important nature.

Since Mr. Hoffman assumed control at the Pioneer office, this concern has not only maintained its position as one of the most prominent independent film companies, but has added such players as Henry B. Walthall, Cleo Madison, Alma Hanlon and Stewart Holmes to its list of stars.

"The Boomerang," "The Sins of the Children," "Virtuous Sinners" and "The Girl From Nowhere" are among the attractions added to the Pioneer roster during the last few months, together with "The Long Arm of Mannister," "Confession," and "Parted Curtains," in all of which Henry B. Walthall appears.

Mr. Hoffman expects to be back at his desk within a week or two.

Ruth Roland Uses Some Ink for "Ruth Roland Serials, Inc."

Charles Pathe and Paul Brunet, interested, watch the signing of the contract which will give Pathe the distribution of Miss Roland's own serial productions.

Producers' and Distributors' News

Striking Double Exposures Promised in "Bridal Night"

A NEW trick in double exposure photography will be introduced to the motion picture industry with the distribution late this month of Alice Brady's coming Select picture, "His Bridal Night."

Credit for the perfection of the new device is divided between Photographer George Folsey and Director Kenneth Webb, who had charge of the photography and direction of Miss Brady. Mr. Folsey was originally assistant photographer to Jacques Monteran, the French photography expert. Shortly after work was started on the picture, however, Mr. Monteran was called to France on business and Mr. Folsey was left in charge of the remaining shots, which amounted practically to the entire production.

As "His Bridal Night" is a dual role attraction in which Miss Brady is seen as twin sisters, Mr. Webb was anxious to perfect an idea for the making of double exposure shots which would eliminate the usual fine dividing line that is sometimes visible in double exposure screen photography. Mr. Folsey and Director Webb have had such success with their device that Miss Brady's coming attraction will show her smiling at herself, shaking hands with herself and appearing in two different places in one scene without the faintest trace of the dividing line which is at times noticeable in double shots.

College Men Like "Daddy Long Legs."

The Gerbacht sisters, of Ames, Iowa, proprietors of the Twin Star Theatre there, never let a college picture go unbooked if they can help it, because right near the theatre is the big Iowa Agricultural College.

By telegraphing, telephoning and pleading, they booked "Daddy Long Legs" from the First National Exchange in Omaha for three days, just before the commencement season at the big college, and enjoyed capacity business.

They did it by plenty of newspaper advertising, plenty of billboard space, and an abundance of advertising literature placed where the students were most likely to get it. They increased their maximum price from 15 cents to 35 cents, too—merely an increase of 133 per cent. —and they got it without a whimper.

Universal Announcement for "Sundown Trail" Film

MONROE SALISBURY is to be surrounded by a strong cast in his next production, "Sundown Trail," according to announcement made by Rollin E. Sturgeon, Universal director, who has been chosen to direct this new Salisbury vehicle from the pen of J. G. Hawks. Alice Eliot will have the principal feminine role. Beatrice Dominguez will also have an important part.

Clyde Fillmore and Carl Stockdale have the leading masculine roles in support of Salisbury.

Salisbury will be seen as "Quiet" Carter, a red-blooded, blue-blooded, Southerner, who goes West to one of the picturesque mining camps of the early days.

Music, Soda and Furniture Boom "Upstairs and Down"

THE showing at the Strand Theatre, New York, the week of June 9 to June 14, of the first of Olive Thomas' Selznick Pictures, "Upstairs and Down," was accompanied by various phases of local publicity, which were planned to keep this much advertised attraction in the attention of the amusement seeking public. All of the Sunday papers in New York City carried unusually large advertisements of the attraction at the Strand, the spaces used being about four times the size of the usual Strand advertisement. In some special mediums, even larger display advertising was shown.

One of the biggest publicity coups was the arrangement for full window displays in one hundred five and ten cent stores, in Manhattan and the other boroughs, of the Watterson, Berlin and Snyder song, "Upstairs and Down," which was inspired by and dedicated to Miss Thomas in this production.

Another stunt was the "Upstairs and Down" sundae which was sold at the soda fountains in sixty-nine of the Liggett drug stores in Greater New York. In each of the stores where "Upstairs and Down" sundaes were sold, a large streamer was stretched across the mirror at the back of the fountain, advertising the sundae, Olive Thomas and the photoplay, "Upstairs and Down."

Still another publicity display was held in one of the main show windows of the Spears Furniture Company, on Thirty-fourth street. The interior of the window was bulit in the shape of a bungalow showing an attractive breakfast room scene, while a large card called attention to the fact that Spears devoted the week to specializing in furniture for upstairs and downstairs. In addition to the window showing, the Spears company carried "Upstairs and Down" advertising in their newspaper displays for the week.

THE Outing-Chester release for this week, "Mr. Outing Climbs Aboard," tells a particularly timely story. It is the tale of a "dry" expedition collecting data for the days to come.

First of all the thought of bottling bath water for posterity is conceived—and where a better source of supply than the great Victoria Falls? It is feared that with the coming of prohibition the use of water for drinking purposes will deplete the supply to such an extent that none will be available for bathing purposes.

So we see Victoria Falls—the majestic drop of the main falls, the beautiful tissue of the rainbow falls, the swirling Eastern cataract and Devil's cataract, with scenes above the falls along the Zambesi and below in the deep and narrow canyon.

Having concluded that the supply is ample, the question of the effect of water on the nervous system arises. So a trek to the edge of the vast Kalahari desert is made, and at a British Remount depot a great herd of camels is found. They are being broken to ride, and their remarkable gyrations and the eerie attitudes into which they tie themselves, suggests to the student that water has a strangely exhilirating effect upon the system.

Metro Uses Heavy Settings in Feature Starring Lytell

WORK progresses on Metro's "It's Easy to Make Money" by methods which show it is easier to spend it.

The expense to which Metro is going in producing this Lytell vehicle is caused by the transplantation of a famous Chicago cafe from State street, in the Middle Western metropolis, to Hollywood, by an immense replica of a popular Long Island country club with its dining rooms, billiard halls and veranda; and by the erection of one of the biggest court rooms the theatre has ever seen, an exact reproduction of Part 5, General Sessions, in the old Criminal Courts building, New York.

Trade Showing for New Pathe Serial.

The first three episodes of the Western Photoplays serial, "The Great Gamble," to be released by Pathe on August 3, will be given a trade showing on Friday, June 20, at 11:30 a. m., at the New York Theatre Roof. The serial was written and directed by Joseph A. Golden, and has as its co-stars, Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison. The supporting cast includes Richard Neill, Warren Cook, William Cavanaugh, Billy Moran and Edith Thornton.

Tennessee Mountain Play for Russell.

Stephen Fox has commenced another William Russell subject for the American. It is to be a drama of the Tennessee mountains, and has for its tentative title "The Other Side of Eden." Fox wrote almost exclusively for Russell before joining the army, and since he was mustered out several months ago he has turned out several scripts for the big "Flying A" stars.

New Thomas Film Depicts Social Unrest of Nation

TWO big events have reared their heads in the news of the nation within a fortnight to give added point and timeliness to the newly complete Harry-Raver-Augustus Thomas-Four Star drama, "The Volcano," starring Leah Baird and directed by George Irving, for W. W. Hodkinson distribution.

Frank A. Vanderlip, prominent financier, made a speech giving the gloomy but truthful conditions of the European nations with a forecast of the dangers that lay ahead of the American nation through the introduction of unrest.

A few days later the eastern half of the country rocked under bomb explosions simultaneously timed in a dozen of the larger cities and designed primarily to create a reign of terror in the nation.

Augustus Thomas' drama, "The Volcano," now being edited finally for release shortly, pictures the condition that has now burst into being in the nation. Western Canada is now in the throes of disorder such as the Dominion has never before known, the flame of unrest having spread from Winnipeg to British Columbia.

Only the other day, the Mayor of Toledo was forced to call upon the War Department, through the Governor of Ohio, for troops to quell disturbances after a week of rioting, during which many were killed and scores wounded. Clashes between thousands of idle workers and loyal factory employes have been frequent. The production depicts scores of incidents paralleling actual happenings in this period of social unrest.

And throughout the picture is threaded a story of love and devotion more human, more absorbing than any Augustus Thomas has previously told.

Leah Baird is accorded strong support by Edwin Langford, W. H. Gibson, Mme. Elvira Amazar, and Jacob Kingsbury.

Mary Thurman Plays Adventuress Role.

Mary Thurman has begun an engagement at the American's Santa Barbara studios in support of William Russell in "This Hero Stuff," the new satire by Stephen Fox, in which the "Flying A" star will be presented. Miss Thurman has the role of "Teddy Craig," a sort of adventuress, although by no means the conventional vamp. Henry King is directing the production.

"City of Comrades" Press Book Issued by Goldwyn

THE new "Business Builder," as it is styled by Goldwyn, takes the place of the four page newspaper-size Press Sheet issued in the past, and presents several distinct innovations in scientific advertising and publicity for Tom Moore's new drama, "The City of Comrades."

The new press and service book, to be issued on each Goldwyn Picture and Extra, embodies sixteen pages and is produced on special quality white coated stock. Under the heading: Lobby Displays—Catchy Cutouts—Mr. Stromberg has simplified the execution of lobby exhibits and displays by the use of pen and ink drawings, illustrating just how the exhibitor or decorator should carry out the suggestions and plans given in the typed description.

Another feature of the book is the analytical editorial on page three. In this article, Mr. Stromberg summarizes the box-office possibilities of the picture. It is not the customary outburst of alluring adjectives and bewildering phrases, but a calm, sincere and straightforward analysis of the pertinent selling angle as proved by the picture itself.

Three sets of newspaper advertisements and one set of production publicity cuts and matrices have been added to the number supplied in the past. In addition to these, there are several pen and ink portraits of Tom Moore to be used by showmen who prepare their own advertisements in varying sizes and layouts.

The front cover of the book features the Salvation Army phrase—"A Man May Be Down, But He's Never Out!" The cover layout shows three full-view portraits of Tom Moore.

The publicity stories, edited by Director of Publicity Ralph Block, are of such news value as to catch the approval of motion picture editors. Several feature articles, including one which tells of "The Baffling Art of 'Make-Up'," by Tom Moore, himself, are included in the press pages.

Metro Chooses Well Known Stories as Film Subjects

THE big advertising value offered by Metro's screen adaptations of original stories published in popular magazines is being nationally capitalized by exhibitors throughout the country who realize the popularity of such stories among the identical public which forms the patronage of the motion picture theatres. Metro has consistently adhered to its policy of pictures based on stories by such well known writers as Kate Jordan, Wallace Irwin, Frederick Orin Bartlett, William Dudley Pelley and others, all regular contributors to the Saturday Evening Post and sponsors for many of the Metro plays.

A story is now promised by Bartlett, with the popular star, Bert Lytell, as its hero. "The Lion's Den" is the name, and following this Mr. Lytell will appear in "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day," by Mr. Pelley, as published in the Post. Then Miss Allison appears in Wallace Irwin's timely play on Bolshevism, "Free," which is another of the Post's contributions to the screen.

The class of short story or fiction published in the Post has served to build up for that magazine a larger circulation than that of any other of its kind in the world. This is the class of stories which Metro is producing without regard for expense and with accuracy of detail ever in view—the class which is building up for the exhibitor the same enormous patronage for his theatre that the original stories built up for the Saturday Evening Post. The quality of the stories demanded by the editors of the Post is sufficient guarantee for the exhibitor of its box-office value from the point of general interest and timeliness.

Desmond's Latest Photoplay Written by William Parker

WILLIAM PARKER, author of "What Every Woman Wants," one of the season's biggest photoplay successes, also wrote "Bare-Fisted Gallagher," in which William Desmond is featured in his next Robertson-Cole release through Exhibitors Mutual. "Bare-Fisted Gallagher" was produced by Jesse D. Hampton.

The newest Desmond feature is a most unusual production which has a cast of only three players prominent in the action. Agnes (Brownie) Vernon is chief in support of Desmond.

Frank Lanning, who it appears is entrusted with the hardest roles to be obtained for him on the Hampton lot, is the heavy, Aliso Pete, and in his usual capable manner, fulfils all that is demanded of him.

Walter Perry and Jeanette Rankin have small character parts in the support, and each lends a thread of humor to the performance.

Brownie Vernon was selected by Jesse D. Hampton to play the part of Jem Mason because he was convinced she could put this part over with a wallop. She had just finished a picture with Tom Mix, when Hampton called for her services.

"Just Squaw" Selling Well.

Beatriz Michelena returns to the screen in "Just Squaw," which Robertson-Cole is releasing through Exhibitors Mutual. The film is selling well, according to Exhibitors Mutual. People are still fond of western melodrama with a real thrill, and "Just Squaw" has all the elements that constitute a real Western success.

Robertson-Cole is looking forward to big returns from "The Deadline," which is now receiving its finishing touches in the laboratory, but which will not be released until later in the summer.

Select Title for New Universal Serial.

The permanent title of the new Universal international serial has been selected. It is "The Thirteenth Hour." This serial will be released several months from now, and according to Universal's plans will receive a great amount of exploitation and advertising.

Eddie Polo is in the leading role. The story was originally written as "The Broken Idol," later changed to "Trailed Around the World," and finally named "The Thirteenth Hour."

New Dana Feature Breezy and Quaint in Locale

LIKE a cooling and refreshing summer drink is the comparison that Metro suggests for the June 9 release of "Some Bride," with Viola Dana as the star and bride.

As a diversion for the "cliff-dwellers" of the crowded cities, and the business man held in the grip of commerce, Metro has staged "Some Bride" in an atmosphere of the breezy wind-swept beaches of the semi-tropical rolling ocean alternating with scenes in pine-clad mountains, with the coolness of the great open country to fan the perspiring brow of the audience.

For novelty of plot and ingenious manipulation of the principal characters, "Some Bride" is announced by the producers as a distinctive farcical-comedy.

One of the most striking scenes of the picture is said to be the masque ball scenes in which all the players and extras appear in the disguises of birds and beasts of the barnyard.

The original story in play form was converted to the screen in a scenario by June Mathis and L. Anderson Reed of the Metro staff. Henry Otto is the director.

In the supporting cast will be seen Irving Cummings, "Smiling" Billy Mason, Ruth Sinclair and Florence Carpenter as the principals.

Over a hundred additional players will also appear in the barnyard scenes of the masque ball given in honor of the newly married couple, and in the beach scenes will be many of the fairer sex in fetching bathing costumes.

"Mary Moves In" Title of Next Christie Special

AL E. CHRISTIE has nearly completed the production of a third Christie Special Comedy which he has titled "Mary Moves In." The picture will feature Fay Tincher, with Harry Ham, Katherina Lewis, Eddie Barry and Patricia Palmer, making up a special cast. George Pearce, Al Haynes, Edith Clark and Ward Caulfield complete the cast.

"Mary Moves In" is an original story by W. Scott Darling, featuring Fay Tincher in a role still more varied than those which she played in "Sally's Blighted Career" and "Rowdy Ann," the first Christie Specials.

The plot of this Christie Special, which rambles along into fast and amusing farce comedy, revolves about a truck load of furniture with which the newly wedded Mary desired to furnish a city flat on the strength of "father's" promise of a $10,000 check to the happy bride and groom.

Harry Ham appears as Miss Tincher's husband. Eddie Barry and Katherine Lewis play "the other couple," who offer the combined role of the "villain" of the piece.

With regard to the technical side of the production it may be said that it has been produced on a more elaborate scale than either of the first of the Christie Specials. Since this is a society comedy, in contrast with the type of the two former Specials, a number of more pretentious settings have been required for the construction of which the Christies built an additional stage adjoining their Los Angeles property.

Farrar and Tellegen Have Strong Cast in New Picture

THE celebrated sphinx never kept a secret better than the executive and publicity staffs of Goldwyn, which have thus far kept in absolute silence the name of the film in which Geraldine Farrar will be starred with her husband, Lou Tellegen, playing opposite her. The two are now working together on the picture at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, California.

The cast includes Lawson Butt, Naomi Childers, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Arthur Carew, Alec B. Francis, Mme. Dione, May Giraci, and Edward J. Connolly. Mrs. Connolly was loaned to Goldwyn by the Metro company.

In addition to these, Hazel Brennon, a young Australian actress, is to have her first important part in the picture. Frank Lloyd is the director.

"Men, Women and Money" Next Ethel Clayton Release

ETHEL CLAYTON will next be seen on the Paramount schedule in "Men, Women and Money," which will be released June 8. This picture is said to be one of the most elaborate that Miss Clayton has yet done. In the matter of gowns and settings it is said to be extremely luxurious, and dramatically it is exceptionally strong.

The story by Cosmo Hamilton, who is one of the best known modern novelists, is a powerful study in false ideas of wealth and social position, and the influence of these ideals on life. The heroine, a simple girl new to city life, is dragged almost without knowing it into the whirlpool of extravagance and unnatural excitement of the city's fastest set, and she becomes immersed in debts and obligations of all sorts without realizing where she is going. In the end, by an effort, she saves herself from utter destruction, and wins things more worth while than those into which she has sunk.

Lew Cody plays one of the chief male roles. Irving Cummings was elected to play the other important masculine role, Julian Chadwick, a society man with little or no money.

Winifred Greenwood as Noel Parkton is said to be perfectly fitted for the part. She portrays the life of the modern society girl. Mayme Kelso as Madame Ribout, the unscrupulous modiste, gives a very entertaining performance and the role is quite a feature of the picture. Zasu Pitts as Katie, the little shop girl, is said to be excellent.

Others prominent in the cast are Sylvia Ashton, James Neill, Jane Wolfe, Edna Mae Cooper, Leslie Stewart, Jr., Lillian Leighton, Lallah Hart, Fay Holderness, Helen Dunbar, Chas. Ogle and Marie Newell.

George Melford is the director.

"Beating the Odds" Beats Past Records.

Manager Merrill, of the Strand Theatre, of Milwaukee, Wis., has captured territorial honors for big business on the Vitagraph-Morey production, "Beating the Odds." In that cluster of bustling towns that fringes on the theoretical triangle pointed by Milwaukee, Madison and Sheboygan, in which region the picture has been doing a record breaking business, Milwaukee comes out of the scramble with a margin beyond top figures for all the other houses, basing computations on the relative capacities of these houses and striking an average for the business done throughout the week of the showing, so reports Vitagraph.

"Little Diplomat" Is Baby Marie's Next.

Baby Marie Osborne will appear in her latest Pathe feature, "The Little Diplomat," released the week of June 15.

The Diando Film Corporation, with a keen realization of what a splendid foil "Little Sambo" makes to "Little Mary Sunshine," gave the little pickaninny an excellent part in this production. Not satisfied to please only the children, Diando secured the services of Betty Compson, Jack Connolly, Al and Murdock MacQuarrie, and many others to support their juvenile star in her latest offering.

"The Little Diplomat" is a story showing how "virtue is its own reward."

Unique Situations in Three Christie Comedies

OH SUSIE BE CAREFUL," a new Christie Comedy, directed by Scott Sidney, from the story by W. Scott Darling, presents Dorothy DeVore with Earle Rodney, Thornton Edwards and Roscoe Karns. Dorothy DeVore is shown as a girl who romantically fell in love with a long haired professor with whom she eloped. "The other fellow" is played by Earle Rodney, whose black face makeup at a critical situation almost loses him the girl of his choice.

Dorothy DeVore appears again in "Kiss the Bride," with Bobby Vernon. Bobby and Dorothy start off as bride and groom, but bet their friends they can't be found. Scott Sidney, who directed the picture, has evolved several singular situations in and out of a hotel elevator.

Jay Belasco and Patricia Palmer are seen in "Tell Your Wife Everything," another Christie Comedy personally directed by Al E. Christie, from a story by Willis L. Robards. In the story, Jay made the fatal error of trying to make his wife believe that he had all the money in the world.

Reed Selects Cast for New Story.

L. Anderson Reed, Second Lieutenant, U. S. A., recently released from the service and back at his office in the Metro studios, completed a pair of continuities since his return and then wrote the original story of "A Favor for a Friend," in which Emmy Wehlen is to star.

Lt. Reed requested that he be allowed to select the players to support Miss Wehlen in his story and this being granted, the erstwhile army man selected Jack Mulhall, as leading man, Hugh Fay, Joseph Kilgour, Jack Miller, Jr., Harry Todd, Fred H. Warren and Effie Conley.

Script of "The Hellion" Being Completed.

Dan F. Whitcomb, staff author at the American, is at work on the continuity of a new drama for Margarita Fisher, to follow her current subject, "The Tiger Lily." Tentatively titled "The Hellion," this is declared to be one of the most powerfully dramatic stories ever prepared for Miss Fisher, providing her with a dual role of unusual interest. It gets its strange title from a dive in which the big scenes of the story are laid.

Fifty-six Advance Prints Made of "Happiness" Film

ANTICIPATING a demand for early play dates on Constance Talmadge's coming Select picture, "Happiness a la Mode," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, Select, this week, shipped an advance order of fifty-six prints to the various exchanges in the country.

"Happiness a la Mode" will be seen for the first time in any house at the Zeigfeld Theatre, in Chicago, commencing a week's engagement in that playhouse on June 15. On June 22, it will begin another pre-release showing at the Bijou Dream, in Chicago. Still other pre-release dates have been booked in Boston and Indianapolis.

This film finds the chief female character already married—and not happily. Miss Talmadge is seen as Barbara Townsend, and the husband, Richard, is portrayed by Harrison Ford.

In the story, Barbara is supposed to be trying to make a success of married life, and to this end she allows her husband all the liberty he wants. An over-dose of liberty, however, proves the rock on which their marital ship is wrecked, and a few dissatisfied months find them in the divorce courts. Before the inevitable reunion is effected, there is a reel of hilarious comedy.

The other members of the cast are Betty Schade, Myrtle Richelle, Paul Weigel, Thomas D. Persse, and A. Fremont. The story is by Edwina Levin, and is one which appeared in a recent number of a popular magazine. Walter Edward was the director.

Madge Kennedy Has Sales Success in Western Play

THAT it was a happy idea to cast Madge Kennedy in picture with western atmosphere has been proven by her sales success in "Leave It to Susan," as well as by a potential triumph in "Through the Wrong Door," which is now about ready for release.

"Through the Wrong Door" was originally titled "The Wrong Door," but it was decided to feature the action of passage through the fatal door rather than to feature the door itself. The story is by Jesse Lynch Williams, who has scored many notable stage successes. His latest Broadway hit was "Why Marry?" and it had a long run with an all star cast. Mining scenes and virile western drama abound in this new Kennedy picture, which will be released in a few weeks.

Proctor's Houses Book "Destiny."

Already some of the biggest theatres of the country have placed their bookings for the Universal's Jewel production ,"Destiny," starring Dorothy Phillips. Eleven Proctor houses in eight cities have signed for the picture. Fourteen other first-run theatres in Greater New York have been booked, including William Fox's Crotona, the Acadamy of Music, and the Harlem Opera House, etc. Seven theatres of the first-class in Chicago, and several large theatres in Nebraska, Wisconsin and California are among those that have recently been contracted for.

Views of Seaplanes in Pathe News.

Pathe News No. 45 showed a remarkable series of pictures, taken at the Azores and showing the arrival and the departure of the Navy's N-C planes on the last lap of the transatlantic flight.

One gets a compelling impression of the adventure that befell the men in N-C 3 in beholding the wrecked and battered aircraft, which, after 62 hours' struggle with the elements, arrived at Ponta del Garda under its own power. Views of the successful N-C 4 are also given.

Ten-Day Attendance Record Set by "As a Man Thinks"

A TEN-DAY run with packed houses the rule at every performance, is the record set by "As A Man Thinks," Augustus Thomas' Four-Star production, starring Leah Baird, a W. W. Hodkinson Corporation release, at the Blue Mouse Theatre, St. Paul, Minn. Originally booked for a week, the Thomas picture and the exploitation campaign executed by Manager O. A. Rowe aroused such public interest that a three-day extension of the run was required to appease St. Paul motion picture devotees.

Fully a week before the opening of the picture at the Blue Mouse, Manager Rowe fairly plastered the town with announcements heralding the Thomas feature. Recalling that the film in its stage version proved one of the reigning successes of the year in St. Paul, several years ago, Mr. Rowe made much capital of its triumphs in the spoken drama, also never failing to inform his public that the picture version was produced under the supervision of the playwright.

The Blue Mouse management "went the limit" on newspaper advertising. It was in his lobby display, however, that Manager Rowe created most popular interest and set the "fans" agog for a sight of the Hodkinson release. With a dozen scene stills, enlarged almost ten times their regular size, Mr. Rowe made his big lobby fairly breathe the spirit of the production.

Gloria Hope and Claire Anderson, who recently completed an important role in support of Hedda Nova in the "Spitfire of Seville," will share honors as Harry Carey's leading woman in his newest Western production, "Jim of the Ranges," which is soon to be started by Director Jack Ford, at Universal City.

Typography, Tropics, Traffic Shown in Latest Ford Films

THE latest Ford releases now ready for distribution by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, are "The Land of Ukulele," a trip through Hawaii; "When Black Is Read," the story of a modern newspaper; "The Only Way," a picturization of the "safety first" slogan; "Pure Havana," a sight-seeing journey through the capital of Cuba.

"The Land of Ukulele" is a travelogue of America's Pacific Island possessions. The beach of Waikiki, with its horde of surf-riders on their wave-skidding ocean sleds, and many cool trips to beautiful inland places, bring the unforgettable beauty of the islands to American patrons of the screen.

In "When Black Is Read," we follow every incident in the creation of a daily newspaper. The operation of the gigantic power presses, the gathering, writing and editing of news, and the making of the colored sections are all depicted.

The old slogan of "safety first" is shown to be "The Only Way" to avoid accidents. The thoughtlessness of pedestrians, as well as of automobilists, with its tragic results, is portrayed so that anyone who sees the picture will never again be guilty of traffic carelessness.

"Pure Havana" is not a cigar story, but a trip to and about the capital of Cuba. Beginning with a panoramic view of Havana Harbor, showing the approximate location of the battleship Maine when she was blown up before the Spanish-American war, the camera catches a clear view of Morro Castle, then shifts to Havana's narrow streets and beautfiul driveways.

Hughes "The Cup of Fury" Is Vividly American Book

THE Cup of Fury," just published serially in Red Book magazine, and now in book form by Harper, is one of the most dramatic stories Major Hughes has ever written. Incident crowds upon incident in a rising series of climaxes. His pages fairly bubble with observation of American life and character.

In this story a discontented village girl is caught up in the breath-taking events that follow "the war after the war" and flung headlong into swiftly changing American scenes. Which was she?—the runaway, the society butterfly, the adopted daughter of wealth, the vaudeville actress, the shipbuilder or stenographer? The hero is one of the real men of the time.

Rapid Work on Constance Talmadge Film.

Constance Talmadge's first picture since the formation of her own company is now progressing rapidly. With Anita Loos, John Emerson, Director David Kirkland, and six members of her company, she made a special three-day trip to Washington, this week, to take some exteriors for "The Temperamental Wife," the first of her First National pictures. This modern domestic comedy drama is from the pen of John Emerson and Anita Loos.

Wyndham Standing has been engaged as leading man for this Constance Talmadge production.

"Elmo the Mighty" Now Booking.

According to a Universal report, "Elmo the Mighty," the serial which was released June 9, continues to be booked at some of the largest houses in the country. Elmo Lincoln's massiveness and strength make him an ideal serial star type.

One of the most recent bookings among the larger houses in the country was that of the Columbia Theatre, at Portland, Ore. This is claimed to be the first time in five years that any of the larger first run houses in Portland have used a serial picture.

Continued Bookings Reported for "Cannibals"

COMPLIMENTARY reports are coming into the offices of Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors Mutual, through whom "Cannibals of the South Seas" is released.

Even the Quebec district of Canada, where it seemed impossible to put anything in the nature of these pictures over, has contributed its commendation of the Johnson offering.

R. L. Vallee, proprietor of the Casino Theatre, Sherbrooke, Quebec, paid this tribute to the pictures: "At the time I booked "Cannibals of the South Seas" I was really shaky about it, inasmuch as I knew there was no story and because I was paying extra money. However, I must say I was quite surprised to see the extra business these pictures drew. It certainly got the crowds."

At Edmond, Okla., W. Z. Spearman, manager of the Gem Theatre, was so impressed with the first series of "Cannibals of the South Seas" that he eagerly booked the second, saying:

"Kindly book me the second installment of the Cannibals for the first available Wednesday and Thursday. I recently ran the first of Martin Johnson's 'Cannibals of the South Seas,' and while I have seen all the big productions of recent years, I must say that 'The Cannibals' stands in a class by itself, and I think it the strongest picture of its kind ever released."

Coming back to Rochester, N. Y., A. N. Wolff, of the Rialto Theatre, had this to say:

"I found these pictures wonderfully beautiful from an educational point of view. Still, while not a general universal attraction, they draw a class of patronage which would not otherwise attend the regular attractions."

"Sahara" Scores in Washington.

The combination of "Sahara," J. Parker Read, Jr.'s drama, starring Louise Glaum, and the exploitation campaign on the Hodkinson release by Tom Moore, the big Washington showman, made its premiere presentation at the Nation's capital a red letter event at his Rialto Theatre. Packed houses at every performance of "Sahara" attested how well Mr. Moore had acquainted Washington picture goers with the merits of this unusual production.

Impressed with the educational value of "Sahara," Mr. Moore wrote to all Washington school principals detailing the beauties of the big desert scenes and the remarkable simulation of the city of Cairo, with its stately edifices, and the panorama picture of the Nile.

Marie Osborne Appears as Chocolate Drop's Playmate

THERE is laughter and pathos in "The Little Diplomat," starring Baby Marie Osborne, which will be released by Pathe on June 15.

Emma Bell Clifton in writing this story especially for "Little Mary Sunshine" makes an appeal to the heart by casting her little heroine as a French orphan rendered homeless and parentless by the ravages of the Great War. The locale, however, is strictly American, and the story has nothing whatever to do with the war or the European battlefields in any way.

Baby Marie is seen as a carefree child rejoicing in her new-found liberty under the banner of Old Glory, romping with Little Sambo, whom she says "has not been colored—he was born that way!" Incidentally, these two prove somewhat of a trial to the studious husband of the kind-hearted woman who has adopted Marie, but that kindness is amply repaid in service by the wee French girlie when the opportunity arises.

A great deal of fun is caused throughout the course of the picture by the various stunts performed by Marie and her colored playmate, Little Sambo, who as "George Washington Jones, Jr.," leads the French child into considerable mischief—although she is by no means backward herself at suggesting pranks.

Adults in the cast are Betty Compson, Jack Connolly, Murdock McQuarrie, Maida Vale, William Welsh, Lydia Knaught and Al MacQuarrie.

Big Night Scenes in Mary MacLaren Film.

The courtroom in which the trial of Thomas J. Mooney, in San Francisco, was held, is being shot by Tod Browning in connection with Mary MacLaren's newest Universal Special Attraction, "The Petal on the Current," adapted from Fannie Hurst's Cosmopolitan story. There are a number of interesting night court scenes in the story.

Universal Finishes Three Widely Differing Features

THE three bigger features stamped "finis" at Universal City last week are Allen J. Holubar's "The Right To Happiness," in which Dorothy Phillips is starred; "A Man of Peace," starring Harry Carey, and "The Spitfire of Seville," which is starring the new Universal actress, Hedda Nova.

Pete Morrison, the young Western actor, completed "A Fortune at Stake" last week. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, Universal's laugh manufacturers, completed a burlesque on prohibition titled "Ten Nights in a Tea Room." Neal Burns and Josephine Hill finished "Babies Is Babies," a one-reel comedy.

Eric Von Stroheim is taking the final scenes this week on "The Pinnacle," the Alpine drama in which Francelia Billington and Sam DeGrasse divide honors with the director. Monroe Salisbury is half through his latest vehicle, "Devil's Have Their Friends," which is being directed by Paul Powell. William Stowell, a Jewel star, and Colleen Moore head the supporting cast of this drama.

Mary MacLaren is in San Francisco with her supporting cast working on the "Petal on the Current" story, which was written by Fannie Hurst. Tod Browning is directing. Robert Anderson, David Butler, Vic Potel, Fritzie Ridgway and Gertrude Claire made the trip to San Francisco with Miss MacLaren.

Marie Walcamp, Universal's serial star, is at work at Sonora, Cal., filming the exteriors of the two-reel "Tempest Cody" series. This series of two-reel Western pictures are being made while the script for the next Marie Walcamp serial is being prepared. The series are being directed by Jacques Jaccard and Robert Anderson.

James J. Corbett, the ex-champion prize fighter, stage and screen star, is struggling through the fourteenth episode of "The Midnight Man," a serial to be released in the near future. Kathleen O'Connor is the leading woman.

Picture of Circus Life Tours with the Real Thing

THE Ringling Brothers and the late P. T. Barnum have collaborated with Goldwyn in a new exploitation campaign on "Polly of the Circus," which stars Mae Marsh.

"Polly" was the first picture to be produced by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and sales returns show that this picture is still going strong throughout the country. Indeed the present tour of the circus has given impetus to the showings of this Goldwyn play. For wherever the circus goes, "Polly of the Circus" goes with it.

Exhibitors have shown a surprising willingness to tie up in their exploitation with Ringling's. When the circus parade, lead by the sonorous Butterfly Stellings, starts its snake dance just before the afternoon's show in the big tent, at the tail of this parade one will find a flotilla advertising Goldwyn's "Polly of the Circus."

Exhibitors say that the circus people have unanimously indorsed the Goldwyn picture.

Sidelights and Reflections

A THREE days' trip through a part of New England resulted in the writer getting several sidelights on the exhibitor's end of the moving picture business. The towns visited were all in the grip of a heat wave and the theatres were feeling the effects of the unusual warm spell. At a Saturday afternoon performance in a Massachusetts town of about fifteen thousand, the theatre was filled and there was more applause heard in half an hour than breaks the stillness in a New York picture house during the entire performance.

The feature was "The Virginian," with Dustin Farnum, and it was received like an old and well beloved friend. There was a burst of applause when the title was flashed on the screen, another round when the star was first shown, and the first appearance of the heroine received the same hearty reception. The manager wore a genial smile, spoke cheerfully of his own prospects and the industry in general, and seemed content with himself and the world. Asked if he had any criticism to make of present day releases, he replied no, except that he thought it would be better if the features were kept down to five reels.

An exhibitor who can run a picture made five years ago and have it go over in the enthusiastic fashion "The Virginian" was received by that prosperous-looking matinee crowd has picked out a real show town and indicates he knows how to "treat 'em right."

This question of the five-reel feature was one that interested the managers the instant it was mentioned. Out of a round dozen of exhibitors all but one was strongly in favor of limiting pictures to the five-reel standard. There were several grades of houses represented, but the owner of each one was able to advance what he considered excellent reasons for keeping down the features to a uniform length.

The manager of a theatre in a town which caters to a large number of summer visitors, was another exhibitor who had no complaints to make. His patronage forced him to book the latest pictures of the best grade, but the returns in the box-office justified the expense. He was running Enid Bennett in "The Haunted Bedroom" the Saturday night he entertained the World man, and it was a pleasant experience to stand in the lobby with him when the performance was over and hear the way he was congratulated on the merits of the show.

Knowing most of your patrons by name is a great help in managing a moving picture theatre. WEITZEL.

"Upstairs and Down"

Selznick Picture Presents Olive Thomas in an Adaptation of a Stage Comedy of the Cave Man's Wooing of the Baby Vamp.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

PRESENTING a character suited to the bright nature and lively impersonations of Olive Thomas, the first of the Selnick pictures, "Upstairs and Down," follows closely the stage version in contrasting the selfish and silly amusements of guests at a fashionable week's-end party with an imitation of their folly in the kitchen, but it is at its best when the eye of the spectator can sift out of a large cast those personalities on which story interest depends, particularly in the lesson an American wooer learns from an ardent young polo-playing Irishman notoriously successful with the fair sex, through a revelation of his cave-man methods. The screen comedy moves slowly until the American gets some speed, rousing from his respectful attitude toward the gentler sex and making a profound impression on his fickle and rather selfish young fiancée, by letting her know he is a real man according to the primitive idea of treating her "rough."

Such is the main situation in "Upstairs and Down," with a bright bit of comedy in which Rosemary Theby, as the heroine's sister, stages an automobile accident in order to win the romantic interest of the Irish heartbreaker. The rest depends largely upon the sparkling interpretation by Olive Thomas of a very selfish, fickle and very much spoiled young lady, who does not hesitate to break her sister's happy relation and announce her own downfall, in order to gratify her whim for the young Irishman. It is a difficult role, but Miss Thomas managed to give it vivacity. The performances of Andrew Robson as a puritanical butler, Robert Ellis as the Irish cavalier, and David Butler as the American suitor, were also entirely satisfactory. The general effect of the story is one of amusement, and it is brightened by some animated ensembles.

The Story.

In the "Upstairs and Down" of social life at a country house, Alice Chesterton flirts indiscriminately, though engaged to Tom Carey, a husky young American millionaire. He is distressed by her conduct, especially by her escapade in motoring to the city with Terence O'Keefe, and her lying to her friends to cover an adventure at the Midnight Follies. The affair becomes a matter of gossip, when her clever sister Betty arrives and wins the Irishman's heart by a ruse.

Inasmuch as the car she was in has run into a ditch, she poses as unconscious at its side and sends the chauffeur to O'Keefe for help. He rushes to the rescue, and what he sees of Betty, most carefully revealed, settles him for life. He confesses his love for her, but Alice is far from pleased. She tells her sister that the Irishman ruined her, and Betty insists that he make reparation by marriage. He is keen enough to see through the subterfuge of Alice, and gives her fiance some pointers in winning the American girl's heart. He must "treat her rough."

Carey takes this advice and shakes up the selfish young vamp so severely that he excites her admiration—she did not know it was in him—and all ends happily, even for the servants, though they are not particularly successful in their imitation of what is going on upstairs.

Heavy Publicity for "Great Gamble" Promised

A BILLBOARD and newspaper advertising and publicity campaign will soon be launched by Pathe Exchange, Inc., to exploit "The Great Gamble," a serial produced by Western Photoplays, Inc., co-starring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison, which will be released on August 3.

"The Great Gamble" is adapted to wide publicity.

Supporting Miss Luther and Mr. Hutchison are Richard Neill, Warren Cook, William Cavanaugh, Billy Moran and Edith Thornton. The serial was written and directed by Joseph A. Golden.

It has been announced that a trade showing of the first three episodes will be given at 11.30 a. m., on Friday, June 20, at the New York Theatre Roof. Present at this showing will be Director Golden, Miss Luther, Mr. Hutchison and the cast.

Twenty-four sheet stands will be prominently displayed in and about every prominent city in the United States. In addition, the comprehensive exploitation campaign includes a colored slide combining the two stars; three black and white prints of each star; 22 by 28-inch sepia prints of the stars together; 22 by 28-inch sepia prints showing half a dozen of Mr. Hutchison's most daring stunts; a die-out herald; two-color campaign book; 20,000 reproductions of the twenty-four sheet for use of exhibitors, and a card lobby display similar to the famous lobby display used in "The House of Hate"—a string of cards each bearing a letter of the title.

A list of places in which the billboard showing will be made includes over 400 cities.

Goldwyn Announces Series of Comedies and Farces

DURING the summer months, Goldwyn will release six Capitol Comedies, three of which will be "Smiling Bill" Parsons comedies, and three Carter De Haven farces. The names of the pictures with their release dates follow: June 1, "In a Pinch" (Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven); June 15, "A Wonderful Night" ("Smiling Bill" Parsons); June 29, "Their Day of Rest" (Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven); July 13, "Chasing Rainbeaux" ("Smiling Bill" Parsons); July 27, "After the Bawl" (Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven).

Mr. Parsons will continue to appear in a number of comic disguises which, of course, cannot conceal his unusual personality; while Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven will produce farces on early married life which expose in the most exaggerated way, the various misunderstandings that finally lead to a sane appreciation of the trials and the rewards of the life-long partnership.

The first Carter De Haven picture of the summer series, "In a Pinch," has already been released. The story tells of the tribulations of honeymooners who find that incidents of their former lives crop up at inopportune moments to cause many embarrassing moments.

This is to be followed by a Parsons picture which contains several new situations staged in a cabaret.

"The Perfect Lover" Is Regarded as Good Title

IF EXHIBITORS are any judge of the box-office value of a title then "The Perfect Lover," Eugene O'Brien's first Selznick production is one of the best-titled films presented. Exhibitors report that patrons who have been attracted by the title of the picture have already begun to inquire of them when they are going to play the picture.

One exhibitor writes to the Selznick offices:

"Whoever thought of the title for "The Perfect Lover" certainly knew box-office values. You couldn't have got a better one no matter how long or how hard you tried."

"Greater Than Love" Near Completion.

The Mollie King production, "Greater Than Love," directed by John M. Stahl, is being completed this week, and the first Louise Huff production to be directed by Archainbaud will be begun during the coming week. A strong supporting cast will surround Miss Huff. Mr. Niebuhr this week purchased for Miss Huff the motion picture rights to George Middleton's latest play as yet unnamed.

"Daddy Long Legs" Makes Long Strides in Detroit

SETTING a record in Michigan's motion picture annals, "Daddy Long Legs," the First National Exhibitors' Circuit release featuring Mary Pickford, is having a premier showing in Detroit which has grown into three solid weeks, a week each in three of the city's largest playhouses, all within a short block of each other. Given its first premier week at the Adams Theatre opening May 11, "Daddy Long Legs" brought 43,575 paid admissions to the house. The week of May 18, the picture was transferred to the Washington Theatre, directly across Detroit's Grand Circus Park, from the Adams and will go from the Washington directly to the Miles Theatre, a block distant, for its third week.

In the flood of bookings arranged for the production by Harry Scott, Michigan Manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is the unprecedented departure of a score of pretentious neighborhood houses switching from a set policy of one day showings to runs of three and even four days for "Daddy Long Legs."

An unusual tribute to the drawing powers and intense popularity of the picture has also been paid by the Vaughn Glaser-Fay Courteney Company, the City's stock organization, in calling immediate rehearsals for a stage presentation of "Daddy Long Legs" at the New Detroit Opera House for the week of May 29.

New Pathe Sales Campaign Planned for "Honor Month"

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, announces that the greatest selling drive in the history of the firm is on during the month of June, which has been designated as Pathe Honor Month in honor of Charles Pathe, who is now in America.

The firm's salesmen are competing in a great selling contest.

The list of features the salesmen will push includes the Capellani screen production of "Oh Boy!", featuring June Caprice and Creighton Hale; Virginia Pearson in "The Bishop's Emeralds"; Frank Keenan in "Gates of Brass"; Fannie Ward in "The Profiteers," and Bryant Washburn in "All Wrong." The forthcoming serial, "The Great Gamble," featuring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison, will be booking during Pathe Honor Month.

Special buttons bearing a photograph of Charles Pathe and the inscription, Pathe Honor Month, have been issued to the salesmen to wear during the June drive.

Write Song for Artcraft Film.

In addition to the usual line of advertising, publicity and exploitation helps, exhibitors playing "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," the Paramount-Artcraft Special picturized by Hugh Ford from Hall Caine's novel of the same name, will have a specially written song based on the production and carrying the same title to aid them in establishing a box-office "draw" and making the engagement a winner. This song, a ballad, was written by Al. Piantadosi.

"The Woman Thou Gavest Me"

Paramount-Artcraft Special Presents Katherine MacDonald in a Story of Vital Theme Adapted from Hall Caine's Novel.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

STRIKING directly at one of the greatest problems of modern life, the shadows of impending disaster casting a spell over the mood of the picture, the Paramount production, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," promises the mental and emotional stimulus to be derived from a really great play. Director Ford showers a wealth of treatment upon the opening scenes and keeps it up so long as the situations permit. Katherine MacDonald's impersonation throughout is so delicately consistent and strongly sincere that it comes to be the saving grace of the production. Theodore Roberts displays a power of interpretation beyond anything he has heretofore done. Other members of the cast respond effectively, especially Jack Holt and Milton Sills. All the charms of fine presentation and interpretation are given the picture, but it tapers off and sags away, instead of gaining in power as it advances.

As a brilliant illustration of a novel, the screen version of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" may be counted a success, and, as such, it held close attention of a large house at the Rivoli. As a drama, it contains some live situations, but the purpose of shewing woman's purity of love outside of marriage is almost nullified by a theatric situation toward the end, where the pure-minded and intelligent heroine, having relatives and friends in abundance, with kind hearts and saving institutions on every side, decides, five minutes after discovering that her baby is not well, to sell herself to the first comer on London streets at night, to be saved only by an accidental meeting with the hero, supposed to be lost on a voyage.

For the intelligent, it looks as though something had been attempted beyond the ability of the author to solve satisfactorily. The big values of the picture are superb treatment and acting of the highest quality.

The Story.

"The Woman Thou Gavest Me" is Mary, daughter of a ruthless old Scotchman, Daniel MacNeil, whose accidentally-acquired wealth enables him to satisfy an old grudge against the Raa family by marrying Mary to young Lord Raa, which he does in full knowledge that the latter is a rake and a spendthrift. Mary has already become attached to Martin Conrad, an Arctic explorer, who dared not speak his mind before sailing. She faints at the grand wedding, and refuses after it to soil her soul in contact with a man she does not love. She refuses to be any but a "wife in name only," and finds, during a honeymoon in Egypt, that her husband had his former mistress meet him there, though they are living on an allowance from her father.

To the same place comes her true lover, Conrad, and she gives herself to him on the last night before their departure, throwing away her wedding ring and departing for the Riviera, while her husband goes to India in an official position, where he introduces his mistress as his wife.

Mary hides in the south of France to have her child and get a divorce. There she is found by her father, who will give no countenance to her child except as that

"Better Times"

Comedy-Drama for Robertson-Cole Features Zasu Pitts in Role Well Suited to Her Talents.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE clever feminine star of the Robertson-Cole production, "Better Times," released through the Exhibitors Mutual, is deserving of more than a passing notice for her portrayal of Nancy Scroogs, the girl, who, in obedience to precepts set forth on an ordinary calendar, went forth in search of opportunity, instead of waiting for it to knock at her door. Nancy Scroogs is a character role, and Zasu Pitts, in creating it, has imbued it with the old fashioned eccentricities of the lonely little girl of a health resort long past its days of glorification. Her work in "Better Times" entitles her to rapid screen advancement.

Looking at the production from a critical point of view, the general effect would be better if the picture's footage had been reduced. Also fewer subtitles could have been used without interfering with the clearness of the story. The production is entertaining and wholesome and contains a solid moral lesson. Jack MacDonald, William Duvaull and David Butler do noticeably good work in the cast.

The Story.

A western Pennsylvania town is the scene of the story of "Better Times." The rivalry between two hotels, which were in their glory in days long past, when the town was famous as a health resort, is the foundation of the plot.

Nancy Scroogs is the neglected daughter of Ezra Scroogs, who is the chief reason why no one visits his hotel, the "Lakeview." A gambler and procrastinator, he has succeeded in diverting trade from himself to Si Whittaker, the proprietor of the "Majestic." Nancy, finally stirred to action by lines printed on a calendar, gets out an ancient automobile which has seen service in the Lakeview's days of glory, and takes her stand at the depot. Her one and only passenger happens to be Spike Macauley, champion pinch-hitter of a baseball team, who partly for pity of the girl and partly for a lark, accompanies her. Through Spike's advertising of the Lakeviews' culinary department among the summer boarders at the Majestic, the latter's guests are soon transferred to Nancy's care. A sudden telegram beckons Spike to the city and leaves Nancy, who believes that Spike has gone to his sweetheart, very sad.

Expect "The Man Beneath" to Be Hayakawa's Best

THE pretentiousness of the six previous Hayakawa productions controlled by Robertson-Cole, and released through Exhibitors Mutual is expected to be overshadowed by the production of "The Man Beneath," which the Japanese actor has just completed. "The Man Beneath" was adapted for the screen by L. V. Jefferson, from a novel by Edmund Mitchell. Hayakawa's mastery of characterization is given full sway in this offering in which he portrays a Hindu surgeon.

The production will take Hayakawa virtually around the world on the screen, for the scenes are laid in India, Scotland and Italy, and the expense incurred in the erection of the various sets for this production will make it the costliest of the costly Hayakawa pictures.

Four Months in the Making.

Four months were devoted to the making of this photo-drama, and according to William Worthington, who directs all Hayakawa's pictures, no more effective five reel feature has even been shown than "The Man Beneath."

The few who have seen the rough print in the Haworth studio pronounce it one of the most perfect pictures of its kind made on the West Coast.

Frank D. Ormstrom, who is considered one of the finest technical directors in the country, was engaged by Haworth especially for this picture to design and supervise the interior and exterior settings. Especially worthy of notice is the Anglo-Indian furniture used in the production.

Waited To Get Cloud Formations.

Great pains were taken with the exterior settings. In order to obtain the right effects in these scenes the entire company waited until the hour between 6.30 and 7.30 p.m., at which time the cloud formations in California are most beautiful, and the atmosphere hazy and dim, and then accomplished most of their work.

When these scenes are shown on the screen they appear more like compositions painted by some great artist than like real exteriors. Mr. Hayakawa has the most sympathetic role in this production that he has had for some time.

As the Hindu surgeon who rescues so many people when India is suffering from the plague, Hayakawa looks and acts every inch a Hindu.

McCulley Story for Frank Mayo.

"The Brute Breaker," a tale of the Canadian logging camps, from the pen of Johnston McCulley, has been purchased by Universal to be made into a six-reel special production, according to announcement made recently by Eugene Mullin, chief of the scenario department.

The story appeared several months ago in the All-Story Weekly, and deals with the French Canadians living around the little settlements of the Rapids Deserted of God. It will be produced by Lynn Reynolds.

Frank Mayo and Kathryn Adams will head a specially selected cast which will be seen in this out-of-door photoplay.

Ann Little Acts for First Time Opposite William Hart

ANN LITTLE, who acted in Cecil De Mille's Artcraft production of "The Squaw Man," and who has been leading woman for Wallace Reid, Bryant Washburn and other Paramount stars, appears opposite William S. Hart in the latter's new Artcraft picture, "Square Deal Sanderson," released June 15.

The story was written by Charles Alden Seltzer and originally appeared in the Argosy magazine. Lambert Hillyer adapted it for the screen, and he, with Mr. Hart, directed the production.

The role allotted to the star is one of the Western quick-shooting, hard-riding type. Miss Little, who appears as Mr. Hart's leading woman for the first time, is cast in the role of Mary Branford, a young ranch owner, beset by designing villains. Lloyd Bacon, son of Frank Bacon, who performed in the stage success, "Lightnin'," has a sympathetic role. The two heavy parts are played by Frank Whitson and Edwin Wallock.

Completing New House Peters Picture.

House Peters, the star, Frank Powell, the director, and an entire company of players returned this week to New York from San Antonio, Texas, to complete the metropolitan scenes for Sir Gilbert Parker's story, "You Never Know Your Luck," which will be distributed by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

This production has been in the making in Texas for the past six weeks at the studios of Sunset Picture Corporation, one of the Hodkinson allies.

To date, no announcement has been made of the cast supporting Mr. Peters. Release will be sometime during the late summer.

"The Westerners" Possesses Some Attractive Characters

VISUALIZATION of Stewart Edward White's novel, "The Westerners," has been accomplished by eliminating every inch of non-essential footage.

This W. W. Hodkinson release, the producers claim, has accomplished something more than a serious portrayal of a novel. It has taken the characters of Mr. White's book and made them real. There is the old professor, engrossed in his bugs and butterflies to the exclusion of all else. When he came to the Black Hills of Dakota some fifteen years previous, his wife was killed by the Indians and his baby daughter stolen. Graham Pettie is pathetic in this role. Wilfred Lucas appears as the scout, Jim Buckley, brave and true, but shy of women.

Mildred Manning is sweet and wholesome as Molly. Molly is in reality the daughter of the old professor. She has been brought up by Lafond, the half-breed who killed her mother, and who plans to bring about her ruin in a dance hall he owns. Robert McKim, the screen's meanest man, has a big role in that of Lafond.

"When Doctors Disagree" Liked by Medical People

THE exploitation campaign behind "When Doctors Disagree," Goldwyn's latest Mabel Normand picture, has brought forth once more the fact that the baker is interested in baking, the burglar in burglaring and the doctor in doctoring. When the picture was first released, Stromberg, Goldwyn's service man, suggested that the exhibitor make a special attempt to reach the doctors and nurses in his vicinity.

Where the idea has been carried out it has justified itself. In Chicago, St. Louis and Philadelphia, the results have been particularly gratifying. Cards were sent to the neighborhood medical men and nurses, urging them to see themselves reflected in the amateur John Turner (Walter Hiers), who is almost forced to perform an operation on Millie Martin (Mabel Normand), although he is really a high-class carpet-layer and nothing more.

"Topics of the Day" Going Strong.

"Topics of the Day," selected from the press of the world by the Literary Digest, is going to steadily increasing popularity, as shown by the bookings at Pathe Exchange, Inc. The big centers have enthusiastically welcomed it, and in the smaller ones it soon became an accepted factor. Paulos Brothers, of Aurora, Ill., wrote the publication headquarters: "We note that 'Topics of the Day' shown in our theatres has made a decided hit. The people like it very well."

"Big V" Announces New Animal Comedy.

"Wild Lions and Loose Husbands" is the tentative title of the recent animal comedy starring Joe the monk, Charley the elephant and Buster the horse. The human actors in the comedy are Dora Rodgers, Bob McKenzie, Larry McGrath, Frank Hayes and Alfred McKennon.

The scenes are cast in Beer Bottle Bend, where things are run in a high, wide and handsome manner. William Campbell is the director.

In the days that follow, tragedy visits the "Lakeview," when Ezra gambles away his entire fortune and finally his hotel, and commits suicide. Nancy, with the insurance money left by her father, goes to boarding school. While there, she writes letters to herself, purported to be from the famous baseball star whom she has only known as Peter, for the purpose of making believe that she really has a sweetheart. This leads up to a distressing situation not expected by Nancy, when she is entertained at a box party at the baseball game, and is expected to meet her 'lover.' When she sees Spike and realizes that he and Peter are one and the same, she jumps over the railing and into his arms. Explanations are made and all ends happily.

"The Spark Divine"

Alice Joyce Star in Story of Woman's Cold Heart Kindled by Fire of Mother Love.

Reviewed by William J. Reilly.

THERE have been many pictures made around the theme of mother love, but few with the imaginative power that surrounds the work of Vitagraph in Alice Joyce's latest feature, "The Spark Divine." Mother love in this case is not wasted on a worthless son or daughter. The Vitagraph feature, beginning at babyhood, traces the development of the woman portrayed by Alice Joyce into a woman of beauty and talent, yet a creature of ice, with no warmth of spirit, lacking every bit of affectionate fire. The picture forces her into a marriage for the purpose of averting a financial catastrophe in her family.

Even then, no love is engendered. Even after the child is born, there is no love in the woman's heart. Her repression of all signs and tokens of affection make the spectator gasp at her self-inflicted cruelty. The divine spark of mother love is not kindled until her husband has the child kidnapped. With the little lad's absence, the fire in her heart is vivified.

The titlings of the picture have unusually artistic backgrounds, and several unique continuity arrangements lend to the quality of the story. The work of Alice Joyce, directed by Tom Terriss, is finely in sympathy with the cold woman she portrays. Theme, star, and direction present a strong combination for exploitation in this picture.

Directed by Tom Terriss.

The Story.

Marcia Van Arsdale, in Vitagraph's "The Spark Divine," is a woman in whom every sentiment of affection and love has been choked since childhood. Her parents, striving for social recognition, forced the child into unnatural situations, and refused, for instance, to let her have her favorite doll, because it was too ragged for a daughter of theirs. The day of her graduation from college they have her brought home by their footman.

Grown to womanhood, Marcia is beautiful and talented, but constant repression of every outward sign of affection has made her a thing of ice. Her father's money is threatened by the stock market activities of Robert Jardine, the young copper king, and at the urging of her parents, she consents to marry him. Jardine loves her and promises himself that under her cold exterior is a human, true heart.

He finds, however, that marriage with her meant little more than a household agreement. When a baby boy is born to them, Jardine finds that his wife is still cold and unnatural. Then, one day, the boy is kidnapped, and Marcia awakens to the fact that her heart is full of mother love. Search is fruitless. Christmas eve brings only sadness to the Jardine home, until Marcia discovers from her husband that he had the child kidnapped to kindle the spark in her bosom.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Beautiful Alice Joyce Star of Picture Which Depicts Transfiguration of a Woman of Ice.

Beautiful and Talented Woman Was From Childhood a Creature of Coldness. See How the Divine Spark Was Kindled.

Her Mother Would Not Let Her Keep Her Favorite Doll. But That Was Only the Beginning of an Existence Without Affection and Impulse.

Mother Love Meant Nothing to Her. The Nursery Was the One Room She Hated in Her House. See the Fire Kindled by "The Spark Divine."

Advertising Angles: Alice Joyce has a big following, so make good use of her name. The picture admits of a good teaser campaign. Spread the question: "What is 'The Spark Divine'"? in your advertising. Tell them it is no material thing, but something of a spiritual nature, something appealing from within. Then announce that "The Spark Divine" is that of mother love. Avoid any tawrdy display or any cheap use of this great theme. Make use of the artistic and well woven story which brings a child up through a loveless and repressed childhood to womanhood without a spark of love. Say, "Mother love in this case was not wasted on a worthless son or daughter. She had no mother love to waste." Then use the part from the story which tells of the decoration of the nursery in the Jardine home and the fact that Marcia said, "I have absolutely no interest in this room," when her husband asked her to give the room the personal touch it lacked. Use the line: "See 'The Spark Divine' Flame at the Empire Theatre."

"The She Wolf"

Frohman Amusement Corporation Picture Starring Texas Guinan as a Female Bill Hart Is Full of Red Hot Melodrama.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

POPULAR price amusement, it was called in the old days, when the stage ran the sort of wild Western melodrama to which "The She Wolf" belongs. A Frohman Amusement Corporation picture, starring Texas Guinan as a female Bill Hart, it is full of red hot shooting scraps, and the two gun heroine handles her shooting irons with the ease of a true daughter of her native state, if the dime novels that were once the delight of the small boy are to be believed.

It has been announced that Texas Guinan was to appear in a series of two-reel productions, but "The She Wolf" is a special five-part release written by John Colton, screen version by Raymond L. Schrock. It gives the star the generous amount of gun play demanded in this type of story, and she has little trouble in making it understood that she is quick on the trigger and will stand no nonsense. Her acting all through is of the right caliber to suit lovers of the lurid, and Cliff Smith understands how to direct a Western story. The supporting company, which includes Jack Richardson and Josie Sedgwick, is capable.

"Sahara" Proves Popular During Hot Weather

EXHIBITOR demand for the J. Parker Read, Jr., special production, "Sahara," starring Louise Glaum in a C. Gardner Sullivan drama personally supervised by Allan Dwan, has kept the W. W. Hodkinson organization busy during the past week.

Joseph L. Plunkett, managing director, has booked the film for an immediate playing date at the Strand Theatre, New York, admitting that this booking of a noteworthy production meant laying another picture on the shelf, as the Strand is over-bought from now until the new season starts in September.

Tom Moore's Rialto, Washington, not only booked, but gave an immediate playing date, beginning Sunday, June 8, and opening to big business despite hot weather. Mr. Moore's contract calls for two weeks at the Rialto and a second run to follow at Tom Moore's Strand Theatre, Washington.

The Chicago office of W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Division Manager E. C. Fielder and Manager E. S. Rowley, have booked the film for the entire Lubliner & Trinz circuit of theatres with a first run to precede this splendid circuit showing. It starts its run through the Lubliner & Trinz houses within a week in their beautiful Pantheon Theatre.

Arrival of the prints in Chicago found not only every big first run and circuit account in the city demanding the first opportunity to book, but found Milwaukee exhibitors telephoning for first options.

Under rigid instruction of the Hodkinson home office organization only such exhibitors as will guarantee unusual advertising and exploitation are being permitted to book "Sahara" at this time. No exhibitor whose showmanship plans involve treating this picture as a routine production is being granted bookings, and there is no intention of the film being permitted to get into the hands of any exhibitor-customer who fails to take advantages of the remarkable possibilities of the production from a box office angle.

Three thousand big exhibitors have been supplied directly from New York with the music-theme prepared for the picture by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York.

Big Showmen Aid in DeLuxe Edition of Goldwynner

THE de luxe catalogue edition of the Goldwyn Goldwynner, the exhibitor house organ published semi-monthly by Goldwyn, is a striking example of the gentle art of "giving exhibitors what they want and need."

Numbering twelve pages, produced in colors on an extra quality grade of India stock, and tabulating, illustrating and describing all Goldwyn releases to June 1, 1919, the catalog edition is a most practical "exhibitor help." Director of Service Hunt Stromberg compiled and edited the catalogue.

The front cover page devotes itself to a beautiful pictorial layout of the Goldwyn stars.

Page two is devoted to editorial expression, pointers on how to use the catalog.

The tabulation of releases begins on page three. Three pages are necessary to cover the titles, authorship, reelage, cast and descriptive stories on the Star Series productions.

Page six and seven illustrates and describes each of the twenty-six Goldwyn pictures made and released during the company's first year.

The tabulation of the Goldwyn Extra, "The Eternal Magdalene," occupies page eight. The other Goldwyn Extras, including "The Border Legion," "Eyes of Truth," Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset," "For the Freedom of the World," "The Manx Man" and the Selexart Trio, form an attractive arrangement on page nine.

The Louis Bennison series of Western dramas are described and illustrated on page ten.

The tabulation of Capitol Comedy releases and Ford Educational Weeklies occupy page eleven. On the back cover—page twelve—there is an exquisite color layout showing twenty-two Goldwyn resident managers and special home office representatives.

Billie Rhodes Goes West to Finish "Blue Bonnet"

COMPLETING the scenes for which a company of fifty persons were brought from California to New York, Billie Rhodes, her director, Louis William Chaudet, and her technical staff have returned to Los Angeles, where this star's Salvation Army story, "The Blue Bonnet," will be completed within the next two weeks.

In New York the National Film Corporation of America, the producers of "The Blue Bonnet," received big co-operation from the executives and departmental officials of the Salvation Army and similar co-operation will be extended by the officers of the organization in Los Angeles.

The production, which will be distributed nationally by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation as well as all future Billie Rhodes productions, is a powerful drama with comedy phases, with all scenes laid in the United States. The Salvation Army's participation does not make it a war picture in any respect, for the parts involving the army deals exclusively with the native or home phases of this organization.

The release of the film, not yet scheduled, will be preceded by a nationwide campaign of exploitation.

Frank Keenan Completes "The Trap."

Frank Keenan, star and head of Frank Keenan Productions, Inc., recently entertained a party of thirty at a pre-view of "The Trap," a five-part drama of the shipping industry, at the Robert Brunton studios, Los Angeles. The production called forth warmest praise.

In the supporting cast are Myles McCarthy, Joseph J. Dowling, Edward Brady, Clyde Benson, T. D. Crittenden, Helen Sullivan, Irene Yaeger, Jean Calhoun, Pell Trenton and Fannie Midgeley. The scenario was prepared by Jack Cunningham from an original story by Mrs. Kate Corbaley. The production was staged and directed by Ernest C. Warde.

Universal Has Burlesque on Prohibition.

"Ten Nights in a Tea Room" is the title of a rollicking burlesque on the prohibition question which is being staged at Universal City by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. The action takes place in 1950, and shows the effects of national prohibition in thirty years. The scene is in one of the low dives, where Oolong and Ceylon is sipped in absolute abandon, where degraded persons openly puff on cubeb cigarettes, and where otherwise pure and innocent youths come staggering from the effects of malted milk. Mildred Moore and Charlotte Merriam, who support the two comedians, help make the travesty a side-splitting prophecy on the effects of total abstinence.

Virginia Pearson Has New Role.

The Virginia Pearson Photoplays has started work on its second production at the Triangle Studios, Riverdale, New York. "Impossible Kate," an original story by Frank Beresford, is entirely different from any that Virginia Pearson has ever done. It gives her an opportunity of displaying her athletic abilities in playing the part of an outdoor young society girl.

Miss Pearson has been a devotee of polo for several years. Arrangements were made with Gedney Farms to stage a polo game in which Miss Pearson will take part.

The cast will include J. H. Gilmour, as the wealthy father, and W. B. Davidson, who plays opposite Miss Pearson.

"The Painted World" Widely Booked.

Vitagraph reports that a comparison of its Anita Stewart booking records reveal that "The Painted World," the third Vitagraph production of the season starring Miss Stewart, has been contracted for by every exhibitor who has shown the previous Stewart pictures and not a few besides. E. K. Lincoln and Julia Swayne Gordon have prominent parts in support of Miss Stewart.

The Story.

Drawing her shooting irons she starts to take a hand in the game herself. During the fighting that follows, the stranger is wounded, and the heroine carries him off to her shack and takes care of him.

Several days later, the sheriff, who is the head of a band of outlaws, robs the mail coach and leaves a number of letters scattered on the road. The two-gun young woman picks up one of the letters and learns that it was written by Sallie Bigby to her sweetheart, John Williams. It tells him that Sallie's father is in the power of the Chinese saloon keeper, and that she will be compelled to marry him unless she is rescued.

"The She Wolf" goes to the place, starts a lively scrap for the second time, and carries Sallie off to her cabin. Here matters are arranged properly. Sallie and her sweetheart meet and the stranger lets it be known that he intends to make the girl who nursed him back to health his wife.

"Some Bride"

Five-Reel Metro Subject Features Viola Dana in Breezy Little Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Metro production, "Some Bride," might be billed as a hot weather special, as it has a cool breeze running through it from beginning to end. It is almost guileless of plot, as it concerns only the madcap caprices of a young bride who hasn't learned how to make her eyes behave. But a good many spangles of laughter have been strung along the very fine thread of interest.

Both Viola Dana, who not long since played the famous child role in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," and Irving Cummings, who appears as the jealous young husband, are entitled to high praise for putting this slight comedy plot over so effectively. In other hands it might have failed. The settings and costuming also are extremely attractive. Some of the scenes at the barn dance are novel and striking, and the whole summer resort location is appealing to the eye.

The action is slightly farcical and certain situations are so unconventional that they required skillful handling to avoid offense, which they were fortunate in getting. The supporting cast is good.

The Story.

Patricia Morley is a pretty young bride, whose flirtatious ways at a summer resort keep her husband, Henry Morley, in a state of continual anxiety. Henry has a strain of Spanish blood in his makeup and his jealousy is attributed to this, though Patricia's actions would have puzzled many a more patient husband.

At an old-fashioned barn dance, where Patricia enacts the role of a chicken breaking out of an egg, Henry's wrath blazes up. He accuses her of being in love with another man and says he will leave her forever. Henry packs his things and returns to New York, where he files an action for divorce.

Patricia is heart broken and sends her friend, Victoria, to tell Henry that she is dying. Meantime Patricia has gone to a hospital and alarms the doctor and nurse with her hysterical conduct. Later the nurse discovers that the bride is bluffing, though she is serious in her efforts to bring Henry back.

Who the egg indicates is "some chicken," but who the picture says is "Some Bride."

Henry arrives at the hospital just in time to see Patricia playing the role of nurse to his divorce lawyer, who had broken his leg a day or two before. Henry once more explodes with wrath, but finally makes up with Patricia and they take the divorce lawyer home with them. Here still further complications follow, but all ends happily.

"The Devil's Trail"

Five-Reel World-Picture Presents Melodramatic Story of The Northwest.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel World-Picture, "The Devil's Trail," adds another to the constantly growing list of vigorous, red-blooded stories of the great Northwest. In the matter of presentation this picture is crude and unfinished in many of its episodes. It has to literally fight its way against many drawbacks, one of which is that this particular type of thing has been seen so many times previously. It does succeed in gaining and holding the interest, largely because of the good work of several of the principals and the fact that the story has a certain cumulative strength. The episodes of the final reel are unusual, some of them are brutal in the extreme, but the suspense is excellent. The release is one that will undoubtedly go well with indiscriminating spectators, who put forceful, melodramatic action ahead of other qualities in a story.

Betty Compson and George Larkin appear as the young lovers, and succeed in bringing out a certain romantic flavor in the midst of depressing surroundings. Fred M. Malatesta gives a good portrayal of the villain, Dubec, though one of an exaggerated type. Claire DuBrey is also proficient as Dubec's wife.

As a whole, this subject lags behind many predecessors in the matter of presentation, but it has a better story value than many others of the same type, and rises to a vigorous climax.

Proctor's Fifth Avenue Books "Lucky Thirteen"

THE LUCKY THIRTEEN Fox Sunshine comedies appealed to me as just the type of high-class comedy picture material to meet the demands of my patrons through the summer months," is a statement from Manager W. H. Quaid, of Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre, corner of Broadway and Twenty-eighth street, New York, as quoted by the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation: "We run the finest vaudeville bill that can be assembled, and this picture impressed me as just the right material for the end of my bill. I had seen these two-reelers in their first edition, and knew of the hit that they made. 'Send them away laughing' is my motto and the motto on which we have built up the success of Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre. So we are going to run one a week of these comedies in their revised second edition form, at the end of the bill.

"These comedies are real 'laugh-getters'—and don't forget that you can't afford to miss any chance to set your audience laughing."

Not only have "The Lucky Thirteen" been booked for the Proctor Circuit, but these Sunshine comedies are signed up in the Metropolitan district for the Rivoli, which has already run "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells" with great success; for the Riviera and the Rialto at Rockaway Beach; for the Broadway Photoplay, at Broadway and 103d street, New York; the Hudson Theatre, on Amsterdam avenue near 157th street, and the Fulton Theatre and U. S. Temple, at Union Hill, New Jersey.

Exhibitors require one hundred and four comedies a year, yet they are not at present in a position to obtain anywhere near this number. Some exhibitors who have found it impossible to take care of their comedy demands have been booking two features a week and filling in with weeklies. Yet they realized that it was of primary importance to make their audiences laugh. They regard "The Lucky Thirteen" as a welcome opportunity to give their bill that balance which spells correct showmanship.

The Exhibitors' Service Bureau emphasizes the point that these thirteen comedies have all been carefully re-edited and made up in brand-new prints.

Cast Now Complete for "The Way of a Woman"

ALTHOUGH work on Norma Talmadge's coming Select Picture, "The Way of a Woman," is practically completed, the retaking of several important scenes and the addition of two new names to the cast, delayed the announcement of the complete personnel of Miss Talmadge's company until the present time. It is now possible, however, to announce that Miss Talmadge's support in this production will be Conway Tearle, Gertrude Berkeley, Colonel Vernon, Mae McAvoy, Jobyna Howland, Hassard Short, George La Guerre, William Humphreys and Stuart Holmes.

"The Way of a Woman" is the production which was originally announced as "Nancy Lee," and is an adaptation by Eugene Walter of Mr. Walter's stage play, "Nancy Lee," which played at the Hudson Theatre in New York for two years.

The story, which is being directed by Robert Z. Leonard, concerns the life career of Nancy Lee, the eldest daughter of the old Virginia Lee family, who rejects an offer of marriage from the man she loves, and marries, instead, an impossible New York bounder, for the advantages that his wealth can give her mother.

"The Best Man" Acclaimed.

"The Best Man," the new J. Warren Kerrigan production released by W. W. Hodkinson, is being hailed by picture lovers and exhibitors in every section of the country as the peak screen achievement of the star. Despite a week of unfavorable weather in St. Louis, all during the presentation of "The Best Man" at the Pershing Theatre, one of the Koplar chain of Mound City playhouses, the Kerrigan production played to exceptionally fine business at every performance, Louis K. Sidney, managing director of the theatre said.

Billie Rhodes, Ingenue, to Appear as Salvation Lassie

SMILING BILL" PARSONS, president of the National Film Corporation of America, recently signed contracts that place Billie Rhodes under the distributing management of W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and decided to "go the limit" in the production of her new pictures. As a result, Billie Rhodes and an entire company of fifty players, including a complete technical organization, arrived from California and immediately began work in New York on "The Blue Bonnet," a powerful story by E. Magnus Ingleton. It deals with the Salvation Army and "over here." It is being made with the co-operation of the Salvation Army, and with many accessories and furnishings obtained directly from the Army organization.

This production is being directed by Louis William Chaudet. Among the members of the organization brought East with him are: Ben Wilson, long prominent as a featured screen player, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Allene Hale and Irene Rich, the technical staff from the Coast including Scott R. Beal, assistant director, and Ross Fisher, Cameraman.

Mr. Parsons has also concluded all arrangements for Miss Rhode's second big production, "The Little Boss of Big Ben," a recent Munsey's All-Story Magazine narrative. After the completion of "The Blue Bonnet," the star and her company will stop in Chicago and in Texas for necessary scenes in her second picture.

Masons Show "Once a Mason" at Benefit.

"Once a Mason," the Paramount-Drew comedy which shows what happened to Henry Minor when he revealed the secrets (?) of his lodge to his wife, Polly, was recently featured at the Flushing Theatre, Flushing, Long Island, under the auspices of Fellowcraft Club of Cornucopia Lodge of Masons. The net receipts added a good sum to the lodge treasury. At every performance the theatre was filled to capacity and the Masons declared the picture the most enjoyable comedy they had seen in a long, long time.

Mrs. Sidney Drew Starts New Comedy.

Mrs. Sidney Drew has begun the production of "Bunkered," a new two-reel comedy for the V. B. K. Film Corporation. This comedy is a golf story written by Emma Anderson Whitman. Most of the action takes place on the links and Mrs. Drew is staging the exterior scenes on the course of the Sleepy Hollow Country Club at Scarborough, Westchester County, New York. Mrs. Drew is playing her familiar role of Polly, and Donald McBride as her frivolous bachelor brother, heads the supporting cast.

Elaborate Set for "Tiger Lily."

A spacious and costly set embracing four rooms and covering approximately 400 square feet of floor space is being used at the American in the production of "The Tiger Lily," the drama by Joseph Franklin Poland, in which Margarita Fisher is now appearing under George L. Cox's direction. It represents the home of Phillip Remington, a millionaire whose son becomes involved in a romance with Miss Fisher, who figures as Pepita, an Italian-American peasant girl.

"The Turn in the Road" Breaking More Records

ANOTHER record is claimed by Robertson-Cole in an announcement in this week, contending that Exhibitors Mutual has sold more rebookings on "The Turn in the Road" than have been credited any other motion picture issued this year. This picture is the first of a series of pictures to be produced by Brentwood this year for release by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual. On the strength of its ability to draw big audiences, "The Turn in the Road" has been playing return engagements in theatres the management of which never dreamed that a starless production could accomplish such results.

Among the theatres which have recently rebooked the picture is the New Glove, Gloversville, N. Y., where on its original presentation more than 5,000 persons passed through the turnstiles.

R. J. McLean, of the Palace Theatre, Washington Court House, Ohio, has rebooked the Brentwood picture.

Tom Moore, of Washington, D. C., after playing the picture's first run for a week at his Rialto Theatre, booked it for four more days at his Strand.

The Strand Theatre in Jersey City was unable to accommodate the crowds which attended the five days showing of "The Turn in the Road," and was compelled to ask a rebooking, but could obtain only an additional day, so heavy has been the demand on the prints.

The People's Amusement Company, of Portland, Ore., have booked the picture for a week's run this month.

Miss Brockwell in Role of a Gypsy.

"The Sneak" departs from the eternal triangle, the social-problem type of play and the war appeal. It is neither society drama nor smart comedy. Romance unalloyed is the basis of this play—the long trail, gypsy troubadour and fortune tellers, and love over the campfire, which casts its flickering glow over gorgeously decorated gypsy vans.

Gladys Brockwell, the heroine, does not wear evening gowns or attend social functions. Instead, she appears in a gaily colored calico print dress and the bizarre head-war of the nomad.

The picture was directed by Edward J. LeSaint, and the story written by J. Grubb Alexander.

Dubec returns from the gold camp, after twelve years, accompanied by Nonette. The latter is now a woman of the dance halls, and she at first succeeds in keeping her identity from her father. "The Other Man's Wife"

Stuart Holmes and Ellen Cassidy in Five Reel Picture of Considerable Interest; Released by Frank G. Hall.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE part women played in the industrial life of the United States during the war is the theme of "The Other Man's Wife," a five-part picture, written by Mary Murillo and released by Frank G. Hall. Stuart Holmes and Ellen Cassidy are starred. The director was Carl Harbaugh.

There is considerable interest in the story, but it is overloaded with characters and its development is hindered by the constant shifting from one set of persons to another. It belongs to the style of photoplay that was the correct thing two years ago, and its war element, although used sparingly, seems rather out of date. The production is of good quality, and Carl Harbaugh has directed the picture consistently.

"The Other Man's Wife" has a touch of novelty in the way it is cast. Stuart Holmes, as a sort of he-vamp, is made the central figure in most of the scenes. He fits the part asily, and gives an excellent performance of a smooth-tongued slacker, who tries to steal the affections of a shallow woman while her husband is in France fighting for the Allies. Ellen Cassidy is the wife in question, and her attractive personality and knowledge of acting stand her in good stead. Other well played roles are contributed by Ned Hay, Olive Trevor, Laura Newman, Regina Quinn, George Jessel and Evelyn Brent.

The Story.

When J. Douglas Kerr, the male vampire in "The Other Man's Wife," discovers that Mrs. Fred Hartley is flattered by his attentions, he turns from her unmarried sister, Elsie, and does his best to break up the Hartley family. The husband is in partnership with his father-in-law, Bruce Drummond, a wealthy ship builder. Two other families are connected with the plot. One is the Moores, consisting of Jimmy, his mother and his sister, Betty, who works in the Drummond office. The other family is the Simons, made up of Davy Simons, his father and mother and his three sisters. Jimmy Moore is in love with Becky Simon.

Fred Hartley, Jimmy Moore and Davy Simon are all drafted and sent to France. Becky's father refuses to accept Jimmy as a future son-in-law when he comes to bid Becky good-bye, but the Irish boy's safe return at the end of the war wins the old Hebrew over. Fred Hartley is reported as having been killed, and Kerr loses no time in offering himself to the widow. Hartley's return just as his wife is telling Kerr that she never intended to marry him leads to the would-be bridegroom making a hasty exit and leaving his trousers in the grasp of the indignant butler. The last seen of the he-vamp he is walking along the street, dwarf-fashion, so that his overcoat will hide the embarrassment of being without his missing garment, as he does a Charlie Chaplin fade-out.

The real serious motive of the story shows most of the women characters engaged in some kind of war work.

"Daddy Long Legs" Draws Without Advertising

RAY ANDREWS, treasurer and manager of the Home Motion Picture Company, of Muncie, Ind., which operates the Star and Columbia theatres there, has accomplished that which most exhibitors probably would consider as the impossible.

Without a press sheet or the semblance of any prepared advertising, and without having seen the picture, read the book or witnessed the stage production, he put on "Daddy Long Legs," released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, at the Star Theatre during the week of May 11, and had them standing up at nearly every performance. And he didn't have to whistle the "Star Spangled Banner" to do it.

Mr. Andrews has notified Floyd Brown, manager for the H. Lieber Company, of Indianapolis, who have the First National franchise for Indiana, that he intends to repeat it in a few weeks at the Columbia.

The advertising and press matter for the picture was tied up in the East because of an express strike at the time Mr. Andrews was scheduled to show it, but that fact apparently did not worry him in the least. Realizing at the last moment that he was up against it for advertising, he made a combination program out of the film by showing it at his vaudeville house—the Star, on a two-a-day schedule. In addition to the feature picture, he had four vaudeville acts and a news weekly. The price of admission for the matinee was 22 cents, 28 cents, 39 cents, and 55 cents. The prices in the evening were 28, 39, 55 and 83 cents.

In order to give the children of the city—Mr. Andrews is strong for the kiddies—an opportunity to see Mary and her little freckled-faced friend, he gave a special matinee for school children on Wednesday and Friday afternoons.

The psychology of the special matinee was this: Parents who had seen the picture earlier in the week sent their children to the Wednesday and Friday matinees; their children told other children; and the children of those who had not seen the picture talked so much about it that their parents went to see it during the latter part of the week.

Goldwyn to Use Salvation Army Slogan for Publicity

A MAN May Be Down, But He's Never Out!" This nationally famous slogan —recently adopted by the Salvation Army as best describing the principle of its home welfare work—has been linked up by Goldwyn's service and promotion department for the nationwide exploitation of Tom Moore's new vehicle, "The City of Comrades," a dramatization of the Saturday Evening Post story by Basil King.

As a prodigal son who is thrown mercilessly into the whirlpools of fate and who finally redeems himself through the love and influence of comrades and a girl, Tom Moore graphically illustrates the conviction that "A Man May Be Down, But He's Never Out!"

The slogan-catchline, with full directions and suggestions for its use by exhibitors, is incorporated in the exploitation campaign devised for the film. A new press and service book, embodying sixteen pages of practical promotional material and showing, for the first time in motion pictures, illustrated lobby displays and stage settings, accompanies the release of the Goldwyn picture.

"Elmo the Mighty" Kept Busy.

"Buried Alive" is the title of the second episode of Universal's startling serial, "Elmo the Mighty." Elmo Lincoln, famous for his superhuman display of strength and courage as "Tarzan" in "Tarzan of the Apes," as well as other giant roles, such as Griffith's "Intolerance" and the "Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," exhibits in this serial feats that surpass all his former ones.

This chapter carries the hero, Armstrong, single-handed, through a series of throbbing adventures and battles against a pack of ruffians, banded together to rob the heroine, Lucille—this part superbly interpreted by Grace Cunard, who won her popularity through her serial roles.

Hamilton to Enlighten on Problem of Clerical Ethics

AN ALL-STAR series production entitled "In His Brother's Place," now in work at the Metro West Coast studios, promises to arouse considerable interest and comment upon its release, by reason of the subject matter treated in the original story.

In the production Hale Hamilton has drawn an unusual character of a clergyman who is imbued with the spirit of salesmanship as applied to the word of God.

Hamilton has treated in this production a delicate and dangerous subject in a manner which denotes a superior knowledge of the conventions of the Church as well as an original idea on the combination of the fundamental principles of salesmanship with the reserve and dignity of the house of worship.

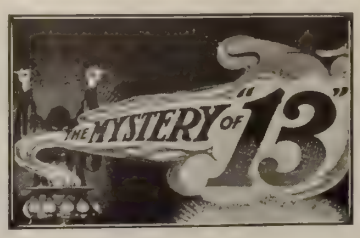
The author is confident that his offering will be received in the same spirit in which the idea was conceived. "There is no doubt," he said, "that such an action as I portray on the part of one of our prominent clergymen would incite considerable comment and disapproval from the few. Anything of the kind, new or at variance with customs of long standing, suffers the same reception. But I feel it will stand and prove itself. I am confident."

Views of Bee Farm in Kinograms.

The current issue of Kinograms, although it contains nine features, includes one that should arouse great interest among those who book this news weekly. It is designated on this issue as "The sweetest place in Ohio." It picturizes a bee farm at Medina, Ohio, known as the biggest honey plant in the world. This statement in itself does scant justice to the picture. What gives it unusual interest is the photographing of bees from this farm, the method of cultivation and the fact that these wonderful little insects command in the market as high as $100 each.

Seek "Huckleberry Finn" Locations.

William D. Taylor, who is to direct the Paramount-Artcraft special written by Julia Crawford Ivers from Mark Twain's story of boy life, "Huckleberry Finn," having practically completed his cast, is now scouting for locations with the location director. Hannibal, Mo., is the locale of much of the story, and the river scenes are of course highly important. The picture is in a sense a sequel to "Tom Sawyer," but the main figure is the ragamuffin, quaintest of Twain's creations. The humor of the South will be retained in the picture as much as possible. A cast without a star has been chosen. Every member was picked for type purposes.



"I'm for Table d'Hote,"
Says Frankie Lee, "tabled" here as he appears in Hodkinson's "The Westerners."

Marguerite Snow Supports Hamilton in Metro Picture

AMONG the players whom Metro has engaged to support Hale Hamilton in the screen version of Mr. Hamilton's story, "In His Brother's Place," is Marguerite Snow. It is some time since Miss Snow has appeared under the Metro banner.

A character actress whose stage experience dates back to a time before many of us spoke our first word, is intrusted with the lovable part of the mother of the star in Hamilton's new story. Ruby La Fayette is her name. Among some of the stage's most famous parts assumed by Miss La Fayette were Lucretia Borgia, Ingomar and Lady Audley.

Ward Wing has one of the principal parts in the picture. Emmett C. King appears as the elderly father. Little Mary MacIvor, ingenue, and Jessie De Jarnette, another character actress, are also in the cast, with the last of the important parts assigned to Howard Crampton.

The story outlines Hamilton's most original ideas on the application of salesmanship to the dignity of the church. It may serve to bring to the silent drama a new type of clergyman with new ideas, and will also show Hamilton in his first dual role before the cinema camera.

Report Increased Bookings on Bennison Star Series

A TREMENDOUS increase in bookings for the Louis Bennison Star Series productions, produced by the Betzwood Film Company and released through Goldwyn, has been noted following the star's latest success, "The Road Called Straight," now being played in the more important second and third run theatres throughout the United States and Canada. Goldwyn reports a gratifying number of contracts for every picture of Bennison's first series, from "Oh, Johnny," his first screen vehicle, to "Lord Jim," the last of the initial series, still several weeks from release date.

Goldwyn promises an unusual exploitation and showmanship campaign for the next production, "High Pockets," in which the star is supported by Katharine McDonald. This production will be released July 1, and for it the releasing company's publicity and service departments have prepared distinctive aids for exhibitors.

"The Sneak"

Five-Reel Fox Subject Features Gladys Brockwell in Gipsy Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is always a certain glamour about gipsy life, and this five-reel picture, "The Sneak," gives a colorful representation of the open road. It follows the fortunes of a band of gipsies, which moves in covered wagons, pitching camp here and there as fancy dictates. Gladys Brockwell is cast in the role of Rhona, daughter of the gipsy king, who has many suitors in the band itself, and complicates matters further for herself by meeting an artist and posing for him.

The chief charm of this number is found in its attractive atmosphere, which seems to lift the spectator from his seat and transport him to the woods and mountains. The plot follows conventional lines, the scenes depicting the interplay of love and jealousy among the principals. It contains but little drama, until the final reel, where two stabbings occur. This is melodramatic and the knife duel between Rhona and Francisco is well staged. The storm scenes are good.

As a whole this story is one that develops no very exceptional acting, but will please because of its picturesque settings and the general charm of the life portrayed.

The Story.

Rhona is a pretty gipsy girl, daughter of the king of the band, and next in succession to its leadership. She is in love with Wester, a comely youth, but affairs are complicated by the attentions of her cousin, Francisco, who is next to herself as a possible future leader of the tribe.

While the gipsies are at camp in a pretty rural country, Rhona meets a young artist, Roger Barrington, who has a shack in the neighborhood. Barrington is a portrait painter and desires to make a likeness of Rhona. This brings on the jealousy of Wester and Francisco, and also that of Barrington's fiancee, Enid.

The gipsy king is informed that Rhona has been meeting the artist frequently, and she is banished from the tribe during a heavy wind storm. She is left behind and throws herself upon the mercies of Barrington, whose intentions toward her were really without harm. In the course of time the truth becomes known and Wester seeks Rhona, to bring her back to the tribe.

She arrives just as her father is about to die. Francisco stabs Wester in a jealous fit, and Rhona gives battle to Francisco in a knife duel. The latter falls upon his own knife and dies. Wester seems destined to recover and the dying king gives the two his blessing.

"Oh, Boy"

Pathe Releases Six-Reel Adaptation of Well Known Musical Comedy Success.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE plot of the average musical comedy is pretty thin and this six-reel adaptation of "Oh, Boy!", made by Albert Capellani and released by Pathe, is no exception to the rule. There is much to be said for it, as a drawing attraction, however, and some things that will undoubtedly count against it, aside from its slight plot. As a musical comedy, it proved one of the most enduring of the string of successes by P. G. Wodehouse and Guy Bolton, and with an accompaniment of the light-running music written for the original production, the picture should distinctly benefit.

The screen adaptation has a pleasing juvenile quality throughout, many of the characters being college girls and

Give Permanent Title to Coming Guy Empey Picture

SELECT announces, this week, that a definite title has been decided upon for the coming Arthur Guy Empey special attraction, which has been previously announced under the temporary working title of "Hell on Earth." The permanent title will be "The Undercurrent," which more adequately fits the nature of this drama. "The Undercurrent" is a forceful story of life as it is today.

Guy Empey, the soldier hero, author and lecturer, will be seen in the principal male part, while the leading opposite role will be filled by Sergeant Empey's co-star, Evelyn Martin. Three other female parts of almost equal importance will be played by Marguerite Courtot, Betty Blythe and Sallie Crute.

The story was conceived and written by Guy Empey himself, while the adaptation for the screen is the work of William Addison Lathrop. It is being directed by Wilfrid North.

The dominant note in "The Undercurrent" is one which carries a special appeal to the public of today. It is a story of love, with the contrasting elements of pathos and happiness, intrigue and design. The filming of the production was completed this week and work is now progressing on the cutting and titling.

Vitagraph's "Spark Divine" Acclaimed at Private View

A FINISHED print of "The Spark Divine" was seen at Vitagraph's home office projection room last week and was voted a triumph of direction. Tom Terriss so controlled story and star as to make this photoplay of mother love, which might easily have verged on the melodramatic, an animated document breathing with human emotion.

The story is psychologically developed with no straining for effect, and affords Miss Joyce, in the role of "the girl without a heart," an opportunity to contribute to her galaxy of characterizations one that is unique and interesting.

William Carlton, Jr., scores the hit of his screen career as Robert Jardine, a mine owner who accepted fate's challenge and eventually melted the heart of the glittering but glacial woman whom he married on the chance that she might become a human being.

Eulalie Jensen is seen as the newly-rich mother of the heroine, playing the part with fine understanding, and Frank Norcross enacts the father, who also would sacrifice his daughter to ambition and affluence. Mary Carr makes an appealing picture as the mother of the hero.

The story of the picture is by Alicia Ramsey.

Reid Acts as Job Seeker in O. Henry Narrative

WALLACE REID is afforded good support in his latest picture for Paramount, "You're Fired," which was adapted from O. Henry's story, "The Halberdier of the Little Rheinschloss." The picture is released June 8.

Playing the leading female role opposite Mr. Reid is Wanda Hawley. Henry Woodward plays the heavy role. Theodore Roberts plays the part of Gordon Rogers, a stern old railroad magnate and the father of the girl whom Billy Deering, which role is played by the star, wants to marry. Lillian Mason, Herbert Pryor and Raymond Hatton and Guy Oliver also have roles.

The story concerns the attempts of Billy Deering, who wants to marry Helen Rogers, the daughter of a wealthy railroad owner, to work for thirty days without once being fired for incompetence, it being necessary for him to pass this test in order to win the consent of the girl's father. Hilarious complications arise from the fact that this arrangement between father and suitor is to be kept secret from the daughter until the expiration of the three months.

James Cruze directed, Frank Urson was the photographer and Clara G. Kennedy wrote the scenario.

Tom Mix at Old Tricks Again.

In "Rough Riding Romance," now completed for Fox Film Corporation, Tom Mix is shown as a young ranchman who finds eight-five-cent beefsteaks beyond the reach of his meagre purse. Then he strikes oil on his ranch and riches gush out for him.

All the world changes for him when an exiled princess from the Balkan States passes through Cow Hollow. On a visit to San Francisco to aid the princess he rides up four flights of a fire escape on horseback, and again rides up and down the stairway of the house occupied by the Princess. Probably the greatest feat, however, performed by Mix is his lassoing of a speeding train and climbing aboard with the aid of his lariat.

Archer Praises Hart for Prowess in Willard Film

WHEN Ray O. Archer, business representative for champion Jess Willard, arrived in New York last week to make arrangements for the showing of the big feature in which the heavyweight king will be presented next week, he was besieged by newspapermen. He was kept busy answering the phone every few minutes, and he finally decided that he could best answer the questions of the writers by holding a reception in the hotel. This he did the same night.

Mr. Archer declared that while he would take back with him any good men who were available and willing to stand up before Willard, his real purpose in coming East was to discuss the closing details of the plans for showing the Willard film. While he was here it was arranged at a conference attended by himself and Mr. Wilke, E. Lanning Masters, who has conducted the preliminary exploitation and marketing of the feature, and Frank G. Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation, for the Hall organization to handle the film in this country.

Mr. Archer paid tribute to the gameness of Al Hart, who played the heavy lead opposite Willard in "The Challenge of Chance" film, and engaged him in several desperate fistic encounters. Hart, said Mr. Archer, stood up under blows as hard as any Willard ever had used in the ring. From Director Revier it was learned that Willard, while he did not hit Hart as hard as he could, was unable to "pull" his punches, and the result was that Hart was knocked cold on at least two occasions, after putting up a magnificent battle with the champion. Hart is 6 feet 3 inches tall, weighs 200 pounds, and is a skilled boxer.

Willard's representative, after seeing the major part of the production run off in a projection room at the Crystal laboratories, said that he thought it was the fastest thing he ever had seen on the screen. Roy Somerville, author of the play, congratulated Mr. Revier on having maintained a swiftness of action and beauty of lighting and photography.

Dorothy Dalton Featured in Paramount Film of Intrigue

DOROTHY DALTON plays a unique role in the Paramount picture, "Other Men's Wives," which was produced under the guidance of Thomas H. Ince from a story penned by C. Gardner Sullivan. June 15 is the release date.

In this picture Miss Dalton portrays the life of a girl who is left an orphan among social parasites with no funds and not even a knowledge of any profession by which she might support herself. Her only assets are her beauty and her gorgeous gowns, and for the latter she is constantly hounded by fashionable modistes and dressmakers to whom she is indebted.

The production was directed by Victor Schertzinger and photographed by John Stumar. Among the supporting players Forrest Stanley heads the list, playing the leading male role, that of James Gordon.

H. E. Herbert, who has the role of Fenwick Flint, has played opposite some of the most noted stage and screen stars during his career.

Dell Boone portrays the role of Viola Gordon, the scheming wife, and Elsie Larimer and Hal Clements, it is said, do full justice to their respective parts as Mrs. Peyton-Andrews and Mr. Peyton-Andrews, two society leaders.

Ray and Fair Busy on New Picture.

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, the two William Fox stars who have been cast in young lovers' roles in several recent productions, are at work on a new story by George Washburn Child. The scenario is written by J. Anthony Roach. The working title is "Live Is Love."

youths. The heroine elopes with a college boy and they are secretly married, despite the unwillingness of the girl's parents and the boy's aunt. A football game makes a pleasing feature in the latter part of the story.

Prohibition comes in for a good deal of "spoofing" in this picture, the girl's father and the boy's aunt both imbibing too much in certain scenes. The father is a prohibitionist, and this adds to the significance of his downfall. He also becomes slightly involved with a young actress, but the story closes with his reputation still intact and all hands happy. The story interest would undoubtedly have been improved if this had been made in five instead of six reels.

The Story.

George Budd, a college youth in "Oh, Boy", is tremendously in love with Lou Ellen Carter, also in college. George's spinster aunt, Penelope Budd, objects to a wedding, and so does the girl's father, Judge Daniel Carter, an ardent prohibitionist. The Judge does not like George because he discovers that the youth takes an occasional drink.

George and Lou Ellen elope and are married. At about this time, Judge Carter is planning to deliver a prohibition talk to the college boys, and he visits the College Inn. Here the Judge falls a victim to the wiles of Jackie Sampson, a young actress, who induces him to take several drinks.

A telegram arrives from George's aunt, which says she will disown him if he marries, and George and Lou decide to separate at once and keep their marriage a secret. Lou goes home and George is left alone in the bungalow he had rented. This bungalow is presently invaded by Jackie Sampson, who escaped from the College Inn during a police raid.

Affairs become considerably complicated, as the constable comes and Jackie claims to be Mrs. Budd. George's aunt also arrives unexpectedly. She is under the influence of liquor, which she had innocently imbibed as tea. The actress recognizes Judge Carter, when he appears, and this creates a scene. But all is cleared up at the close, and George and Lou announce that they were married.

"Elmo, the Mighty"

New Universal Serial Promises to Turn Up Many Sensational Outdoor Incidents.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE hero of this new Universal serial is Elmo Lincoln, of "Tarzan" fame. He is himself a rugged and powerful man and these words come very near describing the character of this new melodramatic serial. It has a conventional plot, but one that serves to knit together a series of heroic deeds in the open, which will undoubtedly find many admirers among film fans. The hero engages in many hand-to-hand conflicts with other men, most of whom are of gigantic build, like himself. There is a certain realism in these encounters which is not always found in serial battles.

The story is almost crudely set forth in the opening instalment, but soon develops certain definite threads of interest. The heroine's father is made to believe that he has murdered a man, and is forced to hide in the "Mad Mountains," which are the scene of the story. The hero and heroine are in constant peril from the gang of outlaws who infest the region. It is the breathless, melodramatic character of the incidents themselves which fascinates the observer. The forest fire, the ride of the hero on an open flume, astride a log, and the mysterious doings of the Phantom menace, all serve to hold the attention. The serial is not as carefully constructed as many have been, but is strong in "punch" scenes and carries a tremendous feeling of reality.

Cast.

Bob Armstrong.....Elmo Lincoln
Lucille Gray.....Grace Cunard
Rawden.....Ivor McFadden
Steve Blighton.....Frederic Starr
The Mystery Man.....James Cole

The Story.

Richard Gray is a wealthy mining man with a daughter named Lucille. Gray has numerous enemies in the financial world, certain of whom, led by Steve Blighton and "Black" Rawdon, plan to cover up their own misdeeds by throwing the stigma upon Gray. These enemies contrive to bring about a conflict between Gray and another financier named Strang. They quarrel and Strang is mysteriously shot. Gray himself is led to believe he shot Strang and escapes to the Mad Mountains nearby. He has hidden some papers in a satchel, which will clear his name of any taint of financial crookedness, and leaves directions for Lucille to deliver these papers to the proper authorities.

Lucille is in love with Capt. Bob Armstrong, a forest ranger, and he aids her in all that follows. The satchel is stolen by the gang and afterward gets into the hands of the "Phantom Menace," a mysterious man of the mountains. Later the satchel is blown from its hiding place by an explosion, and floats down a river. In the meantime the girl and Bob have been captured by the outlaws, and the latter is put to torture until the girl says she will tell where the satchel is hidden. This, of course, she cannot do, but they escape during a forest fire and are swept down a river on a raft. The ride of the hero and

Scenes in "Checkers" Suitable for Big Publicity

"CHECKERS," the screen adaptation of the late Henry Blossom, Jr.'s, play of that name, which for more than fifteen years held sway on the speaking stage, has been in course of preparation for four months by Richard Stanton for the Fox Film Corporation.

"In listing this production," says the Exhibitors' Service Bureau, "the Fox Film Corporation recognized the big publicity value inherent in a story which had been before the public in spoken form so many years and which had received volumes of laudatory newspaper reviews.

"The press book will contain, pictorially, such great scenes as the train wreck, innermost Chinatown, the thrilling horse races at Belmont Park and the inspiring aeroplane scenes, besides an amount of helpful reading matter."

The Fox Service Bureau advises exhibitors to do heavy advertising on the spectacular train wreck. This is a bona fide wreck, filmed recently on a road crossing Kill von Kull, between Staten Island and New Jersey.

The racing scenes were filmed at the Belmont Park, Long Island, and on a New Jersey course. Twelve thoroughbreds were entered. Jean Acker, leading woman in "Checkers," rode Remorse to victory.

Sensational aeroplane scenes also constitute a basis for valuable advertising publicity, while the Chinatown episodes are unprecedentedly accurate in every detail.

The Chinatown set was built under the personal supervision of Police Captain Hannon, formerly of the Elizabeth Street (New York) police station—which has Chinatown within its jurisdiction.

Especially available for publicity is the interior of a Chinese opium den. This set is an exact replica of a dive which flourished unknown to the police for many years and was raided shortly before Mr. Stanton began work on "Checkers." All the secret trapdoors and panels have been reproduced with absolute fidelity.

Big Lumber Scenes in Next Virginia Pearson Picture

JOHN B. O'BRIEN, director general of the Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc., went last week, accompanied by Frank S. Beresford, the author of "Impossible Catherine," which will be the second production presented by Louis Meyer and which is now in the course of productions, by automobile to Lake George in search of locations for the latter part of the story, in which the scene of action is laid in a lumber camp. When they arrived at the logging camp situated on the Schroon River they found that the last log drive of the season would take place in the two days following.

As a drive of this sort was one of the scenic features Mr. O'Brien had counted on for his production a telephone call brought actors and cameramen to the scene, and the atmosphere of a real lumber camp was infused in the many shots they obtained of the event.

Miss Pearson will be seen in this role of Catherine Kimberly, the sports-loving heroine of the play, who does everything from appearing wonderfully gowned at society functions to playing a man's game of polo and going up 5,000 feet above ground in an aeroplane.

The story, written by Frank S. Beresford, is a strong one and is destined to give Miss Pearson one of the best roles of her career.

"April Folly" Replete with Atmosphere.

"Atmosphere" is the long suit of "April Folly," Marion Davies' latest starring vehicle now being screened at the Biograph studio. One of the features is a quartet of musical comedy boys assumedly returning from South Africa, who furnish string music for the passengers on a steamer homeward bound. The young men who fill the roles are actually just back from the same sort of experience in South America, and furnish the appropriate languor. Another novel idea is a genuine game of "Hop scotch" played on deck.

Revier Works Forty Hours Straight on Willard Film

HARRY REVIER, who directed champion Jess Willard in the Continental Pictures Corporation seven-reel feature, "The Challenge of Chance," returned to New York from Los Angeles last week accompanied by Arline Pretty, leading woman for Willard; Al Hart, who played the heavy lead and gave the champ a battle that would do credit to a Dempsey, and an augmented technical staff. He brought with him two full negatives and three prints of the picture that is to put the heavyweight champion before the screen fans of the country as a film star.

On his arrival in New York, Mr. Revier lost no time in getting to work on the cutting and titling of the production, having been forced to take approximately 40,000 feet of scenes. At the outset of his work he labored steadily from 5 a. m. one day to 9 p. m. the next, stopping only for meals. The work of cutting, titling and tinting the production is being done at the Crystal Film Company laboratories in the Bronx, and Mr. Revier has with him, in addition to the professional cutters, Roy Somerville, author of the story.

Vitagraph Commences Work on "The Gamblers"

A CONTINGENT of Vitagraph stock players, headed by Harry T. Morey, has begun work on "The Gamblers," the third of a cycle of Charles Klein's stage success to be screened by Vitagraph.

"The Gamblers" was accounted one of Charles Klein's greatest money makers. It opened its original run at the Maxine Elliott Theatre on October 31, 1910, and continued there until May 1, 1911, completing a purely New York City engagement of approximately seven months. Runs of almost equal length were scored in Chicago, Boston and other cities of the metropolitan status.

In addition to the masterly handling of the plot was its superb casting. Every character role was made to count to the utmost. Paul Scardon, who is directing the picture, was fully conversant with this factor and therefore went to especial pains in selecting the cast which is to perpetuate "The Gamblers" on the screens.

Harry T. Morey was chosen for the role of Wilbur Emerson. The pivotal feminine role, that of Catherin Darwin, will be interpreted by Helen Ferguson.

Other important assignments are those of Agnes Ayres to the role of Isabel Emerson, Charles Kent to that of John Emerson and George Backus, George Majeroni and Eric Mayne to the remaining important roles.

Oriental Atmosphere in Big V Comedy.

A rich moroccoan setting and oriental costuming impart to "Harems and Hokum" a distinct "atmosphere" which is maintained throughout the chain of grotesqueries contrived by Earl Montgomery and Joe Rock, the "Big V" comedians, with the capable support of Max Asher, Louise Granville and others. One is given glimpses of oriental streets with minarets and turrets, of palatial interiors, in which the well known beauty bath of the harem is not overlooked.

Stuart Holmes
Star of Frank Hall's Independent Select feature, "The Other Man's Wife."

"Bringing Up Betty" Is Directed by Oscar Apfel

OSCAR APFEL, who is under contract for three years to make productions for World Pictures, which will be distributed as Apfel Productions, is at present directing "Bringing Up Betty" with Evelyn Greeley as the star. In her support he has engaged Grace Carlyle, who was last seen on Broadway in "A Stitch in Time" at the Fulton Theatre. Miss Carlyle has not alone played leading roles in numerous Broadway productions, but has been identified as leading woman in stock companies in prominent cities of the United States. This fact should give an added value to this picture to the exhibitors in the different cities where Miss Carlyle has played.

Another well known actress who will appear in "Bringing Up Betty" is Maud Turner Gordon, who last appeared in support of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in their stage production of "Keep Her Smiling."

Lyster Chambers is Miss Greeley's leading man. Others in the cast are Reginald Denny, Ben Johnson, Joseph Weber, Oliver Smith, Grace Hansen and Morgan Wallace.

Riley Clubs Anxious for "Orphant Annie."

World Pictures, which is distributing "Little Orphant Annie," a five-reel feature from the poem of the same name by James Whitcomb Riley, is in receipt of a large number of letters from Riley Clubs throughout the country asking for information as to when the picture will be seen in their home towns and at what theatre. These letters in themselves indicate a splendid means of exploiting the production of this picture and gives to the exhibitor a tie-up with his box office. The fact that the Riley Clubs are composed of adults dissipates the impression that some exhibitors have that this is a picture whose greatest appeal is among children.

New Brockwell Play Title.

The Fox Film Corporation has chosen "Rose of the West" as the title for Madlaine Traverse's latest picture, which has been in work under the name, "Until Eternity." It is a picture of the Canadian Northwest wilderness and deals with the highest reaches of mother-love and the lowest depths to which greed can bring the father of a girl. Harry Millarde directed.

"The Girl of Hell's Agony"

Merit Film Corporation Production Has Texas Guinan as Star and Is Real Western Melodrama.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

LIFE in Texas, when the quickest shot was the fellow who lasted the longest, is the subject of "The Girl of Hell's Agony," a Merit Film Corporation production, with Texas Guinan supplying the gun play. The picture belongs to the series of Western melodramas, which this actress is to make and the Frohman Amusement Corporation is to release. It is on a par with "The She Wolf," director and actors being identified with both pictures.

Meg Carter, the part played by the star, is the daughter of the man who runs the "Hell's Agony" saloon. He is killed in a row, and Meg takes it upon herself to keep the business going. This requires her to mix in and put a stop to any and all fights, which she does with the assistance of her constant companions, her two revolvers.

Brian McTavish, who is supposed to help maintain law and order in the town, tries to take advantage of Meg, and a man by the name of Bad Lands O'Connor prevents him. For this McTavish determines to get even. A number of murders have been committed near O'Connor's cabin, and McTavish fastens them on his rival by lying. The crowd is about to hang the innocent man when Meg effects his rescue. She gets McTavish to consent to a test of marksmanship with her and defeats him, the life of O'Connor being her prize. There is a wedding in town shortly and Meg and O'Connor are the principals.

Cast.

Meg Carter.....Texas Guinan
Bad Lands O'Connor.....George Chesboro

Advertising Angles: Play up the star and feature her as the first two-gun woman. Make good use of the striking title. Then play up such lines as "He thought she couldn't shoot, but she beat him three to two." "She was brought up on a ranch, but she ran the toughest saloon in all the Southwest." Emphasize the type of character rather than this particular character, and help establish the series.

"Squared" Is Sidney Drew's Last Picture.

"Squared," the last two-reel Paramount-Drew comedy in which the late Sidney Drew appears, will be released on June 15. This V. B. K. Film Corporation picture was produced by Mr. and Mrs. Drew at the Essanay studios in Chicago.

There is an innovation in this picture, which makes it quite different from previous Drew comedies. Mrs. Drew plays her famous "Polly" as an unmarried girl instead of as Mrs. Henry Minor.

COMMENTS

Fox Film Corporation.

SWEET PAPA, June 15.—A characteristic Mutt and Jeff animated. They appear as attorneys-at-law and are visited by a woman who wants to apply for a patent "squall stopper," an invention for quieting crying children. The situations are quite amusing.

HANDS UP! June 8.—This pictures Mutt and Jeff in the West, where they get mixed up in a stage-coach robbery. The riding scenes, in which the bronchos cover mountain tops in incredible fashion, are laughable.

OH! TEACHER! June 1.—A half-reel Mutt and Jeff animated, in which the two visit a school house in the country. This furnishes the usual laugh, and the ringing of the school bell to call the children in is particularly funny.

A SHELL GAME, May 25.—A half-reel animated in which Jeff, being attacked in the rear by a live lobster, visits a shooting gallery. Mutt tries to shoot the lobster with disastrous results.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE MISSING HEIR, June 15.—Episode No. 9 of "The Tiger's Trail." This installment is full of fast action. It begins with the rescue of Belle and Jack from the auto accident, and speedily following this they have a fight with Tiger Face. The latter steals the Pact and flees, stating that it will only be exchanged for the missing idol. The production closes with Jack being precipitated into a well shaft.

OFF THE TROLLEY (Rolin), June 22.—A good knockabout comic, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. Harold has some fun with a number of cops and later invades a street car, where further humorous incidents occur. The number strikes a good average.

SPRING FEVER (Pathe-Rolin).—One of the snappiest of recent comedies featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. In this Harold plays a tired clerk, who escapes from the office on a spring day and meets with some amusing adventures. There is some good knockabout work in this and it is enjoyable throughout.

BRINGING IN THE LAW (Pathe, June 22).—Chapter 10 of "The Tiger's Trail." This begins with the rescue of Jack from the well into which he was precipitated by Bull Shotwell's bandits. This whole incident is splendidly handled. Further scenes deal with the manner in which Faro Nell clears the name of Strong, who had been accused of murder. The final scene shows Belle making a leap from a cliff to a tall tree. An unusually good instalment.

Universal Film Company.

A PISTOL POINT PROPOSAL (Universal), June 9.—Eddie Polo, Eileen Sedgwick and Leo Lester appear in this two-reel Western subject. This is a first-rate comedy of its kind, depicting the way in which Eddie's cowbody friends frame up to make him propose to his sweetheart. The mountain roads and other scenic effects are fine and the melodramatic acting is pleasing.

THE MYSTERIOUS MESSAGE (Universal), June 23.—Episode No. 15 of "The Red Glove." This number deals with Wiley's efforts to gain a hold upon Vernon through a forged check bearing North's name. Billie appeals to North to save Vernon, and North confounds Wiley by admitting that the check is good. Billie is then lured into the hands of Wiley and the gang by a mysterious note. The number contains no big moments, but is interesting.

Charles Ray Makes Some Entertaining Film Footage in "Hay Foot, Straw Foot."
He appears in the overseas uniform of today in another part of this, his next Paramount.

"Crimson Gardenia" Is Product of Co-operation

JUST how valuable is the actual co-operation of the author in the screening of his or her themes is abundantly seen in Goldwyn's recently released "The Crimson Gardenia," one of Rex Beach's creations. It was partly by the outcome of Mr. Beach's aid in this and other picturizations of his ideas that Samuel Goldwyn became convinced that the author's co-operation is what has been lacking in the past and must be supplied in the future. The consequence was the formation of the Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc., which has under contract for a long term of years Gertrude Atherton, Rupert Hughes, Governeur Morris, Mary Roberts Rhinehart, Basil King, and Leroy Scott.

This is a real Rex Beach tale. The screening of this story has lost it nothing and even gained for it a certain amount of color. Owen Moore portrays with rare skill the adventures of Roland Van Dam, who comes to the Mardi Gras in New Orleans to seek adventure and finds it galore, as the result of innocently wearing a gardenia pinned on his breast by an old flower-seller. The flower attracts the attention of Madelon Dorette (Hedda Nova), who thinks the masked man is her cousin, a fugitive from justice whom she has never seen, but with whom she has a rendezvous. He has agreed to wear a gardenia to make his identification plain. She therefore joins Roland and they stroll together. Thus the complications begin, which end quickly in an attack on Roland and in the death of the cousin, whose gardenia is incarnadined by his assassination and thus gives the name to the story.

Madelon is finally disillusioned of the unhappy idea that he has been responsible for her cousin's murder and turns back to Roland.

Every Day Is Fish Day at Lewis' Camp on Columbia

MITCHELL LEWIS, star in Select pictures, whose current attraction, "Jacques of the Silver North," is now being shown in the first-run theatres throughout the country, has already commenced work on the fourth of his Star Series productions for Select.

Mr. Lewis and his company, with Robert Bradbury, the new director general of the Mitchell Lewis Producing Company, are now located on the banks of the Columbia River in the state of Washington. For the first three or four days, the Mitchell Lewis company lived on trout and salmon, but although these delicacies are retailing for stock exchange prices in New York restaurants, the steady diet of trout for breakfast, luncheon and dinner was too much for the Select star and his associates. At the end of the fifth day, one of the camp employes was dispatched to the nearest trading post for a supply of other foodstuffs.

Mr. Lewis will remain on his present location for two or three weeks more, and then remove his company to the Yosemite Valley district, or some similar region, for a number of choice mountain shots. The studio work will be done in Mr. Lewis' Los Angeles studio.

Make Scenes at Sherry's.

Sherry's, at Fifth avenue and Forty-fourth street, New York, for a generation one of the most popular of America's metropolitan restaurants, closed its doors Monday, June 2, when the effects of the entire building were sold at auction. On the day before the place was dismantled the beautifully furnished rooms which have provided the setting for so many notable social affairs, were converted into a motion picture studio. John M. Stahl, directing Miss Mollie King in "Greater Than Love" for the American Cinema Corporation brought his cast into the building, studio lights were installed and numerous scenes were taken in various quarters of the building, particularly the tapestry room on the second floor.

Train Scenes for Russell Play.

Special trains may be all right for some purposes, but "Bill" Russell chose to use an ordinary day-coach last week for some scenes in "This Hero Stuff," Stephen Fox's satirical comedy, which will soon be presented by the American. Russell and his company, under the direction of Henry King, boarded a Los Angeles-bound train and filmed en route about thirty scenes in which the regular passengers participated. In the troupe were Winifred Westover, Mary Thurman, J. Barney Sherry, Harvey Clark and J. Farrell MacDonald.

Ferber's "The Gay Old Dog" Is Being Filmed by Henley

THE possibilities of the emotion incorporated by Edna Ferber in her story, "The Gay Old Dog," were brought to the attention of Hobart Henley, of Hobart Henley Productions, Inc., by Mrs. Sidney Drew, who saw in this human interest story a narrative of everyday life, of the home, of the people—a story that is enacted every day in the week and year.

Mrs. Drew is one of the five ingredients that stand for Hobart Henley's first production to be released by Frank G. Hall. Mr. Henley is, of course, another. Edna Ferber, the author of "The Gay Old Dog," will be remembered for her work, "Our Mrs. McChesney," produced on both stage and screen, with Ethel Barrymore as the star of both productions, is another ingredient. John Cumberland heads the cast, and is now one of the principals in "Up in Mabel's Room." In his support are Corrine Barker, Inez Marcel, Emily Lorraine, Mary J. Chambers and Gertrude Robinson.

Releases Emmy Wehlen in "Fools and Their Money"

EMMY WEHLEN, star-comedienne, appears in Metro's release of June 16, called "Fools and Their Money," adapted from the original story by E. Forst.

In this story Miss Wehlen is said to have a role suited to her character and for the display of her wardrobes, which has been recently enlarged with new creations of gowns "made in America."

The synopsis of the production shows the picture to be a rather satirical treatment of the efforts of the newly rich to occupy the seats in the inner circle of society born and bred in the purple.

Jack Mulhall is Miss Wehlen's leading man. A character actor who has one of the most important roles is William V. Mong. Charles Mailes also has a strong part. The other principals are Betty Peterson, Mollie McConnell, Gerard Grasby and John Steppling.

The original manuscript of "Fools and Their Money," submitted under the tentative title of "The Family Tree," was converted to the screen by Finis Fox of the Metro staff; and the production has been made under the direction of Herbert Blache.

Has Simplex Projectors in His Home.

An indication of the popularity of the motion picture may be gleaned from the fact that Charles Phillips, prominent millionaire clubman of Phillips Beach, Swampscott, Mass., has a fully equipped and up-to-date projection room and theatre installed at his home.

Instead of the customary theatre chairs, Mr. Phillips has fitted his private theatre with large luxurious armchairs. In the private projection room are installed two large motor-driven Simplexes of the latest type, a mercury-arc rectifier being used to convert the current. A phonograph and organ complete the theatre equipment.

Mr. Phillips is looked upon by the Boston exchanges as a regular customer using the same high class productions as do the first run houses.

LONDON'S COME-BACK AS TRADE CENTER DISCUSSED FROM PRACTICAL VIEWPOINTS

Balance of Power Has Shifted to New York, American Metropolis, as Result of Perfectly Logical Conditions

VOLUME OF PRODUCTION COUNTS

When European Output Equals Material Turned Out Here, in Quality and Quantity, English Capital Has Chance to Regain Its Lost Prestige—Anxious Foreign Buyers Want Quick Action and Must Be Close to Base of Supply

The New York export colony has been only mildly interested in the little flurry of discussion which has been taking place in the moving picture trade papers concerning the possibilities of the shifting of the center of the foreign film trade from New York to London. The subject is not a new one, and there are few real arguments either for or against either London or New York which have not already been advanced—and most of these arguments, not unnaturally, have been advanced by advocates prone to make their wishes father to their thoughts.

A group of men well known in the film export trade, including at least one with important property interests in British fields, which are certainly calculated to make him lean the London way, were discussing general export conditions and "futures" on Monday in the offices of the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., at 729 Seventh avenue. L. Auerbach, a veteran in the international moving picture trade, had just received a long letter from Ben L. Blumenthal, with whom he is associated in the Export and Import firm, from Copenhagen, Denmark, where Mr. Blumenthal has been for some months familiarizing himself with conditions in Europe and making arrangements for the further expansion of the firm's already large business.

The exporters in this purely informal gathering were of one mind on the subject of transferring the international film center to London, and their thought may be expressed in these words: When all of Europe, including such recognized film manufacturing countries as France, Italy and England, develop a product in moving pictures, either from the quality or the quantity standpoint, which will compare at all favorably from the picturegoing public's point of view, with the product of the American manufacturers, then—and not until then—will there be in existence a condition which logically might place an European capital in a position of leadership in the international moving picture industry.

Much has been said and written of the popularity of American-made moving pictures in the foreign markets, and of the reason for this popularity. A very large percentage of the moving pictures shown in any country are of American manufacture. The claim that this percentage runs as high as ninety-five in Great Britain and Latin America is not seriously disputed. That the popularity of American-made pictures lies with the general public and not with the buyers and distributors seems certain. If these premises are true, then American-made pictures will be in great demand throughout the world until such time as something more to the general public's taste is developed. On the face of it there seems but little question but that the place to buy a world's supply of any product is in the sales market nearest to the place of production. Applied to the moving picture business this would establish New York, and not London or any other European capital, as the center—and exporters in this country know that there are a number of peculiar reasons why prospective buyers of moving pictures will deal in New York as long as American-made pictures are in such great demand.

Foreign Buyers Repose Little Trust in Each Other.

Conditions in the export market just now illustrates one of these "peculiar" reasons. It is notably true, that despite the cry of "overproduction" in the domestic market, there is a demand for more pictures in the big foreign markets than can be supplied. Buyers from all corners of the world are in New York looking for pictures—and they are having difficulty in finding the pictures that they require. There have been a number of instances recently in which important territorial rights have been sold on productions that have had no more material existence than the flimsiest synopses. These contracts have been made—and cash deposited upon them—for the reason that the buyers want pictures—and have been afraid that some other willing purchaser would "beat them to it." It seems indisputable that he buyer operating in New York would have a tremendous advantage over the buyer in London, or anywhere else, who would find himself a number of weeks behind on the kind of information he would need for early and decisive action. American exporters who see New York as the only logical center point a truth which any one who has watched the operations of foreign buyers knows—a truth insignificant on the face of it, but all important in a discussion of this subject—and that truth is that foreign buyers trust each other but little. Each deal they make is an intensively individual deal, calculated to benefit their interests only at the time the deal is made. There has been but little concerted action on their part in the past, and but little is to be looked for in the future. If it seemed best to some of them that their purchasing should be done in London, there would be plenty of others who would think it only good business to let the other fellow sit in London, waiting for pictures that would only reach their territories after royalty contracts on them had been signed in New York.

Conditions Have Changed Since London Led in Films.

London's eminence in the international moving picture trade, it must be remembered, was established in the early boom days of the moving picture industry—at a time when there was comparatively little production in this country, and at a time when American-made pictures were a drug on many of the foreign markets. When competition was not so keen in this country, the American producer had at his very doors a market more than sufficient to show him a tremendous return on his investment—and this market was infinitely more easily reached than was the foreign market. He knew the domestic market and didn't know the foreign one. He could deal intelligently with the domestic distributor on the essential matters of price, censorship, etc., but he was forced to admit that he didn't know what his wares were worth abroad or why some of his pictures were impossible for foreign exhibition. London, with a well-oiled organization, established primarily for the purpose of carrying on trade in all lines with the many English colonies, which, in turn, were logical distribution centers, was the logical city in which to sell anything intended for the foreign trade by the "job lot" process. The price London was willing to pay, whether large or small, represented pure "velvet" for the American producer. In the earlier days, there was little concern in this country whether the price paid for the rights of a picture for the foreign territory represented the maximum possibilities for the picture or not. A transaction with London interests was easily made, and all concern over the foreign fields was easily avoided.

American Producers Now Know Markets.

A couple of years ago, because of necessity, the foreign markets began to look to America and New York for moving pictures. Their activities immediately developed the export trade in this country. Smart moving picture men, who had worried along in the export business for years, with but little profit, began to devote more time and study to their work—and their profits began to increase. Others were attracted to the export trade, and this branch of the industry was developed, until today it is of vast importance. It is certainly not straining the truth to say that there are now operating in New York at least a few export film men who are better fitted for their calling than are any operators to be found in London or any other general marketing center. While the export film trade in London is an older institution, the New York export trade has grown faster, because there has been more business to be done and because it is the American characteristic to do everything in which money is involved in a much larger way than the same thing is done in any other country of the world. The American operator in the export moving picture field has learned the possibilities of the foreign markets, and it goes without saying that at no time in the future will London operators ever make the tremendous profits on American-made moving pictures which they once made. London will be permitted to buy for Great Britain alone, but New York will insist upon being in on the trading for all other territories, including even those which lie at England's door. Without the increased trade facilities which are being provided by the development of the American merchant marine and the laying of direct cables from the North American continent to America's logical export markets, including South America, which, strangely enough, were more easily reached by way of Europe, only a few years ago, this determination would have been found extant, and certainly, with these increased facilities, there seems little possibility of a switch to London.

Overseas Development Has Not Kept Pace.

Another phase of the situation which entered into the discussion the other day, had to do with the mechanical capabilities which London had developed to take care of the business which it is presumed she covets. Attention was called to the fact that England has never been able to make the kind of positive prints which are required by the international picture-loving public. The practice of shipping negatives abroad, in order that prints may be made on the other side, for the purpose of saving duty, is not very generally followed, for the reason that American-made prints are of so much better quality. Inasmuch as the proper kind of laboratory equipment—and even workmen of the same skill—are equally available in both the United States and England, even if they did have to be imported, there seems no good reason why this matter of printing cannot be corrected. And yet it has not been corrected, despite the apparent need for such action, and until it is, London's chances of selling the wide world film will not be of the best.

Balance of Money Has Shifted from London.

Leaving aside for a moment all these questions that might be considered more or less technical, a great deal of loose talk has been going on in regard to the financial resources of the countries involved and the influence that these resources can always bring to bear on any line of international trade. It is true that the source of production of an article is not always its distributing point. As a matter of fact, the great financial centers have always exercised some kind of direct control on the sources of production, whether they lay at hand or in the most remote corners of the world. On this basis, it is claimed by some, that London is bound to lead in the international film business.

But is London to-day the financial metropolis of the world, or did she lose that position as soon as the United States Treasury Department insisted on making loans, on a direct basis, to the different Allies, placing Great Britain at the same time on a similar footing as any other borrowing nation?

We do not hesitate to confess that our knowledge of world finances is very limited, and it would be fatuous to expect that any practical business man should plan his future activities on our conclusions. However, Frank A. Vanderlip, the president of the National City Bank, should know about these matters, and, in his recent speech before the Merchants Association, he covered the subject very thoroughly.

This is what he said, according to The Evening Post:

"We (the United States) are going to be the financial center of the world, I think, but it is not going to come easy, or as a matter of course." London he said, had been the financial centre, and had discharged its work admirably, and added: "I should like to see the center move slowly, because England is facing a serious situation." He explained his statement by saying that the financial center must be able to pay its balance in gold, and that England no longer was able to do so. His tribute to English determination during the war and in the crisis since provoked applause which forced the speaker to stop for several moments.

Engendering of Jealousies Deplored in This Country.

Finally, it should be said that the American export colony shows no bitterness in discussions of this kind. London's position in the international film trade is an important one, and the New York operators know it. Jealousies on the subject which has been discussed, or on any other subject, can make for nothing but inefficiency in the world wide distribution of the products of all manufacturers, whether European or American. And so, the American brethren, when it comes to talking for publication, are usually as dumb as clams. If London ever becomes the logical center of the international moving picture trade, its position will be freely acknowledged—and, doubtless, then too there will blossom out along the big English city's "film row" a lot of signs which previously had been read from little old Broadway.

WHEELER IN EUROPE FOR BECH, VAN SICLEN

Lucien C. Wheeler, head of the film department of Bech, Van Siclen & Co., Inc., has sailed for Europe to take up matters of importance in connection with the future plans of this big exporting company.

Mr. Wheeler is taking with him a number of feature productions which are to be sold in England and on the Continent.

Bech, Van Siclen & Co., Inc., is purchasing the foreign rights to only the best independent features. Arrangements for the distribution of these features throughout the world, are to be made by Mr. Wheeler, whose itinerary will include England, France, Italy, Spain and Scandinavia.

During Mr. Wheeler's absence, A. Wortham is acting head of the film department.

Bech, Van Siclen are now engaged in marketing in the foreign field four pictures starring Catherine Calvert, recently engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for big special releases. The pictures acquired are "Marriage," "Out of the Night," "Marriage for Convenience," and "Romance of the Underworld"; in the last of which Eugene O'Brien, the new Select star, has the leading male role.

The same concern recently purchased the world rights, exclusively of the United States and Canada, on "The House Divided."

HART-BYOIR COMBINATION FORMED TO OPERATE THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

Ex-Foreign Commissioners Are to Make "Result of Their Experience and Investigation Available for American Manufacturers and Exporters"

A new organization was inaugurated this week which it is contemplated will fill a distinct need in the expansion of the international moving picture trade relations of the United States resulting from the war.

The company has been formed by a number of young men who during the war directed certain phases of war activity in foreign countries for their respective governments.

The purpose of this new organization will be to make the result of their experience and investigation in foreign countries available for American moving picture manufacturers and exporters. With its headquarters in New York City and offices in Shanghai, London, Paris, Rome, Geneva, Mexico City, Buenos Aires, Stockholm and The Hague, under the name of Byoir & Hart, these ex-foreign commissioners who had charge of the presentation through publicity of America's war effort in foreign countries as well as representatives of France and Italy who acted in the same capacity for their own governments, will offer facilities for information, accurate knowledge of markets and their background, trade and distribution methods and sound business advice that their peculiar advantage gives them the opportunity to possess.

The organization comprises men of five different nationalities.

Charles S. Hart, who until May 1 directed the entire film activities of the United States Government during the war as director of the United States Division of Films, is president of the new concern. Mr. Hart had offices during the war in twelve foreign countries, and his activities covered world-wide territory.

Carl Byoir, treasurer of the organization, as associate director of the United States Committee on Public Information and as organizer of its various sections, directed United States educational propaganda in all foreign countries, putting forth America's war aims and ideals and controlling the work of sixteen foreign offices. He also organized the foreign national groups in the United States to support the war.

Lewellyn R. Thomas, the secretary, and whose activities will center in Central Europe, was commissioner for the United States in Holland during the war. His work was intimately associated with America's fight for the public opinion of that country during the war.

Switzerland will be represented in the new organization by Louis Ador, son of Dr. Ador, President of Switzerland, and a well known sales expert in that country, as well as owner of a chain of motion picture houses. His office will be at Geneva, Switzerland.

Italy will be represented by M. Mario Prochet, commander of an Italian field battery during two years of Alpine fighting, and director of exports for a Turin house before the war. For the last two years Mr. Prochet was one of Italy's commissioners to the United States engaged in work of an educational character. Mr. Prochet will operate between the United States and Italy.

France's representative, with headquarters in Paris, will be Edmond Ratisbonne. After two years in the trenches, Mr. Ratisbonne, who had been a specialist in French advertising and publicity problems before the war, came to America as official commissioner for the French Government.

Wilbur B. Hart, who represented the United States in China as commissioner during the war, will have headquarters in that country.

Wilmot C. Hawkins, who was a special representative for the Government in Mexico during the war, is already in Mexico City, with headquarters established.

Only recently, H. P. Inman, who will act as the expert for Russia, has returned from a year's stay at Archangel, where he was United States Government commissioner in Russia.

E. L. Starr will have his offices in Buenos Aires, from which city he acted as commissioner of films for the Government, covering Argentina, Uruguay and Chile.

Edward L. Bernays, who organized the export section of the Committee on Public Information and secured the co-operation of export sales and advertising organizations in "selling the war" to foreign countries, will have charge of general publicity. Mr. Bernays is known for his publicity for motion pictures and the drama, including "Damaged Goods" and "Cleopatra."

George B. Bell, a Western banker, and David P. Howells, head of a large export motion picture firm, make up the other members of the new organization.

ROBERTSON-COLE COMPANY EFFECT MANY BIG SALES

"Cannibals of the South Seas," Well Received in London, Goes to Barnstyn for France, Holland, Switzerland, and Belgium

J. Barnstyn, representing the British and Continental Trading Company, of the Hague, Holland, has purchased the rights for "Cannibals of the South Seas," for France, Holland, Switzerland and Belgium, through the Robertson-Cole Company. This sale is one of the most important consummated by the Robertson-Cole foreign department in some weeks. Recent trade showings in England indicate the pictures will receive the same wide favor they have attained in the United States where they are reputed to be the most unusual and entertaining films of their type ever seen on the screen.

Another important contract was closed when U. Ono, representing the Nippon Katsudo Shasin Kaisa, Tokio, Japan, took over the features produced in 1919 by the following stars: H. B. Warner, William Desmond, Bessie Barriscale, H. B. Walthall, Alma Rubens, Sessue Hayakawa, and the Brentwood features. Among the prominent productions which Mr. Ono obtains under his arrangements with Robertson-Cole are "The Turn in the Road," "What Every Woman Wants," "The Man Who Turned White," "Better Times," and "The Man Beneath," one of Hayakawa's most pretentious works.

Five Billie Rhodes features were purchased for Japan by the Eskay Harris Feature Films Co., represented by Samuel Kantrowitz. These features are: "The Girl of My Dreams," "In Search of Arcady," "Hoop La," "The Love Call" and "The Lamb and the Lion."

The North American Motion Pictures, Inc., of Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay, has renewed its contract with Robertson-Cole for the coming year and has doubled the number of productions taken last year. This contract was arranged by Charles Hale, one of the directors of the North American Motion Pictures, Inc. Among the features covered by this contract are the J. Warren Kerrigan films, to which Robertson-Cole Co. control the foreign rights; the Walthall, Rhodes and Ruben series; "What Every Woman Wants," with Grace Darmond; "The Turn in the Road" and "Better Times."

F. M. Furlo and Co., of Buenos Aires, Argentine, have met with such success in their exploitation of the Hayakawa features in Argentine, Paraguay and Uruguay, that they have extended their rights to include the territories of Chile, Ecuador, Peru and Bolivia. This contract covers the rights to the first eight Hayakawa pictures, which include "The Temple of Dusk," "His Birthright," "Bonds of Honor," "A Heart in Pawn," "The Courageous Coward," "His Debt" and "The Man Beneath."

HAMMOND STARTS NEW EXPORT FILM

G. R. Hammond, who recently resigned the position of manager of the Universal's export department, has opened offices at 729 Seventh ave., New York, for the purpose of engaging in the business of exporting moving pictures and all kinds of moving picture accessories. Mr. Hammond's new firm is known as the Equator Film Company.

The company's introductory announcement makes mention of two new types of moving picture projectors, which, it is said, are possessed of peculiar qualifications which are expected to make them popular throughout the foreign moving picture field. Mr. Hammond's wide experience in the general export field and his extraordinary abilities as a linguist are invaluable assets for any concern in this line of work and the Equator Film Company is beginning its career with unusually bright prospects.

SUGGESTS NEW ACTIVITY IN FOX EXPORT FIELD

In the general announcement that Arthur James, for four years in charge of advertising and publicity with the Metro Pictures Corporation, is joining the Fox Film Corporation the latter part of June, there is the suggestion of increased export activities on the part of the Fox people. Mr. James, it is announced, will look after not only all domestic advertising and publicity but the same branches of the business in all foreign fields as well.

Indian Author Criticises American Photoplay Idea

Meherjibhai M. Ratura lives in India, land of mysticism and religious devotion. He is quite evidently an author and addresses the outside world on letter-heads emblazoned with "GOD GOVERNS," and calling attention to four books which he has written.

Mr. Ratura has addressed the International Section of the Moving Picture World on the broad subject of the "Present Cinema Situation," writing in the English language, a medium of expression with which—and this reflects no great discredit upon a gentleman born and reared amid foreign environment—he seems not overly familiar.

Because Mr. Ratura's communication has all the ear-marks of sincerity and points two essential and important truths—the first that moving pictures are regarded with varying degrees of seriousness in various corners of the world, and the second that moving pictures, whether or not they be seriously considered by those responsible for their creation, are really a double-edged sword which should be handled with care, it is given space in the Moving Picture World.

Cinema has been, since its birth, received, welcomed, and hailed as Universal Instructor. Its importance and value were believed to consist in its infinite potentiality of instruction in highest and noblest knowledge. Its utility was considered to be illimitable enough to cover all human activities, be they social, moral, religious, commercial, or any and every other. In short, Cinema was meant to serve noble ends. And, if the direction of the Noble and the Good was the only one it was to be turned into, it follows that it was to be held too sacred to be diverted into the opposite direction of the Evil and the Base. However, a single visit to a Cinema theatre in India is sufficient to bring painful knowledge to us that by Cinema films depicting human vices in their worst fiendish forms, Cinema has been hurled down from its glorious celestial regions and prostituted to the service of the Vile and the Baneful. India is not a Cinema film manufacturing country, so it is not within her power to safeguard Cinema within its holy precincts and to barricade it against foul pollution. Under the circumstances, all that India can do, at this stage, is to be a silent observer of the uses Cinema film manufacturing countries turn it to. India can only see at the Cinema theatres the films as they are manufactured by other countries for show. For India's countless souls literally saturated with purity and spirituality, these films have a horror, as they behold therein but the deification of Vice. In the fondest hope, earnest desire, and firm conviction of finding in the Cinema film something to learn, people here visit Cinema theatres as often as purse and leisure permit. Words are powerless to describe the almost ecstatic delight with which they enter the theatre, and the most horrible dejection and grief with which they leave it when the show is over. The only reason for this is that they are yearning to learn from the Cinema something Good and Noble, whereas what they witness is everything opposed to the Good and the Noble.

All the American films shown in the Indian Cinema theatres are—perhaps, with a rare exception at long intervals—found to be devoted to the only one task of depicting and vivifying deceit, villainy, murder, bloodshed, and all the vices that materialism has plunged man into. From the beginning to the end, each film, whether it be a drama of a single reel or a serial of a hundred reels, is nothing but diabolical savagery with the veneer of the present-day material civilization. Human beings are depicted in these films to be so degraded as to be incapable of anything but brutality and deviltry. In these films, each character is a most dreadful villain; every deed is most atrocious rascality; every affair is a most hienous violation of the laws of common sense or conscience.

Such a representation of human life of modern civilization would have been, in all probability, less revolting to the mind of India's peoples, if such degraded and sinful life were not ascribed to the people of America, who are looked upon by the whole world as the only people on earth with whom nothing but truth and righteousness would weigh in politics or private walks of life, and who are ever ready to draw their sword to uproot injustice and evil wherever they are found to exist. This is at least India's belief regarding the character of the American nation, as confirmed by America's entrance into the present world-welter on the side of the Allies, and its superhuman efforts and sacrifices to stamp out Germany's militarism. Such films must necessarily be farthest from the very remotest approximation to the reality of the American life which is bound to be the noblest led by any race on the earth's surface. Hence, India wonders how it is possible that American people can allow such untrue and diabolical representation of their life to stand before themselves and other nations of the world, without resenting or blushing at it. I hope America will soon awaken to the imperative duty of making sure for itself that no American film depicts American life in untrue, distorted aspects of vices. Such gross misrepresentation of American life does no end of harm to America's people, for it makes them believe themselves capable of all vices, and it, also, lowers them in the estimation of other nations. Both the society and the government should take prompt action to arrest the evil ere its cumulative effect gets beyond human control. If the writers of stories and dramas for American films possess no knowledge of the highest ideals of civilization, morality, religion, spirituality, goodness, and so on, they would do well to bend their knees at India's feet to learn all these, for, they require not to be reminded that India is not the land of blind materialists, but sages with universal consciousness.

GLUCKSMAN RETURNING FROM SOUTH AMERICA

Jacobo Glucksman, New York buying representative for his brother, Max Glucksman, head of the oldest film buying concern in the Argentine, is returning to New York in the immediate future after an extended business trip to Buenos Aires and other South American film centres. During Mr. Glucksman's absence from New York, Joseph A. Hopfenberg has been looking after the Glucksman interests in the United States. Mr. Hopfenberg says that, nothwithstanding the fact that his firm has already contracted for an unusually large supply of pictures for their South American exchanges, they are still willing to consider additional pictures available for their territory.

BIG ENGLISH PICTURE IS WELL RECEIVED

Following the very successful private showing in London of the latest Broadwest production, "Under Suspicion," the film was bought at a big figure by Moss Empires, Ltd. The leading characters in the film are portrayed by Horace Hunter, Hilda Bayley, and Henry Latimer, with Cameron Carr and Jack Jarman also in the cast. On the completion of the film Miss Hilda Bayley was obliged to return to the stage to fulfill a theatrical engagement, but hopes to do some further film work when the piece comes off—which will not be yet awhile, however, judging from the reception it has received in Birmingham.

NICHOLS BUYS "TOPICS" FOR ENGLISH DISTRIBUTION

Timely Films, Inc., producers of "Topics of the Day," announce that they have sold to B. Nichols, managing director of the Motion Picture Sales Agency, of London, England, the entire British rights to this reel of timely and witty paragraphs selected from the press of the world by "The Literary Digest." Immediately following the showing of sample prints in London, before leading theatre managers, Mr. Nichols closed the deal by cable. It is understood that these rights were sold at a large figure.

"Topics of the Day" made a decided impression upon Mr. Nichols when he was in the United States a few weeks ago. While here he studied the reception of the "Topics" at representative theatres before sailing for England.

English Studios Humming.

All the film studios in England are busy and among the busiest is the Broadwest Walthamstow producing plant. Two films are underway there despite the fact that the heat in the big glass roofed studio is almost tropical, despite the electric fans and the light breeze that come through the big doors which are thrown wide open. Walter West, the supervising producer of the company, is working with coat discarded and upturned shirt sleeves whilst Violet Hopson, who will appear in the next Broadwest production, is constantly calling for her powder puff to mop her heated brow.

How Export Has Grown

Some idea of the proportions to which the export branch of the American moving picture industry has grown during the past couple of years may be had from the statement casually made in the offices of the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., a few days ago, to the effect that at that time this one firm had in work in various laboratories adjacent to New York, no less than two million feet of film being prepared for shipment to various foreign markets.

While the volume of export business done by the Export and Import Film Company probably exceeds that done by any other single organization in its line, there are many other concerns which it is fair to presume have in work from time to time, moving picture film measured at least in the hundreds of thousands of feet, running the total shipments from week to week up tremendously.

The Export and Import people have recently renewed their contract with the Mundus film company of Paris for this year's Metro productions, including the Nazimova classics, which have also been sold by the same exporting house for Scandinavia during the past ten days. Sales of the Oliver serials, including "The Carter Case," for England, Scandinavia, Egypt and Mexico, have also been consummated recently.

Foreign Public Taste

An enthusiastic young lady, employed by the trade development bureau of one of the great New York banks, walked into this office last week and asked of the nearest man:

"What kind of American pictures have the greatest appeal in foreign countries?

The "expert" fell into a reverie. Staring into space over her head, he felt himself transported to the early days of 1916, when export was young in New York and the solitary foreign buyer, prowling up and down Broadway, had to learn different signals, countersigns and special knocks to gain admittance to the offices of some of the then prominent dealers in films for exploitation abroad.

Coming back to life, he excused himself on the ground that the question, once a very lively one, had brought back old memories of an extinct race of film exporters.

"The problem," said he, "is very complicated and cannot be handled without special preparation. On general lines, it would be safe to bet on the proposition that every picture shown on Broadway, or in any of the New York theatres, eventually finds its way to London, Paris, Stockholm or Buenos Aires.

"As to appeal, it may be taken for granted that pictures dealing, for instance, with the marriage question among parsons are not exactly suited for Roman Catholic countries, where the clergy are supposed to practice strict celibacy, and those having as a basis the negro or other purely local theme might not be the best subjects for exploitation among people unacquainted with our little prejudices. On the other hand, there are the pictures intended to depict life in specific foreign countries, which, for the good of the industry, should not be allowed to leave the territory of the United States. The two versions of 'Carmen' released in this country some years ago, made every Spaniard ponder over the effect that the costumes and settings would have on any audience familiar with the particular section of Spain where the story takes place. Both pictures, however, have been very successful in Spanish-speaking countries. So there you are."

Is America Reflected In Its Photoplays?

Meherjibhai M. Ratura, writing from India, holds that the screen, hailed at its inception as the "Universal Instructor," has turned from the path of the noble and the good, and follows today the dark and twisted road of the Evil and the Base.

"For India's countless souls," says Mr. Ratura in his philippic, which appears on another page of this issue, "saturated with purity and spirituality, these films are horrible, as they behold therein but the deification of Vice. . . . Words are powerless to describe the almost ecstatic delight with which they enter the theatre and the woeful dejection and grief with which they leave it when the show is over. The reason for this is, that they are yearning to learn from the screen something Good and Noble, whereas . . . etc., etc."

Mr. Ratura is a reformer. His language may sound somewhat mystical, but his stand does not materially differ from that taken by reformers, sincere or otherwise, in all countries.

He assumes that moving pictures, as a popular amusement, are intended to inculcate in the minds of the people the prevalent conception of morality. He claims that their main function is to instruct and educate—providing, of course, that this dissemination of knowledge does not swerve from the accepted local standards of morality or prejudice.

Mr. Ratura emphasizes the fact that India is not a film producing country, implying, naturally, an assumption of higher morality on the part of his people.

"The screen was meant to serve noble ends," says Mr. Ratura.

Very likely. So was Christianity, Mohammedanism, Buddhism; so was imperialism, so were the trusts—even militarism was meant to serve what we understand as noble ends.

It depends on what side of the fence one happens to be.

The Noble and the Good of Mr. Ratura might be the Evil and the Base of the followers of Lenine, and simply bally rot to the reforming Englishman.

Despite the constant "spiritual shocks," the Indian writer admits that his countrymen keep patronizing the theatres where American moving pictures are shown, and the statistics prove that in larger numbers than ever.

This is the case in every other civilized country.

Why?

Because the East Indian, like all human beings, goes to the theatre yearning, not to be uplifted, as we say in these parts, but to be amused.

And there are certain things that are a source of entertainment everywhere.

Pretty girls, handsome men, good acting, hair-raising "stunts," impressive settings, good photography, etc.

The American photoplay is today the chief exponent of all these attributes.

As for plots and stories, the beauty of the screen lies in that it turns every spectator into an author. The same picture has a meaning for the truck-driver and another for the lawyer.

Mr. Ratura's theory on the Evil and the Good is entitled to respectful hearing, but the East Indian exhibitor, in intimate touch with his patron, probably thinks along the lines of the Mexican renter, who, when told by a New York exporter that a certain film had wonderful lighting effects, remarked—

"Very interesting, but . . . how about box-office effects?"

For as long as the screen remains a popular form of amusement, its moral or immoral tendencies will run parallel and head to head with the mental trend of the people. It can neither overstep these bounds nor lag behind.

French trade papers are publishing extensive interviews with Fox, Sheehan and Carlos, whose plans are at present the most important subject of discussion in Paris film circles. This new enterprise in France will probably have decisive effect on the future activities of the company.

QUEER CENSORSHIP REGULATION FAILS TO PASS IN PORTO RICO

Proposed Measure Would Have Allowed Uncensored Films but Would Have Imposed Box-Office Penalty

San Juan, P. R., June 4.—The most peculiar censorship measure over moving picture films probably so far originated in any legislative body died a natural death in the Senate on Saturday, when action on the proposed bill was postponed indefinitely.

The bill proposed to establish a negative censorship of films by obliging the proprietors of picture houses who exhibit pictures "not" censored by the "Insular Board of Cinematographic Censorship" to advertise this fact and that where such uncensored films were exhibited minors under 21 years of age would be refused admittance.

When the bill came up for discussion on Saturday, Senator Tous Coto, who introduced the measure, stated that the intention was to establish a partial censorship over moving pictures for the protection of children. The senator referred to the fact that in Caguas a number of children had formed a band in imitation of the exploits of "Raffles" and had gone so far as to rob the subscription boxes in the church.

Senator Inglesias did not think that such action had been due to the moving pictures.

Senator Tous Soto: "This question of the movies is more serious than is generally supposed. The impression they cause on the undeveloped minds of young people expresses itself in many different forms."

Senator Abril: "According to that, then, if a bad picture makes a child go wrong, good pictures should make them good."

He moved that action on the measure be postponed, which was agreed to.

The bill, in part, provided that:

"No owner or manager of cinematographic shows shall admit persons under 21 years of age in any place where pictures or films uncensored by the "Insular Board of Cinematographic Censorship" are shown, nor shall he exhibit uncensored films unless he shall previously post in a conspicuous place, or on the outside of the building where the exhibition is given, a sign which in letters at least one foot high shall read "Uncensored films (or pictures) exhibited. Admission of minors, under 21 years of age, prohibited by law."

"That the Insular Board of Cinematographic Censorship shall be composed of the Commissioner of Education or of any of his department whom he may delegate, who shall be chairman ex-officio, and of two persons not interested in cinematographic enterprises to be designed by the Governor of Porto Rico, with the advice and consent of the Senate. The members of said board shall receive a per diem of two dollars ($2) of each session which they actually attend for the purpose of witnessing the exhibition of films submitted to their censure.

"That every person submitting a film for censure shall pay, in internal revenue stamps, a fee of two (2) cents for each foot. The internal revenue stamps shall be affixed to and canceled on the original permit to be filed by the Insular Board of Censorship.

"That the board shall disapprove any picture or film immoral in substance or form or which tends to awaken low or perverse instinct in children or youths; or which exalts vice or crime; or which in any way attenuate their gravity; or which tends to weaken the sentiments of virtue, justice, honor and patriotism, charity and temperance."

Another peculiar feature of the measure was that it should only be in operation until May 30, 1921.

GARRETT'S TRIP ABROAD HAS HIDDEN MEANING

The announcement that Sidney Garrett, president of the J. Frank Brockliss Company, will sail from New York the latter part of this month for a nine weeks' trip abroad precedes, it is understood, a statement from the Brockliss company which will have a vital bearing upon the future relations of American producers with foreign distributors.

This statement is not expected to be given out until Mr. Garrett's return, although it is rumored upon good authority that the contracts and agreements dealing with this latest development of the Brockliss company's rapidly expanding business have all been prepared and are simply awaiting Mr. Garrett's approval at the London office of the organization of which he is at the head.

"It would be premature," said Mr. Garrett in commenting upon his forthcoming trip to Europe, "to discuss our plans. Sufficient to say that they will make for bigger and better pictures, not only for the European market, but for the American exhibitor as well.

"Our new plans will make possible the production of pictures of only special magnitude and appeal; such, for instance, as Stewart Edward White's famous novel, 'The Westerners,' which has just been completed by Benj. B. Hampton, of Great Authors' Pictures, Inc.

"We have added another author to our list who provides a different type of picture—the mystery story of which, it is generally conceded, he is today the world's foremost writer. His productions made with his personal co-operation will feature a star who has established for herself a large following abroad."

Mr. Garrett stated that he will leave New York the latter part of June, and will visit England, France, Spain, Italy, Norway and Sweden. He will spend the greater part of his time in the offices of the Brockliss company in London, and in those of the Mundus Film Company in Paris, with which organization he is affiliated as the American executive.

In addition to the special productions mentioned by Mr. Garrett, the Brockliss Company at the present time is handling the Zane Grey productions, the Four-Star attractions, being directed by George Irving from the famous plays of Augustus Thomas and starring Leah Baird; the Jack London series, the first of which is now in the course of production, and the special picture, "Virtuous Men," in which E. K. Lincoln is featured.

The fact that the stories of the famous authors being handled by the Brockliss Company are known throughout the world, whereas frequently the screen figures of this country are sometimes totally unknown in certain sections of the world, leads Mr. Garrett to believe that his new plan of operation will establish a demand for American films abroad.

During the past week Mr. Garrett announced that he has disposed of the rights to Mack Swain's comedies, being produced by William L. Sherrill, of the Frohman Amusement Company, for England.

FUTURE OF BRITISH FILMS BEING DISCUSSED IN INDIA

Ardent Booster in Big Daily Newspaper Admits They "Have a Long Way to Go"—Picture Trade Generally Seems Lively

By S. B. BANERJEA.

(Calcutta Correspondent, 11 Kasi Nath Bose Lane, Simla P. O. Calcutta.)

In a recent issue of The Statesman, an Anglo-Indian daily of Calcutta, an anonymous writer has an article on the future of the film in India, in which he boosts films of British manufacture, but readily admits that the British producer has yet "a long way to go before he can hope seriously to challenge his competitors across the Atlantic." He next refers to the continuous shows in the cities and large towns of England and America and observes that these will not pay in Calcutta or Bombay, as there is not "a large enough population of amusement seekers" to support the same. Herein I do not agree with him. If he means by "large enough population" Europeans only, his statement is quite correct; but if he includes Indians as well, I do not agree with him. What I say is: So far nobody —not even Madan—has tried to give a continuous show at his theatre. Let somebody arrange to give such a show and see whether it pays or not, before we shall be justified in calling continuous shows failures. Cinema theatres here mostly go in for "society" and problem plays, which Indians do not understand. A play like "Tarzan of the Apes" or "A Daughter of the Gods" requires no explanation and is easy to follow. But "The Cobweb" or "Big Money," for instance, will not appeal to the average Indian audience. Naturally any theatre that will arrange to screen films like these continuously is bound to lose money. In short, the success of films here depends on their character only. Boost, one may, British films to his or her heart's content, but there is no denying that it will take a very long time before these will be able to compete with American films successfully.

"ALL-INDIAN KINEMA DAY" CELEBRATES ALLIES' VICTORY.

I am glad to report that J. F. Madan, our Kinema King, has hit upon the happy idea of holding an All-Indian Kinema Day on May 7, the receipts at all shows given on that day to be given to the Imperial Indian Relief Fund. The Kinema Day has been inaugurated "as a practical expression of the gratitude of the Kinema showmen industry as a whole at the successful termination of the war and to show the trade's loyalty to the King Emperor." Some days ago, Mr. Madan requested the various kinema theatre owners in India and Burma to express their gratitude to their rulers in the way suggested above, and they all have readily agreed to observe the "Day" in a fitting manner. The entire receipts, without any deductions whatever, will be handed over to Lord Chelmsford, the Viceroy of India. I have no doubt a goodly sum will be realized on May 7. Madan Sahebki jay!

MISS BROMLEY'S CRITICISM DRAWS AN ANSWER.

I have read Miss Constance Bromley's letter in your issue, dated March 22, with amusement. I do not agree with her statement that there is "too much competition in India." In my opinion, there is room for hundreds of theatres in this country. But, of course, if one goes in for rubbish films, no theatre will pay. I agree with her that exhibitors who want first runs must also be renters. But the films to be rented should be of the kind that will appeal to the thousands and not to the few. It must not be forgotten that the European population of India is very small and one cannot do without "native" patronage. Miss Bromley next refers to Metro contracts, which she says are the standby of her theatre, and gives some information about the six o'clock shows in India. She then says that I describe all British films as of no particular merit. I should like to tell her and other European managers that I shall not fail to give candid expression to my views without any hesitation whatever. My readers will find in the same issue in which Miss Bromley's letter has appeared that I have praised certain British films because these deserved praise. Miss Bromley thinks that I have probably never been out of Bengal and I cannot know "England's scenery," &c. It will be news to her that I have travelled extensively, and some of my books have been published in England —one of them by the famous firm of Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co., at their expense. This book had the honor of a very favorable column review in the London "Times." I shall not say more about myself, as some nervous people may then go into fits. Now about the "dhoti." Miss Bromley tells her readers that it is "a thin cloth draped about the Bengali's legs." Prodigious! The Madrasi, the Bhattia, the Hindustani—in fact, all Inrians, barring Mussulmans, the Sikhs, and certain other communities, wear dhoties. Why then say the "Bengali's legs?" Then, the dhoti is not draped about the legs, but it covers the body from the waist down to the ankles and, in a hot place like India, is a very convenient dress. This is an admitted fact. Miss Bromley next says, "In fact most educated Bengalis and those who have traveled at all adopt European dress entirely." This is not a fact. It is the "Europe-returned" Indians only who put on European dress entirely. A number of non-"Europe-returned" do put on European dress, but they do so for the sake of business or pleasure, and put on dhoti in their houses. Miss Bromley is quite right in excluding dhoti-wearing people, because it is her employer's theatre and she is at liberty to run it as they wish. I am pleased to know that she can do without "native" patronage. Why does she have a four-anna seat then? Why does she advertise in the "The Bengalee," a native paper, then? She concludes thus: "There are plenty of native theatres where one can sit on the floor," &c. I should like to know the name of even one such theatre in Calcutta. Don't, pray, make childish statements. But, enough. I would not have written so much were it not for the fact that my readers are mainly Americans, who know little or nothing about Indian conditions, and they do require enlightenment from one who knows India from the inside.

OBJECTIONS GROWING TO SO-CALLED "SEAMY" PICTURES.

The opinion against the screening of "seamy" pictures is growing. Here is the opinion of the "Hindu Patriot," the oldest Anglo-Bengali paper of Bengal: "Without being puritans, we are distinctly of opinion that the cinema is doing more harm than good. The filming of standard plays by well-known authors has an educative value all its own; but can the most ardent supporter of bioscope films, as these are exhibited today, claim the same thing in respect of pictures showing the seamy side of Western social life, which can only debase and demoralize? We repeat we are not puritans, but there is amusement and amusement, and we are distinctly of opinion that many of the motion pictures are, as we have said, not only debasing, but also denationalizing." The Honorable Mr. Phelps, of Calcutta, said very much the same thing in the Bengal Legislative Council the other day. The remedy lies in the hands of cinema theatre owners. If they will not apply the proper "medicine," the Government will surely interefere at no distant date.

The "Capital," the organ of the European mercantile community, delivers itself thus: "I myself have often raised my voice in this column against objectional films, which are being constantly exhibited in the local picture houses. I am not surprised now that I have failed to get a hearing. When even a film censor is like unto a pelican in the wilderness it is no wonder that a mere journalist is like a sparrow alive on the house top. The educative value of the bioscope was proved to demonstration in the war propaganda conducted by the Bengal Publicity Board. The pity of it is that the propaganda was started too late, but that was the fault of the inscrutable Olympians of Simla, who would never have awakened to the use of it but for Sir Thomas Holland." Comments on the above are superfluous.

I have received an interesting letter from the Madras Wellington Cinema people, in which they have informed me that they do read their copy of the "Moving Picture World" carefully and profit by it. Many thanks for this appreciation. I would request them to introduce our paper among their Madras and Bombay friends and can assure them they they too will be equally benefited.

In this connection, I beg to report that the case in which Rustomji Doradji, proprietor of the Wellington Cinema, was committed to the Madras High Court Sessions on charges of cheating and forgery has ended in his being acquitted honorably. After the judge's summing up, the jury returned a unanimous verdict of "not guilty" on all counts, adding a rider to the verdict to the following effect: "We are unanimously of opinion that this case should never have been brought in the criminal court." My congrats!

I understand that Mr. Madan has bought the Rink Theatre in Darjeeling and has been making the necessary repairs. His idea is to pull down this theatre and erect an up-to-date building as early as circumstances will permit. He has opened his show under excellent auspices. I wish him all success.

At his Picture Palace Mr. Madan has screened "The Combat," "The Lone Wolf" and "The Easiest Way." At the Kidderpore Cinema he has shown "Wamba" and several other films already screened at one or other of his Calcutta theatres. At his Albion Theatre, "The Bull's Eye" is being shown to crowds. It will be followed by "The House of Hate." At the Ripon we have seen "Middle Man," "The Guilty Path," "Psyche" and "The Unknown Woman." At the Cornwallis, "Deception," "A Little Patriot."

I was amused to read the following paragraph in a recent issue of the "Empress," a fortnightly paper published in Calcutta: "Owing to difficulty in securing really good comics, this house is to show instead with each programme two parts, complete in themselves, of a first-rate serial. "The Perils of Our First (Girl ?) Reporters" will run through eight weeks starting from the 12th." "Difficulty in securing really good comics"—excellent! What is the matter with Fatty, Luke, West, Chaplin, and others? Have they suddenly taken to "tragedy?" Oh! Oh!!

The same paper further tells us: "Mr. Arnold, now enthusiastic manager at the Bijou, has many big stars on his list of coming productions." This news is relishing.

UNIVERSAL Recticon

RECTIFIES and CONVERTS

THIS new name "Recticon", coined from the words rectify and convert, has been assigned to the products which we will soon be able to supply in large quantities.

To more clearly "couple-up" the name with the functions performed by the machines, and make it most suggestive of the type of service rendered, the name has been incorporated in the "world" design at the left, which will be the universal trade-mark for all our products.

The "Recticon" is designed on an entirely new principle. It operates mechanically, converting Alternating to Direct Current or Direct to Alternating Current—and rectifies the current to the desired voltage and amperage.

This important invention will insure high-efficiency service, and is much more compact, simple, fool-proof, and less costly than present types of equipment.

If you will send us your name and address, we will see that literature describing the "Recticon" is mailed you as soon as completed. Watch this publication for future developments.

An Oplex Sign Will Always Draw the Crowd

One of the publicity problems of the moving picture theatre is to reach its public quickly, to "grab them off the street." With a bill that is constantly changing, the job is to shout the offering to the crowd with maximum force both day and night.

That is why some of the most successful houses are using Oplex Signs—raised, white letters on a dark background—particularly the interchangeable Oplex Signs in which the reading can be changed in a few minutes by simply taking out one set of letters and putting in another set.

No other sign can be changed so easily, no other sign gives the same forceful day and night effect.

We shall be glad to tell you all about Oplex Signs and send you a sketch showing how your sign will look.

An Announcement

OUR ACTIVITIES for the past year have been nearly 100 per cent. devoted to war production of vital importance to the government, compelling us to discontinue regular manufacture in practically all of our lines.

The cessation of hostilities has now enabled us to begin the readjustment to a peace production basis. While this adjustment must be gradual, we are pressing it with all possible speed in order to satisfy the requirements of our normal trade at an early date.

We appreciate the patience and understanding with which our patrons have reacted to the situation and trust they may continue to exercise such consideration until our manufacturing facilities are once more on a pre-war footing.

NOT EGOTISM

BUT CONFIDENCE IN OUR PRODUCT PROMPTS US TO WRITE THE FOLLOWING ADVERTISEMENT

If you are undecided in the choice of your next Projector, why not solve the question through a source entirely apart from the Manufacturer or Distributor?

Why not do the following?

FIRST Select the best mechanical engineer in your community; take him wherever a Simplex is available; ask him to examine its material, construction and principle.

AND THEN Go to any Theatre using Simplex (it don't matter whether it's the finest on Broadway or the little village opera house). Find out why Simplex was selected—how it works—the cost of its maintenance.

AND THEN Find out why Griffith, DeMille, Ince and other producers choose only Simplex for their stellar productions.

AND THEN Inquire throughout your neighborhood how many Simplexes have ever been replaced.

AND THEN

WE'RE QUITE CONFIDENT THAT THE RESULTS OF YOUR PRIVATE INVESTIGATIONS WILL PROVE TO YOU THAT THE SIMPLEX IS THE BEST PROJECTION ROOM INVESTMENT.

EVOLUTION

Eighteen months ago I stopped PROGRAM RELEASES because I thought the Program had outlived its usefulness to distributors and producers, and was a hindrance to exhibitors.

Last November I closed out my BRANCH EXCHANGES.

The system of distribution through a chain of exchanges scattered throughout the United States, owned and managed by a New York or Chicago concern, is unavoidably and inherently WASTEFUL.

One company reports an expenditure for film DISTRIBUTION in 1918 of approximately FOUR MILLION DOLLARS.

If that company had thirty branches the average operating cost was $133,000.00 per branch, or about $2,500.00 weekly for each exchange, large and small.

Suppose each of these branch exchanges had been owned by its branch manager and a few of his assistants; suppose they had had for distribution the same stock of films.

Would the INCOME have been less?

Would the operating EXPENSE have been as great?

The answers are clear and point but one way.

The TREND OF DISTRIBUTION is toward the exchange OWNED either partly or wholly by those actively in charge. This rule is working as surely as the law of gravity. There are such exchanges in existence, hardly known to the gentlemen who sit at the executive tables in New York, which are prosperous because they achieve the EFFICIENCY that comes through INTENSIVE work, INTIMATE knowledge of conditions and PERSONAL acquaintanceship with customers: and most important, because they have the great INCENTIVE that comes from the OWNERSHIP of one's business.

I want to form a close business intimacy with an independent exchange in every principal city in the United States.

Where necessary I will assist in establishing new exchanges with films or cash.

In either case I want to be associated with experienced film men who are STRAIGHT, ENERGETIC and COMPETENT — — —

Who will put every ounce of their ability into the running of the exchange — — —

Who can be depended upon to be SQUARE with exhibitors as well as themselves. — — —

I would prefer to deal with men who have sufficient means to partly finance the operating expenses of their exchange while it is being placed upon a sound footing, but PERSONAL QUALIFICATIONS are more important than finances.

I have it in mind to acquire an interest in such exchanges.

In writing, mark letters "Personal and Confidential."

PAULINE FREDERICK

IN

THE FEAR WOMAN

by Izola Forrester
Directed by John A. Barry

Black mists of dread rose between her eyes and the eyes of her lover—dread of the living past and the ghosts of yesterday. And fear that her love might perpetuate the terrible thing she had seen in the dead eyes of her father.

The story of how this fine sensitive passionate woman rose from the depths of that fear, fighting and conquering, makes a gripping drama peculiarly suited to the wide emotional range of Pauline Frederick.

"The Fear Woman" gives the great emotional star every opportunity to exert to the full her power, her beauty, her magnificent appeal.

LOUIS BENNISON

in

The ROAD CALLED STRAIGHT

by Wilson Bayley Directed by Ira M. Lowry

These are the days when Americans want true American entertainment.

They want stories filled with the strength and kindliness of our common life.

They want stories that handle the problems we meet every day, and handle them with splendid optimism.

They want American idealism and American punch.

No star of the screen has so epitomized the finest and most appealing qualities of genuine Americanism as Louis Bennison.

In no production has Louis Bennison had such full opportunity to demonstrate those qualities as in "The Road Called Straight" —the story of a strong, simple, kindly American who didn't know the meaning of a marriage of convenience.

That is why Louis Bennison, through "The Road Called Straight," has made a quicker conquest of the first run houses than any new star in the screen's history.

This theatre,

like every other beautiful picture house in the country, is the reflection of a personality. It is the fulfillment of somebody's dream, the fruit of somebody's imagination, a monument to the bigness and vision of a man.

These men of ideas, men who look beyond their four walls, are coming to United Artists Corporation and are renting a single picture for their houses. They are taking this picture because its quality is assured, because its box-office value is known, because it offers them a profitable investment, and because they can get this one sure attraction without obligating themselves in any way for the future.

These men who have built the real picture theatres of the country—men who think big and consequently are big—are giving United Artists Corporation their most sincere and substantial endorsement—a contract for its first release.

Released September 1st 1919

Known values

The keen theatre man knows that every attraction he runs must help him to realize on his gross investment. Not only must the particular attraction pay for itself, but the investment in his theatre must show its fair return.

He must deal in known values, therefore. He cannot afford the unknown or doubtful; he cannot risk his business on promises and speculations.

Among all the booking possibilities of the screen, none offer the security, the freedom from chance, the guarantee on investment that are offered in the product of United Artists Corporation.

The pictures of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith are as certain in their results as Government Bonds. And like the highest type of investment, they are absolutely free and unencumbered; each picture will be rented singly, purely on its individual merits and on a basis of its profit-possibilities to the Exhibitor.

Valuable exploitation stories.—Nothing like them in the other trade papers.

The most extensive news service of the entire trade press.—The World maintains more news correspondents than all the other trade journals combined.

A complete and thorough review section.—Where the exhibitor is given the service necessary to his success.

The most pertinent discussion of big trade policies.—The World carried exclusively for six weeks the discussion by exhibitors from Maine to Texas on the policy of First National on restricting its advertising to five trade journals.

Founded by J. P. CHALMERS 1907

FAIRBANKS FILM WILL OPEN CAPITOL

Largest Theatre in World, to Which Much Mystery Attaches, Will Feature Smiling Star

THE announcement is made this week that the largest theatre in the world will open its doors with United Artists' Corporation's big new Douglas Fairbanks picture which is now in course of production.

It is expected that when the Capitol Theatre, which is situated at Broadway and Fifty-first street, New York, opens its doors early in the fall, it will be a revelation to the amusement world. So far, only one fact has been definitely known regarding the house—that it will have a larger seating capacity than any other theatre in the world. So much has been written regarding it, largely as a matter of speculation, that its opening will be a genuine event in the amusement life not only of the city but of the country.

United Artists' Corporation, therefore, has to its credit an unusually valuable booking, for the opening of the Capitol Theatre will carry with it a tremendous amount of publicity for the new Fairbanks picture.

Dallas Manager Gives Mothers-in-Law Publicity

A NOVEL stunt which attracted a good deal of attention to his theater was staged by Manager Lou Bissinger of the Washington Theater, Dallas, early in June, when he featured Bessie Barriscale in "Josselyn's Wife." He offered a season's pass to the theatre to the man who bought the first two tickets, while taking his mother-in-law to the show. When the box office opened there was a fair-sized gathering of young men with elderly women on their arms, proving that the mother-in-law joke so far as Dallas is concerned is passe. The first mother-in-law at the ticket window won the season pass, while Bissinger had to console the rest of those in line with a free ride to the show.

Association Has Booklet on Film Tax Collection

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is distributing among its members a pamphlet issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue relating to the collection of taxes on motion picture films.

The pamphlet comprises sixteen pages, including a two-page index which will serve as a ready reference to every one connected with the industry and concerned with the payment of collection of this tax.

Among the subjects listed in the table of contents are Imposition of Tax, Persons Liable, Return and Payment of Tax, Credits and Refunds, Medium of Payment, Misrepresentation of Tax and Penalties.

The pamphlet will prove invaluable to the auditors and treasurers of the distributing companies and exchanges as well as to all individuals firms or corporations leasing motion pictures for exhibition purposes.

Minneapolis Film Man Sent to Penitentiary

WILLIAM H. SCHAFER, former president of the Schafer Film Company, and prominently identified in other moving picture enterprises in Minneapolis for some years, has been sentenced to an indeterminate term of from one to ten years in the Minnesota State penitentiary for grand larceny.

Mr. Schafer was also heavily interested in banking and mortgage companies of Minnesota as owner of the controlling interest in the Mortgage Security Company, which in turn controlled fourteen country banks. Mr. Schafer was accused of profiting about $700,000 as a result of his activities in the realm of high finance.

He is alleged to have obtained this money by the use of worthless notes which he sold to the fourteen banks that this company controlled. As a result of his manipulations the fourteen banks were closed as insolvent by the state bank examiner.

During the course of his trial Mr. Schafer suddenly decided to change his plea to guilty.

On $30 Per Capita Basis Texas Town Builds Theatre

EASTLAND, a Texas town of 3,000, is going to have a moving picture theatre which is worthy of a city ten times that size. This is the new Connellee Theatre which is being erected on Main street at a cost of $90,000. The structure is being rapidly brought to completion. Eastland is an oil town and is growing larger daily.

Dallas Operators Will Not Strike.

The Motion Picture Operators Union in Dallas will not strike, despite their vote to walk out in sympathy with the Building Trades Crafts. The tie-up of Dallas picture theatres was averted when the strike situation came to a head here during the second week of June in a pitched street battle between union and non-union electricians in which one man was shot and killed and many others wounded.

A revulsion of public opinion following the rioting brought the strike suddenly to an end. International representatives of various unions arrived in Dallas and ordered all crafts back to work. The strike order of the operators' union is consequently called off.

Exhibitors League Soon to Open Headquarters

THE new headquarters of the Miami Valley Exhibitors League in the Lindsey Building, Dayton, will be opened formally June 24. This announcement was made by John Seifert, president of the League, just prior to his departure for St. Louis, June 15. The suite which the league will occupy is composed of five rooms including an executive office. Over $1,000 has been spent in furnishings. Lounging chairs, several divans, and mahogany ash trays are installed in the rooms at the present time. A stenographer will be in attendance at all times. The desks of John Seifert, president, and A. F. Kinzeler, secretary, will be in a private office.

Bill to Repeal Blue Laws of Colorado Misses Fire

A BILL for the repeal of the Colorado Blue Laws passed the state legislature at the recent session but was defeated in the senate. A number of Colorado senators who voted against the repeal have told members of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club that they would have voted for this bill if it had exempted moving pictures and Sunday baseball only. At the next meeting of the Colorado legislature, an amended bill for the repeal of this law will be presentd and the prospects for its passing of both houses are regarded as excellent.

Pathe Delegates to Convention.

Pathe representatives at the St. Louis exhibitors' convention will be headed by Fred C. Quimby, director of exchanges. The Pathe feature stars will be represented by Frank Keenan, who releases his production through Pathe. The serial stars will be represented by Charles Hutchison.

Mr. Quimby, Mr. Keenan and Mr. Hutchison will remain in St. Louis during the convention. They will meet as many exhibitors as possible and discuss with them the various points of pictures that affect both producers and exhibitors.

Gates Returns to Universal.

Harvey Gates, prominent as the author of "The Wild Cat of Paris," Priscilla Dean's first big photoplay success, and "Hell Morgan's Girl," one of the most successful of Dorothy Phillip's productions, has returned to the Universal scenario staff after having written several productions for the Goldwyn company.

Moving Picture Ventures Incorporated in New York State Increase in Number

Albany, June 16.

THE number of moving picture concerns incorporating these days in this state is still on the increase, running second only to realty and candy concerns which are springing up by the dozens almost over night in the anticipation of an era of unprecedented prosperity.

The Motion Pictures Financing Underwriters Company of New York City, capitalized at $200,000, came into existence during the past week, the incorporators being Allen E. Moore, of Wall Street, S. S. Baker and F. H. Butehorn. The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, capitalized at a million dollars, also passed through the Secretary of State's office during the last few days, with Edith Mittelman, Grace M. Wilkinson and M. A. Harris being named as the incorporators. The Albemarle Theatre, of Brooklyn, was also incorporated at $400,000 by Max and Adolph Barr and John Manheimer.

Among the other moving picture and allied concerns incorporated by Secretary of State Hugo are the Burtis Grand Theatre Company, $10,000, with Abe Cohen, of Solvay, N. Y., and Fannie Bassin and Alice J. Lane, of Syracuse; the Canyon Pictures Corporation, $10,000. Charlotte Goldstein, Joseph M. Goldstein and Jacob Weinberg, of New York; Byoir and Hart, $50,000; Carl Byoir, C. S. Hart and L. R. Thomas; Maritime Pictures Corporation, $80,000, B. J. McManus, Elizabeth McCormick and William J. Bonnay; Readers Publishing Corporation, $100,000, F. P. Pace, Nathan Messinger and Augusta Birenbach; Attractions Distributing Corporation, with Henry Herzbrun, S. H. Kaufman and Leo N. Haiblum; Allen Enterprise, $3,000, with C. A., V. M. and E. D. Turner; Wilner-Romberg Corporation, $15,000, with Max R. Wilner, Sigmund Romberg and William I. Sorovitch; Lyon Comedies, $1,000, Alvine W. Lyon, Edwin W. Lyon and E. H. Mayer, and the Carlyle Blackwell Productions, with Carlyle Blackwell, D. I. Walsh and H. B. Rosen GRANT.

Parsons to Make Fewer and Funnier Pictures

THE National Film Corporation of America announces from its Hollywood Studios that "Smiling Bill" Parsons will make fewer and funnier Capitol Comedies during the coming year. Instead of twenty-six "Smiling Bill" comedies, which are distributed by Goldwyn, only thirteen will be produced. This will enable Mr. Parsons to devote more time to the productions in which he appears.

Despite the curtailment of "Smiling Bill" pictures, the number of Capitol Comedies to be released will remain the same as last year; that is, twenty-six. Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven will alternate with "Smiling Bill" in bi-weekly releases.

Carlyle Blackwell Forms Own Producing Company

AMONG the new motion picture incorporations listed at Albany during the past week is Carlyle Blackwell Productions, Inc. The incorporators, as mentioned in the letter from our Albany correspondent, are Carlyle Blackwell, H. B. Rosen, and D. I. Walsh.

Carlyle Blackwell's service under the banner of World Films ended last March. It is possible that his new productions may be given to the public via the state rights medium.

No director has been named as yet for the pictures. The schedule calls for four features a year.

Clark Irvine Joins Goldwyn.

Clark Irvine has joined the publicity department at the Goldwyn Studios with all the enthusiasm of a man not long out of the Navy. Previous to his enlistment in the Service he contributed "Doings at Los Angeles" to the Moving Picture World for three years and ceased that work to launch "The Screamer," a publication sponsored by the Scream Club, an organization of publicity men on the Coast. He was mustered out of service after having been promoted four times in eighteen months, finally attaining the rank of Chief Yeoman.

R. O. Proctor Leaves for Exhibitors' Convention

RALPH O. PROCTOR, assistant general manager of United Artists Corporation, leaves for St. Louis this week and will be there during the national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, which is to be held June 25 to 28. Mr. Proctor will make his headquarters at the Hotel Statler.

One of the chief purposes of Mr. Proctor's visit to St. Louis is to introduce Harry D. Buckley, recently appointed sales manager of the United Artists' Kansas City distributing depot, to the exhibitors of the Kansas City territory, who will be present at the convention.

Mr. Proctor, since his affiliation with United Artists Corporation, has been in New York almost continuously and his trip to St. Louis will give him the opportunity of meeting a great many exhibitor friends he has not seen in some months.

Manager of Power Company Starts on European Trip

WILL C. SMITH, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., sailed for Europe on Monday, June 16. Mr. Smith was attended to the pier by numerous friends, among them Edward Earl, president of the company, Mr. Bell the treasurer, Mr. Uhlemann, works manager, Mr. Cassard, assistant general manager, Mr. Bird and Mr. Abrams.

Mr. Smith goes abroad on business matters which will take him to England and various parts of the continent. While this is a business trip it is anticipated that he will obtain relaxation which long and steady application to business entitle him to. His many friends, both social and business, wish him the best of success. It is expected that he will be gone for some time.

Pearson Joins Pathe as Feature Sales Manager

ELMER R. PEARSON, formerly with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has joined Pathe Exchange, Inc., as feature sales manager, having taken up his duties in the home office.

Previous to his connection with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Mr. Pearson was sales manager for Essanay and George Kleine; branch manager for Vitagraph in Kansas City; branch manager for World, Pathe and General in Omaha. Most of these branches were established by Mr. Pearson.

Mr. Pearson is not a new man with the Pathe organization. He established the Pathe branch office in Omaha and conducted it as manager for several years.

Six Hundred Banqueters at Waldorf Applaud Cohen, Berman and O'Reilly

Representative Men of Industry Pay Tribute to Trio Which Led Forces at Albany in the Successful Fight for Sunday Opening — Toastmaster James J. Walker Keeps Diners in Good Humor—Brady, Dowling, Copeland, McInerney, Brisbane and Cohen Speak.

By William J. Reilly

IT happened. It happened at the Waldorf-Astoria on Wednesday evening, June 18. And it happened so magnificently and so beautifully that not one of the biggest crowd which ever attended a similar motion picture function is likely to forget it as long as memory remain humanly seated.

"It" was the banquet tendered to the three heroes of the war for open Sunday for the photoplay houses of New York State. "It" was the tribute paid to the "peak of the wedge" for its drive into the great work of legalizing the Sabbath exhibition of pictures throughout the nation. "It" was unadulterated honor, tendered at the Waldorf-Astoria banquet to the triumvirate, Sydney S. Cohen, Charles L. O'Reilly, and Samuel I. Berman for their clean and ceaseless labor in organizing New York State's exhibitors and pushing to its signing by Governor Smith the bill making the Sunday showing of pictures lawful in the Empire State.

Brisbane's Remarkable Tribute.

The honor, the thanks, the gratitude were bestowed on the three with a lavish hand, which did not forget to present three beautiful platinum watches. Arthur Brisbane, the distinguished newspaper man, in his speech made a profound impression on the Waldorf-Astoria gathering when he asked the question: "What is the greatest moving picture in the world? And who is its manager?" Proceeding to answer the question himself, Mr. Brisbane said: "The greatest motion picture in all the world is the sun rising in the brilliant morning and setting in the purple evening; the moon growing golden in the sky; the ocean beating on the shore; the clouds shifting above the mountain peaks; the stars shining in the heavens. And the Creator of the universe is the manager of this picture, and He does not close the show on Sunday."

No more precious tribute could have been paid to the work of the three men whose efforts were responsible for the maintenance of this natural law of the Greatest Manager in the state of New York.

And if such a thing were possible, the committee on arrangements, headed by the indefatigable William Fox, would have marshaled all the elements of this great show of Nature's and had them performing their wonderful parts in the main ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria for the benefit of the guests of honor.

As it was, the committee marshaled beauty, wit, wine, music, and even Louis Sherry cigarettes. The ballroom presented a radiant aspect. The double tier of boxes, draped with American flags, looked down upon the tables-for-eight, whose vari-colored rambler roses and whose oak leaves heightened the color of the scene. The dais for the guests of honor eclipsed any other part of the dining hall, with its banks of roses and its array of men whose talents enable them to visit often the banks of finance.

"The Ladies" Added Beauty.

The presence of "the ladies" was another feature of the affair, as heretofore the majority of such occasions of moving picture state have been for the delectation of the "stag" element only. And the presence of beautifully garbed women gave an added touch of dignity and grace to the whole evening.

About everybody of note in the motion picture industry was present. For this affair, conceived among the exhibitors of Brooklyn, was a tribute not only from the showmen, but from producers, distributors—in fact, from the whole industry. The list of those present mounted over six hundred, including not only those directly interested in the moving picture business, but a host of men big in public life. Three New York City commissioners, Police Commissioner Enright, Fire Commissioner Drennan, and Health Commissioner Copeland gave their sanction to the clean fight for Sunday pictures by their presence. Judges Julius M. Mayer

Charles L. O'Reilly
Strong organizer of League—"They worked after the plan of General O'Reilly."

Sydney S. Cohen.
President New York State Exhibitors' League—"The man who put 'em up to it all."

Samuel I. Berman.
Secretary New York State Exhibitors' League—"Chaotic until the great Berman swept up-state."

and Victor J. Dowling, Arthur Brisbane, Martin T. Manton, John J. McInerney, of Rochester, and Oscar A. Price were among those seated on the dais as guests of honor. Governor Smith was unable to be present, as was also the Hon. Aaron J. Levy.

"Jimmie" Walker, the Inimitable.

And in the center of that dais, flanked on the one side by Messrs. Cohen and O'Reilly and on the other by Mr. Berman, sat the inimitable toastmaster, the Honorable, the Witty, the Clever "Jimmie" Walker, friend of the moving picture, whom everyone forgot was a dignified State Senator, but whom everyone applauded and whom many hailed as "our next Governor." John J. McInerney, in his speech, said that "Jimmie Walker was very often too witty for his own good." But Jimmie was not considering his own good at the Waldorf banquet: he was bent on entertaining and pleasing the gathering and he succeeded with a mighty vengeance. Perhaps that is why Jimmie Walker reminded Mr. McInerney of the famous Johnnie Walker.

With all the grace of a finished actor and with a whole lot of skill all his own, Senator Walker introduced his speakers, subdued them when they made remarks about him, and then made them, together with his bigger audience, feel good.

"During my ten years' experience at Albany," said "Jimmie," "I have seen a lot of agents and representatives of various interests, even though I did not see the bird with the half million from the traction interests. But in all that time I have never seen three men with a simpler story, with stronger conviction, or of a better breed that these three boys, Cohen, Berman, and O'Reilly, who came, saw—and you know how they conquered.

"It was mighty hard on a bunch of $1,500-a-year legislators to sit and listen about these movie stars who get $1,000,000 a year for making love to a beautiful girl. But taking as a cue one of the pictures which even I see advertised on Broadway, these three men went 'Upstairs and Down,' in and out of the corridors at Albany until they got what they wanted."

Judge Victor A. Dowling, of the Appellate Court, the first speaker, took a broad, legal point of view in adding his praise to the work of the triumvirate.

Judge Dowling Praises Methods.

"I want to congratulate you on the propriety of your methods in getting legalized a thing which formerly did not have the sanction of state law. The whole tendency today is toward the evasion of the law, and that, I might say, is responsible for prohibition.

"You took a great step forward," Judge Dowling said with emphasis, "when you placed the justice of your cause before the state legislature. You had a great support behind you in the fact that the theatrical and moving picture interests of the country had done so much during the war to uphold the work of the Government. No other industries gave so much of their time and work to the winning of the war as those of the theatre and the motion picture.

"The thought of happy and contented men and women enjoying recreation in the moving picture on Sunday after the toil of the week is the strongest tribute that can be paid to these three men. The fact that they were working for the benefit of the community is the biggest thing in their whole campaign."

Copeland Strong for Trio and Screen.

Health Commissioner Royal S. Copeland took still another angle from which to thank the Cohen-Berman-O'Reilly trio for their work for the screen. "During the epidemic of influenza last fall," said Dr. Copeland, "these three men came to me and said, 'We want to help you in your campaign against this disease. Our screens and those of every exhibitor in the city are yours.' And we used those screens for propaganda which enabled the people better to combat the plague.

"I kept the theatres open in spite of the order from Washington to close them, because I felt that our finely ventilated moving picture houses were far better than the crowded tenements, and because I had faith in the power of the picture entertainment to keep up public morale.

"So when the time came for me to give my support to the legalizing of picture exhibitions on Sunday, I gave it gladly."

Gaynor a Friend of the Pictures.

Dr. Copeland commented with forceful favor on the fact that the menu contained a picture of the late Mayor Gaynor, who as judge upon the bench and later as chief magistrate of the city maintained an open attitude toward the moving picture. The inscription under the picture read, "William J. Gaynor—Who in his interpretation of the Law, tempered Justice with common sense. He made it possible for Sunday to be a day of recreation as well as one in

ELSIE JANIS BECOMES SELZNICK STAR

Musical Comedy and Vaudeville Star Who Entertained Doughboys on the Firing Line Signs Contract with Myron Selznick for Pictures to Be Marketed by Select

ELSIE JANIS has signed a contract with Myron Selznick to appear in Selznick Pictures to be distributed through Select. Her engagement is considered of great importance to both the producer and exhibitor because of the immense popularity Miss Janis attained through her valiant service in entertaining doughboys on the firing line.

Her repuation as an entertainer on the musical comedy and vaudeville stage would alone make her valuable as a screen acquisition, but within the past months she has made her way straight to the hearts of thousands of Uncle Sam's crusaders through her fearlessness and energy in entertaining tired soldiers right on the firing line. When a Janis picture is advertised in any American community there is sure to be an awakened interest in the heart of every soldier who is home again from foreign shores.

Won First Fame in Vaudeville.

Miss Janis is too well known to require more than a paragraph to recall her stage success. First as a vaudeville entertainer, where she impersonated, from childhood, stage celebrities of current vogue, and then as a featured player in musical comedy and reviews she made her name familiar to all classes of theatregoers. It was in "The Vanderbilt Cup" that she won her first success outside of vaudeville. Later she appeared under the management of Charles Dillingham as the star of "The Silver Slipper" and subsequently was featured in numerous "reviews" and spectacles.

Myron Selznick is of the opinion that in signing Miss Janis he has put across the "scoop of the year." He realizes her natural drawing power as a stage celebrity and intends, on the exhibitor's behalf, to capitalize the good-will soldiers hold toward the patriotic girl who volunteered her services and entertained without a penny of recompense all through the danger zone when our boys needed her talents to cheer them along on the way to victory.

Myron Selznick's Statement.

In announcing this new star Myron Selznick says: "I think no one will deny that Miss Janis is the greatest star acquisition to the screen in years. Not only has she won for herself a great reputation as an artist through her consistent successes on the stage, but she has won for herself a place even more important in the hearts of the soldiers of the American armies through them in the hearts of the American people.

"In order to reach the greatest number of people she has decided to appear in a limited number of big picture productions, and as she has given two years to her work in the battlefields it is only right that she should be able in this way to gain some measure of compensation."

Makes Fourth Selznick Star.

This makes four stars who have now been signed by Myron Selznick as president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, the others being Olive Thomas, Eugene O'Brien and Elaine Hammerstein. It is understood the intention is to add still more names to this list and that important announcements will be forthcoming withn a week or two. The Selznick Pictures Corporation has leaped to the front since it was organized the first of this year, and with its distribution through Select Pictures Corporation and its vigorous exploitation methods has created a widespread demand for its output.

Commenting upon the latest announcement of his son's activities, Lewis J. Selznick, president of the Select Pictures Corporation, says:

"I regard the acquisition of Elsie Janis by the Selznick Pictures Corporation as the biggest scoop in years. All over America, in Canada, and also in England and France there are literally millions of soldiers who will be enthusiastic boosters for the Elsie Janis pictures. Every exhibitor thus will have the active co-operation of thousands of salesmen, urging the public to patronize his theatre. It is the biggest opportunity for capacity business that has been offered for a long time."

Universal Sales Heads Hold Meeting.

A conference of Universal sales managers of the Middle Western and Eastern territory was held at the Statler Hotel in Cleveland on June 15. Joe Schnitzer, general sales manager of Universal and H. M. Bermann, general manager of the exchanges presided. The new selling policy of the company for the fall season was discussed as well as the new productions including the Stage Women's War Relief series. The salesmanagers who attended the meeting are F. S. Hopkins, of Buffalo; H. Stern, of Pittsburgh; W. D. Ward, of Detroit; E. J. Smith, of Cleveland; Louis Baum, of Cincinnati, O.,; J. L. Lesserman, of Chicago, and Art Schmidt, division manager.

One Exhibitor Uses $7,000 Advertising "Ghost" Picture

THE following letter was received by the World Film Corporation from James George, Manager of the Victoria Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., in reference to "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain:"

"I was the first exhibitor in eastern Pennsylvania to book 'The Ghost of Slumber Mountain,' playing it day and date with the Stanley Theatre of Philadelphia, which, I understand, used it as an added atraction for their anniversary week showings.

"I could not have afforded to have paid the price asked for the picture had I regarded it as merely 'a filler in,' but I featured it, advertising it widely in many novel ways, one of which was placing seven one-thousand dollar bills in a prominent store window, and freely offering one to each and every person who would prove that he had seen, in real life, the animals pictured on the screen.

"The publicity I gave the picture together with the uniqueness of the production helped me to do capacity business."

It will be located at State and West First streets and Mr. Pabst expects to have the house open by October 1.

NORTHWESTERN SHOWMEN REPORT GAINS

Prosperity Brought to Farmers by Good Crops Reflected in Box-Office Records of Exhibitors

EXHIBITORS from all portions of the Northwest are swarming into Minneapolis this month to arrange bookings for the summer season. All tell the same story of prosperous conditions and the promising outlook for a big crop—always one of the most significant factors in the success of the moving picture industry in the Northwest. The farmers are spending their money more freely than ever, and are among the staunchest patrons of the screen.

The general tendency among the exhibitors of Minnesota, the Dakotas, Wisconsin and Iowa is toward increased admission prices, although most of the showmen of this territory are inclined to wait until the summer is over before attempting to try out a regular advance. There is also a tendency to hold pictures over for longer runs in the smaller towns.

Fewer Theatres Closing.

Another interesting condition in the Northwest is that fewer exhibitors in the small towns are shutting down their theatres for the summer months than in previous years. Last year hundreds of houses were closed on account of the unfavorable condition produced by the war. The few exhibitors who have closed for the season this year were forced to do so as a result of the operation of the daylight saving law, which kept the farmers away from town working in their fields until late, taking advantage of the increased daylight, and also lured the town folk to outdoor sports rather than to the theatre.

The question of increased admissions is a conundrum to some exhibitors, who prefer to study the public state of mind before taking any action, while others see a great danger in making any further increases. Among the latter is Dan Chamberlain, of the American Amusement Company, operating a chain of theatres in Minneapolis, Faribault, Mankato, Minn., and Fargo, N. D., who says that "the exhibitor who continues to raise his prices is driving a certain element of his patronage to the legitimate stage."

Visitors in Minneapolis.

Among the Northwest exhibitors in town last week filled with optimism over the general outlook were: Sam Cornish, Strand at Fargo and Royal at Grand Forks, N. D.; Joe Ryan, Madison; W. C. Hanson, Lyric, Redfield, S. D.; Manager Abrahamson, Zelda, Duluth; Thomas Furniss, Rex and Lyric; Duluth; Manager Grull, Palace Operating Company, Grand Rapids, Wis.; H. P. Doderae, Alpha Theatre, Alpha, Mich.; Joe Roman, Rex, Virginia, Minn.; A. L. Hess, Yankton Theatre, Yankton, S. D.; McCarthy Bros., Aberdeen, S. D., Fargo and Grand Forks, N. D.; A. J. Kavanagh, Grand Forks and Jamestown, N. D.; R. C. Rice, Algona Opera House, Algona, Ia.

Dangerous to Raise Prices.

Discussing the general tendency among exhibitors of the territory toward increased prices Mr. Chamberlain said:

"Regarding the raising of prices I think the exhibitors are treading on thin ice when they commence wholesale advances without regard to the character of the pictures they are showing. I believe, however, that a rise in price is all right in the case of a big picture which really warrants it. But otherwise I am opposed to the continued increases, because I feel that it is undermining the moving picture industry.

"The great popularity of the movies was originally due to the fact that the people could get their entertainment cheaper than if they attended the legitimate stage performances. If the show the movie fan attended didn't please him, he figured he wasn't out much and it was cheap at that. But with prices going up with every film that comes along and war taxes clapped on, it's a different matter altogether. I feel that the time may come when the public as a whole may resent these increases and turn back to the legitimate stage. It is a noticeable fact that the business of the legitimate stage is picking up. The exhibitor is driving a certain element back to the legitimate with high prices, and apparently he does not realize it. I think this a point well worth the consideration of both exhibitors and distributors.

Bad Advice from Exchanges.

"'Raise your prices, raise your prices,' is the cry the exhibitor hears on every hand. It's in the air. The exchange manager calls the exhibitor to one side and says:

"'Why, there's Jones. He's getting 35 cents. Why don't you?'

"But that same exchange manager perhaps does not take pains to point out to you that Jones is operating a big first run theatre in a large community and is in a position to book all the big attractions first, which enables him to charge the higher price.

"Skating on Thin Ice."

"The film men who advocate a general increase in admission prices are helping to kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

"The working people are the real foundation of the success of the moving picture game today. For many of them it is their chief recreation. But with so little difference between the admission prices offered by the legitimate stage and the movies, many are turning back to the legitimate. The blame for this situation rests partly upon the exhibitor himself and partly upon the distributor. Exhibitors and distributors who are building for the future should watch out, for some of them may be unaware of the fact that they are treading on thin ice."

Ontario to Graduate Scale of Theatre License Fees

A RECENT change in the Theatres and Cinematographs Act of Ontario provides for a graduated scale of annual license fees for moving picture theatres in the smaller cities of the Province. Heretofore, theatres in towns of less than 1,500 population have been required to pay a provincial tax of $75 a year but the new regulations provide that the fee in each particular case is to be determined on its own merits. The tax will be based upon the actual local population, the seating capacity of the theatre and the number of days that the house is operated. In this way, the exhibitor in villages and other small centres will be assessed according to his investment. This move has been accepted with satisfaction by the whole moving picture business of Ontario.

In towns of more than 1,500 and less than 3,000 population, the license fee for each theatre will be $50 a year in future in place of $75. The annual tax for theatres in towns of 3,000 to 5,000 will be $75 a year until further notice.

Names New Appeal Fees.

It is also provided that the enforcement of the theatre act will be left to the direct supervision of T. W. McGarry, Provincial Treasurer, through his Theatre Inspection Department.

Definite announcement has also been made regarding a new scale of fees for appeals from the decision of the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors. The charge for consideration of an appeal by the Appeal Board will be $5 a reel for the first time. In case of a second appeal by an exchange, the fee will be $10 a reel. If a picture is appealed for a third time, the appeal board will charge $15 a reel for reconsideration. Thus, if an exchange carries through three different appeals on a condemned feature of five reels, the total charges will amount to $150.

W. A. BRADY RETURNS WITH BIG IDEAS

National Association's President Home from Abroad, Where He Studied Conditions in Picture Making— Proposes Organization of International Company

A CLOSER alliance between American and foreign film interests will result from William A. Brady's recent trip abroad, if his present determinations undergo no change. Accompanied by his wife (known professionally as Grace George) Mr. Brady arrived home last Sunday, having returned from England, via Halifax, on the Olympic, which also brought a large contingent of Canadian troops.

Lord Beaverbrook was a passenger on the Olympic and with him Mr. Brady extensively discussed the matter of international motion picture production and distribution. During the war Lord Beaverbrook was Minister of Public Information for England, also is a member of Parliament and of various commercial bodies that keep him in close touch with general public affairs.

American motion pictures, in the opinion of Lord Beaverbrook, through their wide distribution abroad provide commercial advertising of the best kind for the United States and in this belief the British Government joins. Consequently it is the intention of Englishmen actively to compete to the end that other than American scenes, customs and people may be shown upon the screens of the world.

For an International Company.

Mr. Brady, on the other hand, is of the belief that pictures will soon be produced abroad—indeed, that they are now being produced—of a nature and character to find favor over here. As a result of his convictions, based on discussions with producers and other business men in England, France and elsewhere, Mr. Brady proposes to organize here an international picture company which will handle only foreign films.

This company will be created for the purpose of opening the door to foreign producers and, according to Mr. Brady, will have the support of the English, French and Italian Governments. While in Paris Mr. Brady entered into a contract with the Film D'Art Company to make six pictures in France with American stars—in furtherance of his conviction that Europe, in the matter of moving pictures, is the land of opportunity.

While abroad, Mr. Brady made an exhaustive study of motion picture conditions, and as president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in this country, was consulted by representatives of the governments of England, France and Italy, regarding conditions here and in those countries.

Studied Picture Conditions.

"There will shortly be great strides in the building of motion picture theatres in England," says Mr. Brady. "Plans are now under way for the construction of theatres of the type of the Strand and Rivoli here, in almost every large city in England. Three in London will shortly be under way, one to be built by the Famous Players-Lasky British Company."

Mr. Brady found that the motion picture people in England and France realize they are away behind Americans in the matter of production. but a general effort will shortly be made by these countries and Italy to compete with American made pictures. At present fully seventy-five per cent. of the pictures shown in those countries are American products. Throughout the war France did practically no motion picture producing, and activity was also curtailed materially in other countries.

Want Americans Over There.

England, France and Italy all are eager that American motion picture stars come there and make pictures. They indicate that American scenes may be replaced by the Riveria, Holland and Belgium with locations of surpassing scenic and pictorial beauty.

There is a feeling in England among motion picture people, according to Mr. Brady, that their product is not getting a square deal in America. They feel it should receive the same distribution here, granted the quality is equal, that American films receives there, and they contend they will shortly produce pictures of that same excellent quality.

It would be wise, in Mr. Brady's opinion, for the motion picture men to give this matter serious and immediate consideration. He feels if there is to be no market for foreign film, it is not unlikely that an embargo will be placed on American pictures.

As an indication of the consideration now being given the motion picture by England, Mr. Brady states the English Government has afoot a plan to have their greatest men of letters write for the screen. It is proposed that Barrie, Hall Caine, and other famous writers, devote their attention to the production of material written expressly for the screen. And the English are trying to find their own Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin.

McKenzie Is to Direct Helen Holmes in Serial

IN line with their desire to make Helen Holmes the queen of the serial attractions, the S. L. K. Serial Corporation has secured the services of Donald McKenzie, well-known serial maker, to direct Helen Holmes in her next and what is expected to be her most thrilling serial. Donald McKenzie will be remembered by serial fans as the director of numerous Pathe serial successes, among which are "Perils of Pauline," "Shielding Shadow" and "The Seven Pearls."

The story selected by Mr. McKenzie and the executives of the S. L. K. corporation was secured after about 100 serial stories had been read by the scenario department of the company.

Further announcement as to the author and the story will be made when the production is started next week, as well as an announcement of the method of distribution in this country and abroad.

CLERGYMEN CHAMPION SUNDAY SHOWS

Leading Churches of Adrian Oppose W. C. T. U.'s Efforts to Stop Picture Entertainment on the Sabbath

MEMBERS of the W. C. T. U. who circulated petitions in Adrian, Mich., asking that picture theatres and all other places of amusement and recreation be closed on Sundays have encountered strong opposition not only from local theatre managers, but from two of the city's leading clergymen, who have championed the Sunday opening of picture theatres in a straight-from-the-shoulder manner.

Immediately after the petitions were placed in all churches by Mrs. Emeline Ashe, Adrian W. C. T. U. leader, the Rev. F. A. Perry, pastor of the Plymouth Church, announced from the pulpit that he would vote against any proposal to abolish motion pictures on Sunday. He said he would fight the effort both "privately and publicly."

"A Silk Stocking Movement."

"The movement to close the motion picture theatres on Sundays," he said, "is being pushed by silk stocking people who own automobiles. They do not need the screen for Sunday amusement, but they want to take away the only amusement of the poor man who cannot own an auto, but who with his family can find healthful red-blooded pleasure, education and real recreation in attending a motion picture theatre on the one day he is not called upon to toil."

The Rev. Perry said that he was not a promoter of Sunday motion picture theatres but that he believed that there was nothing better at the present time. "Take away the Sunday motion pictures," he added, "and you will find something really injurious springing up in its place.

The Rev. Fr. Miess, pastor of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, said:

Patrons Sign Petition.

"There is a certain class of people going to extremes in an attempt to control the habits of others, and I think it is time that the public awake to the fact and shake off the bonds of tyranny."

At the New Family Theatre where Sunday audiences have been drawn with recent First National Exhibitors' Circuit releases, Elwyn Simson, manager of the house, so pleased the Sabbath day patrons with his programs in spite of sweltering weather and intensive opposition on the part of the W. C. T. U. ranks, augmented by a majority of clergymen, that following the showing of "A Midnight Romance," the First National feature with Anita Stewart, more than 2,000 patrons halted in the foyer of the theatre to sign Mr. Simson's petition that Sunday motion pictures be continued.

In 1914, by a majority of 46 votes, the Adrian Theatres were permitted by the City Council to open Sunday and no attempt was ever made to close them until the present W. C. T. U. petitions.

Under the petitions which are being circulated, and to which a proposed ordinance is attached, any motion picture theatre exhibitor or the operator of any place of amusement or recreation where an admission is charged would be subject to a fine of $50 and ten days imprisonment.

Porto Rican Exhibitors Use Novel Exploitation Ideas for Pathe Serial

WHEN it comes to "putting over" a picture, the distributors and exhibitors of Porto Rico have nothing to learn from their American brothers, according to M. Ramirez-Torres, head of the Selection Film Service, Inc., of San Juan, and, until a month ago manager of the scenario department of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The photograph published elsewhere shows the manner in which Manager Marti and Proprietor Mediavilla, of the Cine Reel, of San Juan, exploited the Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland, in front of their house. The figures of the girl and the tiger were cut-outs from the 24-sheet stand and were set in a miniature jungle. Lobby displays of stills from the current episode and one and three-sheets completed the scheme.

Starts with Band at 5 A. M.

The Porto Rican idea of film exploitation is far-reaching. In a letter, Mr. Ramirez-Torres said:

"As early as five o'clock in the morning a band played through all the streets near the theatre, and I imagine many of those who wanted to sleep had few kindly thoughts of 'Tiger's Trail' or those who were seeking to advertise it. All the streets nearby were decorated with cut-out tiger faces. The big event of the morning was a parade in which the principal figures were cut-outs of the tiger and Ruth Roland from the 24-sheet. A man dressed in imitation of Miss Roland headed the parade, and the thing attracted huge crowds. Mr. Marti and Mr. Mediavilla, of the Cine Reel, gave two 'tandas,' or shows, that day and could not accommodate the people at either one."

Independent Film Men Join National Association

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, of Chicago, chairman of the membership committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, left on Friday for the Coast. It is Chairman Rothacker's purpose to confer with the producers in Los Angeles who are not directly identified with the activities of the producers' division of the National Association, with a view to securing their co-operation and support in the future.

Just before leaving for Los Angeles Mr. Rothacker sent in to Secretary Elliott the applications of several new members from Chicago, among them the application of Martin J. Quigley, publisher of the Exhibitors Herald and Motography, for membership in Class 5. Applications were also received from J. C. Friedman, of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, and Frank Zambreno, of the Unity Photoplays Company.

These are the first applications of independent film exchanges to be received by the National Association, indicating the intention of some of the prominent independent exchange managers to participate actively hereafter in the councils of the association. It is assumed other independent exchanges will take advantage of this opportunity, in view of the plan recently announced by the National Association to organize the film clubs and associations as an integral unit of its distributors' division, in which fourteen of the largest distributing corporations are now represented.

Parke to Direct Ruth Roland.

William Parke is again to direct pictures for release by Pathe. He has been engaged by Ruth Roland, Pathe serial star, to direct her in her new company, Ruth Roland Serials, Inc., and is to go to Los Angeles to begin work on her first personally produced serial for which she furnished the plot.

LOUIS BENNISON STARS IN CABOOSE

Hero of the Betzwood Production "The Road Called Straight" Once Combined the Profession of Acting and the Art of the Cowpuncher with Equal Success

By Edward Weitzel

SAID Louis Bennison, "If you ever come over to Philadelphia take a run out to my place. I keep two or three broncos out there, and you may throw a leg over one of them whenever you feel like it."

Said I, "Where will I land when he throws me over his head?"

"Oh, you can stick on to any of this bunch all right!" Bennison assured me. "They're not buckers; a baby could ride 'em."

"No doubt a baby could—if it was raised in the way you were," I retorted. "That's just like you fellows who are born on a cattle ranch and are given a set of spurs with your first pair of infant's bootees: You are taken from your cradle and strapped on to a saddle before you learn to walk and you expect a man who never rode a horse in his life to take to it as naturally as a third generation cowboy. If you've got a nice, well-trained Ford warranted not to buck, jump or back-fire and a chauffeur who has no desire to break the Philadelphia speed laws I'll take a few turns on 'The Road Called Straight' in that."

Bennison grinned at me across the table in the Lambs dining-room: "Do you really want to go as slow as that?" he asked.

"Young man," I replied, "when you are in Philadelphia do as the Phillies do."

Has Played Many Parts.

In the old days when we youngsters read our histories of the glorious West, in the seclusion of the haymow or the woodshed, what a corking dime novel the life of Louis Bennison would have made! Many of his adventures wouldn't have been possible then, of course; but the tricks of fate which led this well-groomed, pleasant-faced, quiet-mannered young actor from his early environment to membership in the Lambs could hardly have given any human being a more diversified route.

"If I'd been born on a sheep ranch it wouldn't seem quite so strange," the star of the Bentzwood productions admitted; "but cattle were my line before I felt the call to spout blank verse and dreamed of one day seeing my name in electric lights on Broadway."

"You have been a legit, then?"

"I've been everything and in all sorts of companies," was the reply. "I learned my profession from the ground up; started with a medicine show; traveled with rep companies in wagons and on foot. I've ridden on freight trains and slept in cabooses. One night I stood on the platform of a small station about ten miles from the town where the company I was with had gone to smash, wondering how I was going to get back home. I was dead broke and willing to do anything to earn some money. I had ridden on the platform of a blind baggage car thus far on my trip back to dad and a stack of flapjacks, but had been discovered and fired off.

Becomes Cowpuncher in Fact.

"As I stood there, feeling a bit discouraged, a cattle train pulled in and stopped. Before the wheels had ceased turning, the boss cowboy and his crew piled out of the caboose and started to run along side of the train, yelling and proding with their long poles to get the cattle that were down back on their feet. If this is not done the fallen cattle are apt to be trampled by the others. There were an unusual number of fallen steers, and the conductor, as soon as he received his train orders, started to curse and storm at the delay. The boss cowboy cussed back at him and then cussed his crew for not working faster. There was a pole on the platform, so I picked it up and started in to help. I punched and yelled with the best of them and when the train started I climbed aboard and ran along on the top of the cars to the caboose at the rear end. It was old work for me and no one paid the slightest attention to the new hand until I got inside the caboose. Then the boss cowboy noticed me. I still had the pole in my hand.

A Traveling Show Shop.

"The boss was an elderly man and didn't appear to have any too much of that jovial good humor that so many story writers always bestow on their cowpunchers.

"'Where the h——l did you come from?' he demanded. I explained and it didn't seem to satisfy him worth a cent until one of the other cowpunchers horned in with the remark:

"'Better hire him for the trip, Joe; he's hep to the job.' And Joe did."

"That cowboy was a good friend to you, wasn't he, Mr. Bennison?"

The ex-knight of the range laughed: "I'm afraid not," he replied. "After we had all made a supper on bread and cheese and bologna sausage, I was forced to pay for mine right then and there."

"I thought you said you were dead broke?"

"So I was. But that friendly cowboy had recognized me, although I didn't remember of ever seeing him before. 'Say, boys,' he announced to his companions, 'you don't know what a celebrated gent we've got with us to-night. This chap's the famous cowboy actor, Lou Bennison, you've all heard of, an' I votes he pulls off a few songs and dances while we're waiting for the next charge on the steers.'

When He Played Simon Legrease.

"Hoping to discourage the attempt to turn the caboose into a traveling show shop I explained that I knew nothing but Shakespeare.

"'That ain't so,' spoke up my friend, who had suggested the entertainment. 'I seen you once in Cheyenne play Simon Legrease in Uncle Tom's Cabin, an' I don't blame the bull dogs fer tryin' to bite you; but, if you knows this Shakespeare feller's play better'n you did the other show, start your circus.'"

"Did you?"

"I did. I tried to get out of it, but the boys wouldn't have it that way; so I stood up in the center of that bumping and rattling old caboose and gave them about all the Shakespeare I knew."

"Did they like it?"

"They said they did. I've played to some queer audiences in my time and in some queer places, but that night beat them all."

I have repeated this story of Louis Bennison's to illustrate the frankness and the unique training of the man for the style of character that best fits him. He is the very embodiment of the hero of Western melodrama and gives one the impression that he himself has always traveled "The Road Called Straight."

Zukor Says Star Series Plan Is Easy to Attack, Hard to Defend

FOR some time I have realized that the star series plan of distribution has been easy to attack and difficult to defend. It was a breeder of complaints from exhibitors, who felt that at times they were forced to show pictures they did not want, and from stars and allied producers who felt that sometimes their product was being used to help sell the product of others.

Many of these complaints have been utterly unfounded. Investigation has shown that in nearly every way the star series plan of booking has been fair to all concerned. But this method made it possible for agitators to poison the minds of stars, producers and exhibitors as to the policy of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

For a long time I have been working out the selective booking plan in an effort to devise a system of booking that cannot be criticised—a plan absolutely proof against attack—fair to every individual concerned in its operation, from studio to screen.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been trying conscientiously to eliminate all criticism and we have devoted our energies for the last year to finding ways and means to obtain for exhibitors only the pictures they want and to make it possible for stars, producers and authors to get the greatest circulation for their product and the best returns, without any encumbrance whatsoever.

I feel confident that the selective booking plan, which will be put into effect beginning September 1, will eliminate all the evils of former plans once and for all time. Every individual picture will be put on its own merit to succeed or fail by its own drawing power—and by nothing else.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation wants to assure every exhibitor of the co-operation and honest intention on its part to produce only such pictures as will bring him success and profit and good-will—pictures that will make it possible for him to receive from the public at all times an admission charge commensurate with their entertainment value. The public is demanding consistently fine productions and is ready to do its part if it gets value received for the price it pays.

This new plan is devised to reward properly every able effort of exhibitor, star, director and producer. It will be a trenmendous incentive to every person who takes part in it.

Adolph Zu'·or,
President, Famous Players-Lasky.

"The Westerners" Opens at Los Angeles; Has Not Departed from the Star System

IN the face of a sudden heat wave, Los Angeles turned out in volume last Sunday for the first presentation of the Stewart Edward White Great Authors' screen novel, "The Westerners," at the Kinema Theatre. This marked the active entry of Benjamin B. Hampton into the picture industry under the Hampton name.

The picture reveals his intentions in a clear light. He has not subordinated the actor, has not put the soft pedal on the star system. On the contrary he has made the actor an even greater factor in a big picture than he has been under the older systems of picture producing. He has not built his production around the personality or talents of any one big actor. What he has done is to fill every role that calls for a distinctive portrayal with a star player of recognized fame in motion pictures. This has increased the naturalness and spontaneity of the picture.

Roy Stewart, Mildred Manning, Robert McKim, Wilfrid Lucas, Graham Pettie, little Mary Jane Irving and equally diminutive Frankie Lee, a most remarkable little boy, are the featured players.

Critics Are Favorable.

The five daily newspapers of Los Angeles, the adjacent Fresno and San Diego newspapers, give unusual praise to Mr. Hampton as a new producing factor in the industry and the San Francisco morning newspapers sent representatives to view the premiere. Walter Bodin, critic of the San Francisco Bulletin, hails Hampton as one of the men who is "destined to bring about vast changes in motion pictures."

A forceful style of newspaper advertising was prepared by George Hough Perry, at one time advertising manager of Everybody's Magazine and also the first advertising manager of the Gimbel Brothers New York store. Mr. Perry is a member of Mr. Hampton's executive organization, having been identified with the Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., and the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., since Mr. Hampton's advent on the Coast.

The Los Angeles showing is a pre-release engagement. The distribution of this production and all of the Hampton productions is in the hands of the W. W. Hodkinson organization and other pre-release engagements will be held in the principal cities of the United States throughout the summer and fall.

New Zealand Exhibitor Has a Good Boost and a Knock

WE ARE stealing some thunder from Richardson's Projection Department, but purposely so, as he might be too modest to print the compliment paid here to his work. George Calder, an exhibitor of Huntly, New Zealand, writes:

"Inclosed you will find money order for one year's continuance of the Moving Picture World. I find your publication of great value to me, especially from a technical standpoint. Tell Richardson his department is eagerly devoured in Huntly. I am applying your new lens chart, but find difficulty in getting proper focus condensors.

"My opinion regarding the quality of American productions is that they are standing still: the stories are not good enough. With world competition now being established, it will tend to make the moving picture better from the exhibitor's point of view."

Owen Moore.

Owen Moore Is Engaged by Selznick Pictures

OWEN MOORE is the latest star to be added to the constantly growing Selznick Pictures constellation.

The ink was scarcely dry on the contract by which Myron Selznick secured Elsie Janis than he had completed negotiations whereby Mr. Moore will appear in a series of big productions under his management. The contract with Mr. Moore covers a long period.

"There is an important and constantly growing market for pictures in which men are starred, and I have secured Owen Moore for this reason," said Myron Selznick. "Possibly the demand for men stars is due to the effect of the war upon public thought. The fans do not tire of their heroines but as almost everyone has had some relative in the armies fighting in Europe, there has come in the last year a revival of interest in big red-blooded dramas. The heroic qualities that were evidenced by the American soldiers have created a renewed interest in the strength of the nation's manhood. Mr. Moore represents, I believe, the very finest type of leading man to respond to this demand and we have in contemplation for him a series of productions of vivid force. The war picture has gone and in its place is coming the picture of the fighting spirit in times of peace."

This latest acquisition brings the list of Selznick stars now up to five, including Elsie Janis, Olive Thomas, Eugene O'Brien, Elaine Hammerstein and Owen Moore.

Famous Players-Lasky Chiefs Give Outlines of Next Season's Plans

Selective Service Booking Policy Comes Into Effect September 1, Replacing Star Series System Then Terminated—Every Picture Will Thereafter Be Produced, Distributed and Exploited on Individual Basis—New and Enlarged Studios and Additional Stars

THE season of 1919-20 for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation starts September 1. On that date the star series system of booking of new productions will have come to an end, and supplanting it, ffective for the coming year, will be the "Selective Booking Plan."

Under Selective Booking each film will be booked by itself, regardless of any other production. Every picture will be produced, distributed and exploited as if it were the only picture made or distributed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and each picture will be a financial success or loss according to its own quality.

In other words, the meaning of the selective booking plan is that every production will stand on its own merit before the exhibitors and the public of the country.

This new sales policy has been under consideration for many months. During the week of May 12 last a convention of the Famous Players-Lasky district managers and special representatives was held at the home office in New York and there the entire plan was explained by Walter E. Greene, vice president in charge of distribution, and Al Lichtman, general manager, and received its final treatment.

Every Employe Familiar with Policy.

Following this convention, local meetings were held throughout the country, in the different districts, at which was present the personnel of every exchange in that territory. Thus every detail of the new plan has been outlined to every individual connected with the distributing organization. Without a single exception, everyone in this department has expressed great enthusiasm over the new project.

Anticipating this change in distribution policy, the production department, under the supervision of First Vice President Jesse L. Lasky, since the beginning of the present year has been bending its every energy and applying its every resource to the preparation of an imposing list of productions which will justify the plan of selective booking and earn the universal approval of exhibitors and their patrons. As a result of this department's activities more than fifty new productions either have been made, are now in the making or are now in course of preparation.

Studio Facilities Extended.

A new studio, to cost $2,000,000, is now being constructed in Long Island City, where eight big productions can be accommodated at the same time. The Lasky studio and affiliated studios in California have been enlarged and their personnel vastly increased. Thomas H. Ince will continue to make productions for Famous Players-Lasky distribution at his magnificent new plant at Culver City, Cal., and arrangements have been completed for the release of the product of Cosmopolitan Productions, the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, under the supervision of George Loane Tucker; the New Art Film Company, producers of Dorothy Gish features; Maurice Tourneur and Syd Chaplin.

These are the production sources of the releases of feature length. In addition, the "Fatty" Arbuckle and Mack Sennett subjects will be released and sold in the same manner as the features. The Burton Holmes Travelogs, Briggs Comedies, Post Scenics and Paramount Magazine will be released in series.

Three Subjects Ready Now.

Last week the first three releases for the new year were viewed by the different officials of the company in the home office. This will give an idea of how far in advance the releases will be ready, allowing exhibitors more than ample time to view each picture if necessary and prepare a big campaign for the showing of the film. By August 31 next there will be some twenty-five productions at the exchanges available for exhibition and sale to exhibitors. Paramount-Artcraft pictures will be released at the rate of two and three a week, alternately, and in addition there will be the comedy features and other short subjects.

To insure the utmost success of each picture, the company will extend the activities of its exploitation, publicity and advertising department under the direction of John C. Flinn, with a view to exploiting each picture as sufficiently as if it were the only picture distributed by the company. This exploitation organization will be undoubtedly the greatest of its kind in any industry.

Publicity Men for Branch Offices.

Men in the branch offices will be ready to assist the exhibitor in putting over a Paramount-Artcraft picture. These men will be expert showmen with many years' experience in such work. The powerful national advertising campaign in magazines and newspapers is to be continued and expanded and an extensive newspaper advertising campaign in co-operation with exhibitors will be put back of each production.

A gigantic service organization for the exhibitor is now in preparation. Advertising accessories of every nature will be handled by experts and, further

THE principal advantages of the selective booking policy, as pointed out by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, are as follows:

It will enable each production to earn a sum for the exhibitor, distributor, and producer commensurate with its value to the public.

It will permit the company greater latitude in purchasing best material and the engaging of the best talent available.

It will encourage longer runs.

It will eliminate entirely inequitable distributing methods.

It will answer the wide demand of the exhibitors to buy their pictures upon a more flexible basis than methods heretofore employed.

It will necessitate greater care in the selection and the production of pictures, as a poor picture cannot possibly earn (under the selective booking policy) a sum sufficient to make its production and distribution profitable.

It will permit the utmost in exploitation.

It will prove a great medium in creating good will between exhibitor and distributor.

It will mean the ultimate in the process of eliminating the weak in productions and compensating the strong.

It will permit such exhibitors that may questio n the particular worth of a picture to see it before buying.

President Adolph Zukor

than that, the distributors will show exhibitors just how to make the most out of these accessories. Progress-Advance, the house organ of this company, will be enlarged in size and personnel and other media will be employed to assist the exhibitor in his presentation of Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

Entire Product Still Available.

While selective booking establishes a plan for booking productions individually, solely upon their merit, at the same time the entire product of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will continue to be at the disposal of the thousands of theatres that in the past have exhibited Paramount-Artcraft Pictures almost exclusively and for those other theatres that desire in the future to look to this organization for a constant source of supply.

No price or release date will be set for any production until it is completed and pronounced perfect by those responsible for its quality. No limit of time or money is placed upon the energy and genius of the producing forces in their determination to make each production an individual success. This means that there will be two or three really big pictures every week, rather than two or three every month.

Percentage Plan in Some Cases.

Paramount-Artcraft Pictures will open on their first run showing as soon after release date as possible. In various instances, arrangements will be made with first-run exhibitors to allow other exhibitors who wish to view the film on the screen before booking it to see the pictures at the theatre. Thus the smaller exhibitors will be afforded the opportunity of not only seeing the merits of the production but will also have the chance to see how it goes over with regular motion picture audience. This will prove a big asset to the exhibitor who wishes to get all the information possible on his production.

In exceptional cases a percentage arrangement will be entered into with an exhibitor, on a given production. Thus it is evident that the flexibility of the selective booking plan is evident to a greater degree than in any other system heretofore in vogue.

Specialized Production for the New Year

By Jesse L. Lasky

First Vice-President, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

SELECT BOOKING will mean to the producing organization of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its allied units specialized productions. It will mean a declaration of independence, a liberation forever from the Tyrant of Time.

The motion picture of to-day represents a medium of free artistic expression, and the artist suffers under the limitations of time in which to accomplish his best just as suffers the great writer or great speaker who is compelled to deliver his message hastily without due reflection and minus the polish of genius.

System Six Months in Revising.

The handwriting was clear some time ago to the producing department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, represented by its big studios in New York and Hollywood; its extraordinary talent in authors, scenario writers, artists and directors, together with its channels of supply from the leading periodicals of the world.

Six months ago the necessity of an improved system in the method of making and distributing motion pictures was anticipated by this organization. The entire producing organization, although strained to the limit to make the best pictures brains and money could produce for the current season, turned to the task of preparation months before there was any discussion in the trade of the probability and of the necessity of selective booking, or of each picture to stand on its own merit before the exhibitors and the public.

The highly successful star series plan of the past two years paved the way immeasureably for this work of preparation. Motion pictures have been produced by this corporation in the past year which to duplicate on any reasonably large scale would render one hundred per cent. satisfaction to the public during the new year.

To Co-operate with Publishing Houses.

We will not be content, however, to do as well as our best in the past, and I am making unqualifiedly the statement that our resources of supply have been extended to an unlimited degree and all the personnel is enthusiastic over the opportunity to make pictures under the new plan better than any that have gone before. We will consider a picture finished only when it has had the utmost of skilled and experienced workmanship unhampered by the necessity of a haste that all too frequently results in slight imperfections.

I will digress for a moment to say that our producing department is in daily co-operation with all of the big American publishing houses, that we are enjoying an unprecedented degree of confidence and assistance of the best known authors and writers, and hardly any story appears in print and very few plays are produced in which, by reason of the ramifications of our facilities, we do not hold an option. There is a saying that a stream can rise no higher than its source, and it is a figure of speech directly applicable to motion picture production that no picture is greater than its story. We have reason, therefore, to be proud of the connections for material which we have made.

Each Picture a Unit by Itself.

To make productions qualify to be called Paramount-Artcraft has come to represent an achievement in the motion picture industry. To reach this Paramount-Artcraft standard is no easy task. When we say that for the season of 1919-20 our product will be bigger and better than ever before, it is entirely logical to believe that this will be so. If under the past system we have been able to establish a high water mark in photoplay standard, surely under the specialized production plan we will be able to reach much greater heights in the realization of artistic accomplishments than heretofore.

Jesse L. Lasky

Each production released under the Selective Booking Plan will have been created as a unit by itself. From now on unlimited time, money and facilities will be accorded the producers of each film. For the first time in the history of the motion picture, genius will be given absolute and unlimited opportunity to assert itself. The directors will be working months in advance of release dates and the baneful element of haste will be eliminated.

Transformation Taking Place.

An idea of how far in advance the production department is already working can be had from the fact that at least a half dozen super-attractions for the new year starting September 1 are now already finished. No one connected with this organization can more readily appreciate what great effort has been expended by every member of our producing establishment to bring about this condition than I. No one outside of the organization can begin to appreciate what a truly wonderful achievement this has been.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation expects to mark the progress of the cinema enterprise in the coming year as in the past. For months the change which is about to mark a new era for the motion picture has been under way. The entire industry has been going through a radical transformation and we are now facing the dawn of a new day of great accomplishments for this popular form of entertainment.

DeMille Has Aided in Drawing Plans.

The allied units whose product the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is proud to handle are not only entirely in accord with our new producing plans, but are also heartily enthusiastic over their possibilities. Cecil B. DeMille, director general of our corporation, has proved an important factor in arranging our new plan and his genius will do much to establish Paramount-Artcraft pictures on a higher plane during the coming year. Whitman Bennett, manager of the producing department, has also played a most important part in the organization of the gigantic department responsible for the merit of Paramount-Artcraft productions.

The great Thomas H. Ince organization is now in a better position than ever before to carry on its wonderful screen achievements under the personal supervision of that master mind which directs its activities. In his new producing home Thomas H. Ince will create Paramount-Artcraft pictures with facilities and experts second to none.

Long List of Famous Players.

Mack Sennett, "Fatty" Arbuckle, Burton Holmes, Clare Briggs, Syd Chaplin, Maurice Tourneur, George Loane Tucker, and other famous producers are on the mark and ready to set a pace that will outdo their past successes.

Among the artists who will appear in the super-attractions listed elsewhere in this special number are such truly great players as Elsie Ferguson, John Barrymore, Wallace Reid, Billie Burke, Dorothy Dalton, Robert Warwick, Marguerite Clark, Bryant Washburn, Douglas MacLean, Doris May, Ethel Clayton, Vivian Martin, Charles Ray, William S. Hart, Enid Bennett, "Fatty" Arbuckle, Syd Chaplin and others of equal talent and fame.

Some of the famous authors whose works will be screened via the Famous Players-Lasky organization are A. E. W. Mason, Peter B. Kyne, George M. Cohan, J. Hartley Manners, F. Tennyson Tesse and H. N. Harwood, Marah Ellis Ryan, Cynthia Stockley, Avery Hopwood, Archibald Clavering Gunther, Roi Cooper Megrue, Walter Hackett, May Tully, Rida Johnson Young, Walter Browne, Bertha M. Ruck, Augustus Thomas, Mark Twain, Marvin Taylor, Robert W. Chambers, William Gillette, Amelie Rives, George V. Hobart, Anthony Hope, Rupert Hughes, Louis Joseph Vance, George Broadhurst, Jack London, and E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Best Works to Be Used.

The best works of all these persons who have won fame through their achievements, plus the best efforts of the large number of artists and experts who have become prominent as a result of their part in the production of Paramount-Artcraft pictures and others who are now affiliated with our tremendous producing institution—all this not only speaks well for the increased success of future Paramount-Artcraft pictures but insures the further advance of the motion picture enterprise, both as an art and as an industry.

The Selective Booking of Motion Pictures

By Walter E. Greene

Vice-President in Charge of Distribution.

EVERY production to stand on its own merit before the exhibitors and the public of the country; every picture to be produced, distributed and exploited as if it were the only picture made by the organization; every picture to be a financial success or loss according to its own quality.

Thus in a few words may be summarized the selective booking policy adopted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and effective with releases commencing August 31, 1919.

It will be seen that this is a very radical departure from the methods of distribution employed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the past two years, when productions were sold on the merits of individual groups, popularly termed "star series."

Policy Pleases Exhibitors.

Selective booking of individual pictures is a radical step in progress. It has been adopted as a policy because an overwhelming majority of the exhibitors the corporation has interviewed have quickly indicated their sympathy with it and because it will be a better means of serving the public with a worthy product and will result in the elimination of the inferior picture that does not give satisfaction.

Greatest of all, however, is the fact that selective booking will put a premium on quality productions, allowing a freer and broader expression by the producing organization, by authors, by scenarists, directors and artists. We are confident it will therefore result in a higher grade of motion pictures than heretofore produced. This will redound to the inestimable advantage of the exhibitor, for he will be able to concentrate on each picture, to obtain the utmost revenue from the public by consecutive exhibition over a period of days, limited only by the drawing value of the production and his own good showmanship in properly presenting it to his patrons.

Will Make for Better Distribution.

Selective booking is certain to mean better distribution and better exhibition. For the department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of which I am in charge—distribution—I can speak. We are leaving nothing undone in preparing for the kind of service which the artists on one hand and the exhibitors on the other have reason to demand from us. Their personnel of our branch offices in twenty-six cities, representing more than 1,500 workers, has had the benefit of clear leadership under Adolph Zukor and an organization standard to uphold ever since the establishment of the first office that sold one of the old Famous Players productions—the first feature pictures ever offered. Our distributing service today is reaching more exhibitors, week in and week out, than any other organization in the industry.

The third factor—exhibition—already has spoken. Our investigations covering a period of months, revealed the unanimity of the exhibitors to regard selective booking as the greatest step forward the industry has taken.

Showmen Will Aid Exhibitor.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation stands today to help in the exhibition of its pictures to the limit of its ability in the way of co-operative advertising. National advertising, national publicity and distinct exploitation each and every production are to be accomplished. A field force of exploitation men has been organized consisting of trained showmen who will personally assist the exhibitor to get the most out of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures.

Walter E. Greene.

Will Give Advance Showings.

The selective booking plan will permit the theatre manager to operate his place of entertainment along lines he will interpret to be best suited to his patrons. The responsibility rests entirely with him. His audience will come to recognize the character of the showman in the character of his attractions. His profit will depend upon his knowledge of his patron's desires and likes and his ability to exploit each production.

Commencing this month there will be on exhibition in the branch offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation throughout the United States prints of productions listed for release this autumn. Each week during the summer, two or three more new pictures will be added to the list at the exchanges. The exhibitors of the country are invited to witness the exhibitions. They may arrange forthwith for exhibition, signifying immediately the days or weeks in which they desire to present the pictures. Each picture will be rented on its individual merit. The company points with pride to the extraordinary titles of its new productions, screen versions of popular plays and widely read stories.

First Choice for Old Clients.

Inasmuch as our plan of selling is on a basis of individual merit, likewise our producers are creating subjects to be sold in line with that plan, specializing on each subject, expending sufficient money to create a product of the highest calibre, and taking sufficient time so thoroughly to edit and re-edit each production until the highest degree of perfection is attained. Therefore, the pictures this season will possess the superlative distinguishing mark of quality and attractiveness that characterizes the releases of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

While each picture will be booked solely upon its merit, at the same time, we wish to assure the thousands of exhibitors who have been showing Paramount and Artcraft pictures for the past few years that they can continue to look to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as their chief source of supply for high class productions.

Old Friends Come First.

The exhibitor who has been doing business with us in the past will naturally receive the first opportunity to book our product. If, for instance, a manager who has been exhibiting a certain part of our total output for the past year wishes to book the new subjects of this line of product, he certainly will be given first call to book the same at a price commensurate with the quality of the film and his box-office possibilities.

What Exhibitors Want to Know.

An exhibitor, looking over the field of production and distribution as it exists today, wishes to ascertain from what source of supply he will receive his pictures for the coming year. He wishes to know that there is some organization in the business upon whom he can positively rely for a consistent supply of attractions that will keep the public coming to his theatre.

Year Promises Great Pictures.

The exhibitor knows today that one reliable organization is the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and knows the insurance of delivery and the high type of service it renders. As in the past, the future Paramount-Artcraft product will prove the backbone of the successful exhibitor's business for the year. As a result of the increased quality of product coming out of our specialized production plan and the individuality of the exploitation of each film, together with the introduction of new distribution and service ideas, the like of which have never before been attempted, the exhibitor will more than ever be able to rely upon the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in the vernacular, to deliver the goods.

The year will bring forth great pictures. May the fruits of popular esteem and patronage go to the best!

Cecil B. De Mille
Director General, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Productions Listed for Year

BIG ATTRACTIONS" is the slogan in the production of Paramount-Artcraft pictures for the coming year. Novels and stage plays by famous authors and playwrights and portrayed on the screen by the talented players under the direction of capable experts will constitute the new product.

A list of productions, some of which are already completed, which will be released the early part of the year is now available. A glance at the following tities will indicate the determination of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to give exhibitors the greatest line-up of attractions they have ever prepared for a similar period.

"The Witness for the Defense," by A. E. W. Mason, will present Elsie Ferguson in the leading role. This play enjoyed great popularity, with Ethel Barrymore as its star. George Fitzmaurice directed the photoplay and Wyndham Standing, Warner Oland and Vernon Steele are among those who will be seen in Miss Ferguson's support.

"The Valley of the Giants," Peter B. Kyne's story of the forest of the redwoods, serves as a vehicle for Wallace Reid. Marion Fairfax wrote the scenario and James Cruze directed.

"Peg O' My Heart" Important.

"Peg O' My Heart," one of the greatest pieces of theatrical property in the history of the stage, has been finished by Director William C. DeMille. Wanda Hawley will be seen in the role made famous by Laurette Taylor and later by Peggy O'Neil and Elsa Ryan, and the supporting cast includes Thomas Meighan, Theodore Roberts, Barbara Castleton and Robert Cain.

"Told in the Hills," a picturization of Marah Ellis Ryan's novel, will present Robert Warwick, supported by Ann Little, Wanda Hawley, Tom Forman and Monte Blue. George Melford directed.

"Everywoman," acme of theatrical originality, will shortly be started under direction of George Melford. Twenty or thirty beautiful young women will be seen in the cast, which is now being chosen.

"The Miracle Man," George M. Cohan's stage play, produced for the screen under the direction of George Loane Tucker, will be the first of the Mayflower productions to be released under the new arrangement with that corporation.

Another Mark Twain Story.

Mark Twain's immortal "Huckleberry Finn," scenarioized by Julia Crawford Ivers, is now being produced under direction of William D. Taylor, who produced the other Twain successes, "Tom Sawyer" and "Huck and Tom."

"The Misleading Widow," adopted from F. Tennyson-Tesse and H. M. Harwood's play, "Billetted," in which Margaret Anglin was seen, will be Billie Burke's first vehicle for the year. John S. Robertson directed.

"April Folly," from the story of Cynthia Stockley, author of "Poppy," "The Wild Olive" and other prominent subjects, will be one of the first Cosmopolitan Productions to be released. It was directed by Robert Z. Leonard and will present Marion Davies, Conway Tearle and others.

Thomas H. Ince has arranged a list of pretentious box-office attractions for Paramount-Artcraft release. Some are already finished, among them "The Market of Souls," a Dorothy Dalton picture of big proportions.

A number of noteworthy plays and stories have been acquired for Mr. Ince's new co-stars, Douglas MacLean and Doris May, the list including "Mary's Ankle," by May Tully, and "What's Your Husband Doing?" by George V. Hobart.

For Marguerite Clark.

"Widow by Proxy," by Avery Hopwood, in the stage version of which May Irwin made a big success, is now being produced by Walter Edwards, with Marguerite Clark in the stellar role.

"Luck in Pawn," by Marvin T. Taylor, one of the earlier successes of the theatrical season just closing, will be another Marguerite Clark subject.

"In Mizzouri," August Thomas' first great play, will be a vehicle for Robert Warwick.

Many other notable productions already in the course of preparation for next year's release, "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," by James Fagan, the play that introduced Douglas Fairbanks on the stage, will serve as a vehicle for Wallace Reid. "The Cinema Murder," E. Phillips Oppenheim's wonderful detective story, will be a Cosmopolitan Production. "The Young Mrs. Winthrop," by the late Bronson Howard, is a classic. This will be one of Ethel Clayton's first productions for the new season.

Some Ince Productions.

"The Other Woman" and "Stepping Out" will be Thomas H. Ince productions, presenting Enid Bennett. Both these stories are by C. Gardner Sullivan. "A Girl Named Mary," a story eagerly sought for the screen. will be presented with Marguerite Clark.

In "Captain Dieppe," by Anthony Hope, Robert Warwick will appear. "Eliza Comes To Stay," by Henry V. Esmond, is for Marguerite Clark; "His Official Fiancée," from the book by Bertha M. Ruck, for Vivian Martin; "It Pays to Advertise," the comedy farce by Roi Cooper Megrue and Walter Hackett, for Bryant Washburn; "Miss Hobbs," Annie Russell's most successful play, by Jerome K. Jerome; "Mother," by Kathleen Morris, for Ethel Clayton; "Sadie Love," the popular Broadway hit by Avery Hopwood in which Marjorie Rambeau first won her fame, for Billie Burke; "Sick Abed," another Broadway show, for Bryant Washburn; "Speed Carr," a story by J. Stuart Woodhouse, and "The Black Bag," by Louis Joseph Vance, for Wallace Reid.

Plays by the Score.

"The Fear Market," by Amelie Rives, an elaborate production with Ethel Clayton; "The Female of the Species," another Clayton vehicle, story by Joseph Gollamb; "The Lottery Man," Rida Johnson Young's play, for Wallace Reid, directed by James Cruze; "The Restless Sex," a Robert W. Chambers story recently concluded as a serial in Cosmopolitan, scenario by Frances Marion; "The Sea Wolf," Jack London's world-known subject, directed by George Melford; "The Teeth of the Tiger," story by Maurice Le Blanc, presenting further adventures of Arsene Lupin; "The Third Kiss," story by Helidore Tenne, directed by Robert Vignola, already finished, presenting Vivian Martin in the leading parts; "The Thirteenth Commandment," a startling story by Rupert Hughes, with Ethel Clayton; "Whistling Jim," by Julian Josephson, a Thomas H. Ince production, with Charles Ray; "Why Smith Left Home," the George Broadhurst farce-comedy ,and "Too Much Johnson," William Gillette's farce, both for Bryant Washburn.

Exploitation Department Busy

ANOTHER innovation on the part of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, a departure in its way fully as revolutionary as the new plans for production and distribution, is the Exploitation Department, which takes the place of the Department of Advertising and Publicity. A few years ago the sole idea of motion picture advertising was to sell pictures to the exhibitor. Gradually, with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation pointing the way, the trend has set in toward another idea—to sell pictures to the public.

In its national advertising campaign this company took the first steps along the road. This advertising policy was successful because it was founded upon the realization that it is the public that buys the pictures. The exhibitor is only an intermediary. To sell a picture to him means little. To sell it to the public means a triumph for all concerned.

Flinn Heads Four Divisions.

Under the general supervision of John C. Flinn, director of Advertising and Publicity, the Exploitation Department will be in four divisions—Administrative, Publications, Publicity and the Field Force. It is the fourth section that is of the most immediate significance to exhibitors and the trade, for the work to be done by that division means effort directed toward better attendance, better theatres and better prices.

This Field Force will consist of expert exploitation men who, after having been fully trained in the New York office of the corporation, and having become fully conversant with its policies, problems and exploitation methods, are to be sent to the respective districts for the purpose of helping individual exhibitors, without charge, with their exploitation problems. There is to be an exploitation man in every exchange—twenty-six in all—and among the men already selected are Wayland H. Taylor, New York; J. P. McConville, Boston; A. S. Glenn, Philadelphia; William Loyser, Pittsburgh; W. L. Hill, Chicago, and Arthur H. Cole, Kansas City.

Service Starts at Studios.

The functions of the Administrative division of the Exploitation Department will be executive, supplying the point of contact with the departments of distribution and production. At every producing studio there is a staff of reporters, who supply the department with information, photographs and ideas in connection with the pictures being produced.

These various offices all work in close touch with the Administrative Division. Their personnel is to be enlarged during the coming year. At present the force at the West Coast producing studios are under the general supervision of Adam Hull Shirk, of the Lasky studio.

The second division—Publication—is under the supervision of Jerome Beatty, formerly publicity director of Thanhouser and McClure companies, and an experienced newspaper and magazine writer. Mr. Beatty has been Advertising Manager of Famous Players-Lasky for two years.

This department places advertisements in national magazines; in the trade papers and daily newspapers; publishes a magazine of exhibitor's service department, prepares press books for exhibitors, supervises the making of advertising accessories, and works in co-operation with the Field Force in giving special aid to exhibitors.

Progress-Advance, a weekly magazine of exhibitor service, has for its editor Gordon H. Place, who has for many years worked among exhibitors. H. S.

Work Cut Out for the Distribution Department

By Al Lichtman

General Manager, Department of Distribution.

THE Department of Distribution, presided over by Vice-President Walter E. Greene, includes a field force of 1,241 persons, apportioned to twenty-six branch exchanges throughout the United States. This field force is supported by a staff of nearly three hundred at the home office in New York City.

The duties of the vice-president in charge of distribution have been aptly described as analogous to those of the vice-president in charge of traffic in the administration of a railroad. He it is who interprets for the department the policies laid down by the Executive Committee of President and formulates the plans for carrying them into effect.

Under Mr. Greene, in direct charge of operation, is the General Manager of Distribution, and following in order come Charles C. Burr, assistant general manager; Sidney R. Kent, sales manager; Harry H. Buxbaum, F. V. Chamberlain, John W. Allen and Myron H. Lewis, special representatives; Harry Asher, W. E. Smith, C. E. Holcomb, Louis Marcus and Herman Wobber, district managers, and Robert E. McIntyre, Arthur C. Wilson, Robert A. Kreier, Thomas A. Kilfoyle, Samuel Handel, Saul Berman, Emanuel R. Barnet and Fred A. Leroy, auditors.

Handled in Nine Districts.

For convenience of distribution the United States is divided into nine districts, in charge of district managers or, in some instances, special representatives. Scattered among these nine districts are the twenty-six branch exchanges, each in charge of a branch manager.

Complete data concerning every community has been gathered and with corrections brought up to the minute is kept on file both at the respective branch exchanges and at the home offices. All this information concerning the territory served by each branch is condensed by a statistician at the home office into a graphic chart which shows the possibilities and the actualities in the absorption of Paramount and Artcraft pictures in that territory.

His Work Mapped Out.

A zig-zag line traced across this chart, corrected from day to day, shows the volume of sales in relation to the possibilities, and with these charts always on his desk the general manager can take in at a glance the whole story of his subordinates' work to date, throughout the length and breadth of the United States, as compared with preceding weeks or months.

So much in general as to the structure of the distribution organization as a whole. Through its branch exchanges the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation comes in direct contact with exhibitors. These exchanges are located in the following cities: New York, Buffalo, Boston, New Haven, Portland, Me., Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, Detroit, Kansas City, St. Louis, Des Moines, Omaha, Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Salt Lake City, Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Portland, Ore.

Where Famous Players-Lasky Pictures

THOMAS H. INCE is one of the biggest powers in the silent drama. The Ince pictures will continue to be released through Famous Players-Lasky; but like all the other branches of this organization, the Ince studios plan greater things for the coming year.

In his studios at Culver City, among the most completely equipped and largest in the world, pictures will be made under the direct supervision of Mr. Ince, pictures with the Ince favorites—Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray and Enid Bennett—and with the two new stars who, Mr. Ince believes, will be as popular as his others have been. These are Doris May and Douglas MacLean, who will be co-starred in several productions.

Thomas H. Ince.

They are well known, for they have been acting under Mr. Ince for two years. Mr. MacLean has appeared in support of Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Mary Pickford and others. Miss May, who has been appearing under the name of Doris Lee, was leading woman for Charles Ray in six of his Paramount Pictures.

"Fatty" Arbuckle.

Ince Personally Supervises.

Although Mr. Ince carries a large staff, the work of the entire studio is actually under his supervision, and when a picture says: "Supervised by Thomas H. Ince," the words are the literal truth. He is continually at the studio, inspecting, criticising, advising, often jumping in and directing difficult scenes.

A great deal of his time is spent in the cutting room, editing films and making suggestions or changes. Mr. Ince is solely responsible for the quality of every picture which leaves his studio.

Dorothy Gish.

Cecil B. DeMille

Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has probably produced a greater number of successful pictures than any other person. For a DeMille picture to break a box-office record is no surprise—it is expected. Starting with "Carmen," and all through the list, DeMille productions have established the highest mark of real artistic excellence.

The reason for this success is simple: Cecil B. DeMille is a sincere artist—he thinks of nothing except the result; and for the right result—the result that satisfies his artistic conscience—he will sacrifice money, time, energy and care to the utmost.

C. F. Zittel.

Two Skilled Scenarists.

Closely associated with Mr. DeMille is Jeanie Macpherson, his scenario writer, who is responsible not only for the continuity of his pictures but also for many of the original stories he has transferred to the screen. He has recently added to his scenario staff Major Ian Hay Beith, author of some of the most successful war books. Major Beith will work with Miss Macpherson on continuity and originals.

DeMille Doing Barrie Play.

Mr. DeMille is at present working on an adaptation of "The Admirable Crichton," by Sir James M. Barrie. This is the first of that author's works to reach the screen and that he should give to Mr. DeMille the rights he has so jealously held is a great tribute to the genius of the producer.

Mack Sennett

The Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies, forerunners of many palpable imitations, hold a position of supremacy. The comedic genius of Mack Sennett himself, who supervises all the work, is the element which makes his comedies what they are, and it is with satisfaction that Famous Players-Lasky announce that it will continue to release them, one every two weeks, as in the past two years.

Mr. Sennett's principal comedians are Charlie Murray, of the old Murray and Mack team; Ben Turpin, Louise Fazenda, Charlie Lynn, Wayland Trask, Baldy Belmont, Myrtle Lind, Phyllis Haver, Marie Prevost, and Harriett Hammond. The Sennett bathing girls have been in large measure responsible for the popularity of these comedies.

Pretty Girls and Animals.

Recognizing the universal appeal of beautiful girls, Mr. Sennett has secured the finest collection of feminine charm in pictures. Animals also have always formed an unusual and interesting part of Sennett comedies. The menagerie, headed by Teddy, the only dog-star in the world, includes a trained pelican, a rooster, several hens, some mice, kittens, a lion and a seal.

The Sennett studio in Los Angeles now occupies twenty-six acres. There are three open stages and one dark, and 250 people are employed there.

"Fatty" Arbuckle

It was no small matter to clinch "Fatty" Arbuckle to a new three-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The contract involved the sum of three million dollars. But Adolph Zukor signed it with full confidence, knowing that to the public of America, and consequently to exhibitors, "Fatty" Arbuckle is worth all his pictures cost—worth it in smiles and entertainment.

Will Come One-a-Month.

The Arbuckle two-reel comedies for the next year, to be released one a month, will be directed and staged in such a way that a multitude of surprises may be expected. Mr. Arbuckle already has a competent and enthusiastic organization, and he intends to add to it any individuals of marked talent and ability that he may find valuable to his product. He will continue his policy of making comedies, with originality and novelties, and without vulgarity.

Lasky Studio

The Lasky studio in California, center of Famous Players-Lasky West Coast production activity, fills two city blocks. It is the most important show place of Hollywood. Every day hundreds of people from all over the country come to see this place about which they have heard.

The stages are at present four in number—two glass, one open and one dark. The combined area of the stages is 47,000 square feet. On these stages eight productions can be kept going comfortably at one time, allowing several sets at once for every production.

Milton E. Hoffman.

The laboratories and stock rooms occupy a huge concrete fireproof structure, replacing the buildings which burned down a year ago. The size of the laboratories may be estimated from the fact that there are 100 men working in this department alone. An entire city block adjoining the studio is used for exterior settings, and there is also the Lasky ranch of 1,200 acres.

Milton E. Hoffman is general manager; Fred Kley, studio manager; Frank E. Woods, supervising director, and Wilfred Buckland, art director.

Morosco Studio

The methods of operation at the Morosco studio, in Hollywood, are precisely the same in general detail as those of the Lasky studio and the clean-cut business methods co-ordinate perfectly with the artistic requirements of the productions. Charles Eyton is studio manager; Julia Crawford Ivers is supervising director and is in charge of scenario work and Una Nixon Hopkins is art director.

The peculiarly satisfactory arrangement by which the Famous Players-Lasky organization on the Coast can interchange in the matter of studios, has been of great advantage to all concerned.

Maurice Tourneur

One of the year's most important production announcements is that Maurice Tourneur, internationally known as a maker of massive motion pictures characterized by beautiful photography and enveloped in an atmosphere of startling realism, will produce a number of pictures for release by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation during the year 1919-20.

Mr. Tourneur's first work in motion pictures was with Eclair, and following successive engagements as director with other producing companies he came to America from Paris, in 1914. He jumped into fame with his productions of "The Whip," "Trilby" and "Alias Jimmy Valentine," and subsequently made many remarkable pictures for Artcraft and Paramount, including

Clare Briggs

Are Made and Those Who Make Them

"The Poor Little Rich Girl," "Prunella" and "The Blue Bird." His splendid picturizations of the Drury Lane melodramas, "Sporting Life" and "The White Heather," were recently released as Paramount-Artcraft Specials.

Eastern Studios

Some time during the coming fall, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will be making its productions at its new studio and laboratory in Long Island City, N. Y., the largest and finest plant of its kind in the world. The foundation walls of the laboratory building are now completed, while huge steam shovels are biting out the earth to a depth of seventeen feet preparatory to the pouring of concrete upon which the big studio proper will stand. The new studio and laboratory will cost approximately $2,000,000, and when complete will house all the producing activities of the corporation in the East.

J. N. Naulty.

Meanwhile, pending the completion of the Long Island City plant, production work will be carried on at the old Famous Players studio, on West 56th street, and at the Universal studio, at Fort Lee, which was leased some months ago.

In charge of the Eastern studios is J. N. Naulty, who is assisted at 56th street by J. W. Schlieff, and at Fort Lee by H. J. Elukius. Gardner Hunting is in charge of the scenario and film-editing department, and Richard Murphy supervises the art and technical departments.

New Art Film Company

The Dorothy Gish features, produced by the New Art Film Company, which have gained such wide popularity among exhibitors since the initial picture "Battling Jane," was released last fall, will continue to be listed among the attractions offered during the coming year.

The New Art Film Company has its own studio and producing organization in California, and with every facility and a number of prominent and talented artists engaged to support Miss Gish in her feature comedies, a number of splendid productions may be looked for from this source. Elmer Clifton is Miss Gish's director.

Post Nature Pictures

Acclaimed by critics and audiences as the most beautiful examples of motion picture photography yet shown on the screen, one of the distinctive features of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's offerings to exhibitors next season will be the Paramount-Post Nature Pictures, a series of moving picture studies of Nature in her most charming moods. Three of these pictures were shown last season at special week engagements at the New York Rivoli.

Burton Holmes.

There will be twenty-six Paramount-Post Nature Pictures next season, the first to be released in the first week of September. Ten of the pictures already have been completed, although great care and time are spent on each production, the pictures will be released regularly on a basis of one every two weeks. Each feature will approximate 1,000 feet in length.

The Post Pictures Corporation is a New York corporation. The officers of the Company are Albert Redfield, president, and Clyde E. Elliott, vice-president and general director.

Briggs Pictures, Inc.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased the distributing rights for the world for the Briggs Comedies—one-reel comedies based on the cartoons of Briggs in the New York Tribune and other newspapers of the country. These pictures, produced by Briggs Pictures, Inc., under the direct supervision of Clare Briggs himself, will be released once a week, beginning September 1, as the Paramount-Briggs Comedies.

Enacted by real persons, these pictures, it is stated by all who have seen them, carry out the spirit of Briggs' cartoons in a manner that makes them something distinctly new in film entertainment. In the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, people all over the country, who have followed daily the experiences, the joys and tragedies of "Skinny" and his friends, in "When A Feller Needs A Friend" and in "The Days of Real Sport," will be able to see them on the screen in person. Officers of Briggs-Pictures, Inc., are: President, Clare Briggs; vice-president and general manager, Alex Yokel; treasurer, J. S. Gillespie.

Burton Holmes Travelogues

The Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues, already conceded to be the most valuable single-reel releases, from an educational standpoint, issued by any distributing organization, promise during the coming year to be more interesting and instructive than ever before. By way of preparation for the season 1919-20, Mr. Holmes and his general manager, Louis Francis Brown, sailed for Europe this week, to be gone four months.

They will gather during this period, a wealth of material for lectures, travel books and Paramount motion pictures. "Europe in the Re-Making," is the general subject which Mr. Holmes has chosen for the series of pictures, the material for which he will seek on his present trip, and which will make up a large part of the year's weekly releases.

The number of theatres showing Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues has increased tremendously since the first of this year, and with the starting of the new season there will not be a town of importance in the United States where this valuable short-reel feature may not be seen regularly in at least one theatre.

Paramount Magazine

For several months past the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been making extensive plans for the inauguration of an educational and industrial department. Nathan Friend, for over two years identified with Paramount-Bray Pictographs in the capacity of general manager, took charge of this work, and last week announced the completion of these plans and the actual operation of his department.

Part of the educational department will be devoted to the presentation of pictures in schools on a scale never attempted before in the industry. Pictures will be produced with this in mind, not as an incidental, but as the specific purpose. Films will be prepared for school exhibition only and in such a way as to make them purely educational.

But the Educational pictures for the theatre will also be produced. These films will be a thousand feet long, and will include a program of different subjects presenting on the whole, a complete screen magazine. This product will be known as Paramount Magazine and will be released weekly.

In the industrial field, operations have already been started with large sales organizations and distributors of nationally known products.

Cosmopolitan Productions

Starting September 1, Cosmopolitan Productions, of which C. F. Zittel is general manager, will release its product through Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, following the recently announced release merger of these two companies.

Some of the notable productions to be filmed as Cosmopolitan Productions this year, all of which have appeared or will appear in the magazines of William R. Hearst, include: "The Dark Star," by Robert W. Chambers; "April Folly," by Cynthia Stockley; "The Cinema Murder," by E. Phillips Oppenheim; "The Miracle of Love," by Cosmo Hamilton; "The Restless Sex," by Robert W. Chambers; "The Mills of the Gods," by E. Phillips Oppenheim; "The Crimson Tide," by Robert W. Chambers; "The Passionate Pilgrim," by Samuel Merwin; "In the Dark," by Arthur Somers Roche; "The Daughter of Mother McGinn," by Jack Boyle; "Alias Prince Charming," by Jack Boyle; "Lost Loraine Loree," by Cynthia Stockley; "The Crimes of the Armchair Club," by A. S. Roche; "Birthright," by Kathleen Norris; "This Light Must Live," by Arthur Stringer; "Uneasy Street," by Arthur Somers Roche; "The Twin Sister," by Justus Miles Forman.

production staff and Frances Marion and Adrian Johnson are under exclusive contract as scenario writers.

Sydney Chaplin

Sydney Chaplin, comedian and producer, who recently signed with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the release of four feature comedies, of five-reel length, in which he himself will appear, has ambitious plans for the coming year. Mr. Chaplin, who has had great success here and abroad as a comedian and who for the past few years has been absent from the screen handling the business affairs of his brother Charlie, has a large following among motion picture patrons in this country.

His former work on the screen included some of the most successful comedies ever released, "The Submarine Pirates" being particularly prominent as one of his own creations.

Mayflower Productions

The affiliation with the George Loane Tucker producing organization, or the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, marks another notable achievement for the big distributing company. One of the foremost directors connected with the production of motion pictures, George Loane Tucker, has many famous screen successes to his credit. Among these are "The Christian," "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Virtuous Wives," "Rupert of Hentzau," "The Man Without a Soul," etc.

Under the new distributing arrangement with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. Tucker, it is anticipated, will achieve even greater things than he has in the past.

Exploitation Activities

Fuld, a former exhibitor and later a trade paper writer, is associate editor.

The press books, under the editorship of Charles Kenmore Ulrich, are issued with every picture. They contain advertisements, written by experts, for the exhibitors' use. The cuts or mats of these advertisements are given to the exhibitor free. The press books also contain publicity stories, exploitation ideas, etc.

In the personnel of the second division are A. M. Botsford in charge of trade paper advertising; George Strader and Russel Mitcheltree, ad writers, and Patrick Kearney; the art department, under the direction of Vincent Trotta; Albert E. Thorn in charge of lobby displays and Jos. A. Gausman, head of the poster division.

The third division—Publicity—is under the supervision of Peter Smith, who has had wide experience as a motion picture and theatrical publicist and writer for amusement publications. This department writes and places stories in newspapers, magazines, house organs, etc., and issues all announcements. It also arranges advertising "tie-ups" with national advertisers, obtains endorsements from organizations, and invents and carries out all exploitation stunts.

The personnel of the department for the coming year is as follows: Samuel D. Palmer, in charge of trade paper publicity; Peter Milne, trade paper and exploitation ideas; Morris Ryskind, special newspaper stories; James A. Creelman, New York newspapers and syndicates; Charles F. Carter, national and class magazines; Dorothy Nutting, fan, theatrical and women's magazine; Arthur Brilant, in charge of advertising tie-ups.

EASTMAN GIVES THEATRE TO ROCHESTER

Film Manufacturer Endows House Encouraging Art in Pictures Regardless of Profit or Loss

PLANS are rapidly maturing for the erection of what will probably be the first moving picture theatre of its kind in the world. Located at Rochester, this will be the crowning achievement of the man whose inventive genius is responsible for much that exists today in the film industry.

As announced some time ago, George Eastman, head of the Eastman Kodak Company, long ago planned to build a theatre where art in pictures would be encouraged and where no question of profit or loss could ever in any way affect the policy of the management. This plan is to be realized in the Eastman Institute, built and endowed by him.

Cost Probably Quarter-Million.

The cost of the proposition has never been divulged, but the land for the site has been purchased and work has been commenced in clearing away the buildings now standing. The site is within three blocks of the heart of the city and is valued at upward of a quarter of a million dollars. The cost of the building will undoubtedly equal and probably surpass that sum, while the size of the endowment will necessarily be large.

With the institute will be combined the present Institute of Musical Art and the Rochester Symphony Orchestra, both now largely supported by the generosity of Mr. Eastman. In fact, the Rochester Symphony Orchestra as such has ceased to exist, the last concert of the season just closed being announced as the final one before the opening of the new institute. With the opening of the institute an orchestra of probably about seventy-five pieces will be maintained.

Admission Prices Nominal.

Moving pictures will be shown six days of the week, with musical accompaniments by the orchestra, both pictures and music being specially prepared. One day each week the program will consist of concert features by well-known artists. The auditorium will have the largest capacity in that city and admission prices will be merely nominal, it being Mr. Eastman's idea to bear all the expenses through his endowment.

Mazda Demonstrator Returns.

M. Bernays Johnson, chief of the projection division of the Westinghouse Lamp Company, Bloomfield, N. J., who through his extensive knowledge of projection and lighting was selected by the Westinghouse company to demonstrate the new Simplex Mazda incandescent lamp equipment, has just returned to New York after an extensive tour of the Middle West. Mr. Johnson, besides being an active projectionist, has in his official capacity with the Westinghouse company helped to perfect many of the new lamp models turned out by this company. Mr. Johnson is also the projection editor of the new Chicago film and educational publication, "Reel and Slide Magazine."

Before making this trip, however, Mr. Johnson assisted in the installing of the first two machines of this type on the George Washington, which was then known as the "Presidential Ship."

While in Jonesboro, Ark., Mr. Johnson succeeded in selling through the Simplex distributor there six of the new equipments between the three theatres at that point. While attending the joint exhibitors state convention at Hutchinson, Kan., Mr. Johnson placed his projector in the main lobby of the local hotel and succeeded in selling three of these equipments in one evening—which may be considered a good day's work.

New Machinery Installed in Enlarged Simplex Plant

IN spite of the unusual activity at the Simplex plant which necessitated since the first part of April working day and night shifts to keep up with the number of orders that are flowing into the factory, time has been found between the last few Saturday noons and Monday mornings to make factory changes which the extra working force put on within the past several months has made necessary.

On the eleventh floor of the Simplex building have been added several additional gear-hobbing machines upon which are made and finished all of the bevel gears used in the Simplex. New lathes and millers have also been added on this floor.

Revises Entire Floor.

On the twelfth floor, where the mechanisms are assembled, the entire plans have been revised, and today the main casting is received on one end of the long assembling room, and when it reaches the other end of this department it is a complete mechanism ready for the tests and inspections which all Simplex mechanisms are subjected to before being sent out to the distributors. In the other large building adjacent to the Simplex building are contained the nickel plating lamp house, enameling, print shop and screw machine department, and here also many important changes and improvements have been made.

Russell Not for Gasnier and Cohen.

Mabel Condon telegraphs Moving Picture World from Los Angeles, under date of June 17, that William Russell, despite reports to the contrary, will not appear in productions to be made by Louis Gasnier and Sydney L. Cohen. Mr. Russell is leaving Los Angeles, June 23, to come to New York, where he will sign contracts "with a producing firm which has studios in both East and West," according to Miss Condon. The firm he goes with is expected to make the announcement next week.

Fred Kley in New York.

Fred Kley, studio manager at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, Cal., is enjoying a vacation visit in New York. This is Mr. Kley's first trip to the East since 1913, when he went to California with Cecil B. De Mille as one of the production pioneers in the Lasky organization. He will remain in New York until July 8.

HOLLYWOOD PLANT TO DOUBLE OUTPUT

To Alter Famous Players Studio to Accommodate Companies Soon to Arrive—Seven Pictures Under Way

ACCORDING to a statement made last week by Milton E. Hoffman, studio manager, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is making extensive improvements and alterations on its studio in Hollywood, which will enable the producing organization practically to double its number of picture features now turned out.

The studio proper occupies a ten-acre site with an entrance on Vine street, besides a 1,200-acre ranch which is used for a wide variety of exterior locations. With slight alterations, the stage space at the studio can be made to accommodate the new companies that will soon be at work there. Besides the executive and office staff, and directors and actors, the plant numbers more than 400 employes, among these 68 carpenters, 100 laboratory workers, 20 seamstresses and milliners, property makers, electricians, and other workmen.

The productions now under way at the Famous Players-Lasky studio are Cecil B. De Mille's production of Barrie's "The Admirable Crichton;" William De Mille's "Peg O' My Heart," with Wanda Hawley and Thomas Meighan; Major Robert Warwick in "Told in the Hills;" Houdini's big special picture, "The Grim Game;" Bryant Washburn in "It Pays to Advertise;" Wallace Reid in "The Lottery Man," and Lila Lee in "Rose of the River."

McCauley Master-Pictures Commence.

The McCauley Master-Pictures Corporation has opened a studio in Los Angeles, with Colonel Herbert H. Childers, of New York and Washington, in charge of productions. Nicholas A. Dunaew, Russian actor and director, has been engaged as director, and among the pictures planned which will deal with different phases of American life and national interest will be one production with Bolshevism as its basic theme. Mr. McCauley, founder of the company, was at one time a cartoonist with the New York World.

Brunton Purchases Ranch.

The Brunton Studios Company has purchased a 500-acre tract of land in the foothills of Hollywood, at the head of Cahuenga avenue, which will be used by the producing units at the Brunton plant for exterior location purposes.

Porter an Associate Editor.

Verne Hardin Porter, scenario and short story writer, has gone to New York to assume his new duties as associate editor of the Hearst literary publications.

East Indian Film Man Arrives.

C. N. Douetil, of Calcutta, India, managing director of Bijou Limited, a firm that distributes films, among them Metro features in India, Burmah and Ceylon, was a visitor at the Metro studio in Hollywood, during a stop-over in Los Angeles on his way across the continent.

Mr. Douetil came by way of China and Japan, and will visit New York and other cities in the East before he sails for England, from which country he will return to India in September.

Mr. Douetil has made a study of the tastes of the East Indian natives and says that melodrama, crook stories and mystery plots are by far the most popular pictures in India. Comedies of the slapstick order, with falls and tumbles, are also very popular. Parlor comedies of the genteel order are not cared for.

A. C. Doubeny, a stockholder in Bijou Limited, accompanied Mr. Douetil on his trip.

First MacDonald Picture Oct. 1.

Sam Rork, manager for Katherine MacDonald, has returned from a business trip to New York and reports having made arrangements for the release of the Katherine MacDonald productions through an important distributing organization in the East. It is planned to release six pictures a year, the first of which will be ready for distribution about October 1.

Mr. Rork announces that only the best and most up-to-date stories are to be purchased for Miss MacDonald. The production now being filmed is from Margery May's story, "The Bleeders," with Colin Campbell directing and Roy Stewart as leading man.

"Mitch" Lewis in Comedy-Dramas.

Mitchell Lewis is about to abandon the rough hewn Northwest characters with which he has become identified in pictures, to assume roles with something of a comedy touch to them. Harry Leon Wilson is writing a story for Lewis which will mark the change in the actor's impersonations.

Day of Meeting Changed.

The regular meetings of the Motion Picture Players' union have been changed to every Monday evening in the month at 7:30, at headquarters, 515

They Wouldn't Let Fay Tincher Move In in Riding Costume, so She Disguised Herself and Then Everything Was Spiffy.

American Bank building, Second and Spring streets.

Paint Little Mary's Portrait.

Since Mary Pickford has been officially declared the most famous motion picture actress in the world in a contest conducted recently by an Eastern photoplay magazine, she is to have her portrait placed in the Hall of Fame at Washington.

Matteo Sandona, noted artist and a member of the jury of awards at the San Francisco exposition in 1915, began a portrait of Miss Pickford in oils last week, which, when completed, will be placed in the famous gallery of celebrities at the nation's capital.

Miss Pickford is giving the artist a two-hour sitting each day in the living room of her home, and is wearing a costume specially designed for her by the artist. Sandona expects to have the work completed in about three weeks.

Rules Made for Ince Aerial Prize.

Definite plans as to when the proposed trans-Pacific airplane flight will be made, and rules to govern the flight, were formulated last week by S. S. Bibbero, secretary of the Pacific Aero Club, who came to Los Angeles to confer with Thomas H. Ince, motion picture producer, who has offered several prizes for aerial flights over the Pacific, and one of $50,000 for the first flight across the Pacific.

The Pacific Aero Club has agreed that the flight shall be conducted under its auspices, and it will be responsible for the distribution of the prize. Mr. Bibbero believes that a flight across the Pacific can be made much more easily than a similar flight across the Atlantic. Another meeting, that was held with the trustees of the Venice Aviation fields, resulted in a discussion of the proposition that the flight to Sydney, Australia, for which Mr. Ince offers a prize of $10,000, shall start from the Venice field.

Librarian Collecting Data on Films.

Eudora Caroutte, head of the California department of the State library at Sacramento, is in Los Angeles collecting data for an exhaustive department of motion picture history, which is to be available to all students of the industry.

Lunch for Exchange Men at Lasky's.

More than a hundred salesmen and managers of the Famous Players-Lasky organization from every city of importance on the Pacific coast were the guests of Cecil B. De Mille at a luncheon at the Lasky studio on June 9. Milton E. Hoffman made an address of welcome, and this was followed by short talks from John E. Flinn, Ian Hay Beith, and Frank A. Garbutt. Some of the Lasky stars present at the luncheon were Gloria Swanson, Wallace Reid, Lila Lee, Elliott Dexter, Bryant Washburn and Ann Little.

Ruth Allen a Free Lance.

Ruth Allen, former head of the scenario department at the Fairbanks studio, and recently with the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, has resigned from studio and agency activities and has become a free lance writer.

Lexington Theatre Man Moves to Town.

Charles Scott, for 33 years manager of the Lexington Opera House at Lexington, Kentucky, has come to Los Angeles with his family, consisting of his wife and daughter, his son and daughter-in-law, to make his home here.

Nursery a Popular Institution.

More than 200 babies and little tots were taken care of in the California Theatre nursery last week while the babies' mothers enjoyed the show.

Studio Shots.

MARIE WALCAMP is the honorary head of the fire fighters of Sonora, California, where she went not long ago to film exteriors. Marie was belle of the firemen's ball given in her honor, and was unanimously elected honorary chief.

Jack London's "Sea Wolf" is to be put into picture form at the Lasky studio under the direction of George Melford.

Rupert Julian is enjoying a summer vacation while a new story is being selected for him by the Universal scenario department.

MOSS COMBINES WITH FAMOUS PLAYERS

Owner of Chain of Houses Becomes Identified with Other Theatrical Interests of Paramount

RUMORS of a consolidation of the B. S. Moss and Famous Players-Lasky interests have been active recently, and the facts of the case are as follows:

The theatres owned by B. S. Moss have been merged with the theatrical interests of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, but will be operated as an independent organization, not alone playing the Famous Players-Lasky pictures, but also any other pictures of merit.

Mr. Moss, through his experience and showmanship ability, has been elected as executive head of the acquisition, construction and management departments as a further extension of theatre exploitation planned by the new combination.

To Retain Name as Moss Houses.

The policy of the corporation is that no individual should lose his identity upon consolidation with the corporation, and, therefore, the Moss theatres acquired will still be known as the B. S. Moss theatres.

B. S. Moss

Whose theatres have merged with those of Famous Players-Lasky.

The reason for the combination, according to Mr. Moss, is that, in the first place, it will be instrumental in producing the highest point of efficiency and artistic excellence in the exhibition of motion pictures. In the second place that through such a combination it will be possible to book the biggest and best motion picture productions irrespective of the producers, the best artists, the best music and the best stage effects. It will also be able to produce a special atmosphere in the theatre, which will be in keeping with all of this, and which only a limited number of theatres now enjoy. Thirdly, when considering the important item of advertising, the benefit that will accrue from such a combination is great.

"We will be in a position," says Mr. Moss, "to have the best publicity men, the best cartoonists, the best ad writers, and the most artistic lobby displays. The result, through collective advertising, will be decidedly remunerative. Fourthly, the public at large is always only too willing to pay for value received, and through this standardization of artistic merit, higher prices of admission may be charged. Consequently, the net results will be for the ultimate benefit of all concerned.

"It stands to reason that all of this can only be attained through organization and capital, organization being productive of the greatest results through a minimum amount of costs, and capital never interesting itself unless there is stability of organization."

Many Saw Ruth Roland at the Cities She Visited

GREETED by thousands of picture fans, exhibitors and exchangemen in five cities where she made personal appearances, Ruth Roland, Pathe serial star who now heads her own company, Ruth Roland Serials, Inc., has made her return from New York to Los Angeles.

In Montreal, where she appeared at ten theatres, it was necessary to call out special police to break the traffic blockades that were formed by the fans who crowded about her car. At one point in the Canadian city the car in which she was riding was overwhelmed by her admirers and the mud guard torn off. In Buffalo, Cleveland, Chicago and Milwaukee similar demonstrations marked her visits and special police arrangements were necessary.

At the station in Buffalo, Miss Roland was met by C. A. Taylor, manager of the Pathe branch office, and a committee of exhibitors. She was first taken on a sightseeing trip through the city and at 2 o'clock began her tour of the principal theatres. At two theatres it was necessary to call police reserves in order to control the crowds that filled the streets and open a passageway.

It Was a Notable Dinner

THE testimonial dinner given at the Waldorf-Astoria June 18 to the men who led the campaign for Sunday opening in New York State was a notable affair. It will rank high among the best of the social occasions with which the industry is familiar. Sydney S. Cohen, Charles L. O'Reilly and Samuel I. Berman were honored in a degree far beyond that usually accorded those who do work of vital importance to the industry. All the speakers were agreed the honors were deserved.

The occasion was more than a testimonial to the three men. It was a demonstration of the solidity, the latent power, that resides within the motion picture structure of the state and nation. Here were six hundred men and women who came together on a midsummer night to do honor to three men who had given them good service. The spectacle hardly could have failed to impress the prominent men from outside the industry who by their presence and voice added to the dignity as well as to the pleasure of the evening.

The success of the banquet was a tribute to the organizing ability of William Fox. All of the arrangements were on a lavish scale; and the result proved that the producer builded well from the affair's inception. Mr. Fox's selection of Senator James J. Walker as toastmaster was a most popular one. The Senator commanded the closest attention every minute he was on his feet.

It was well the dinner was held. Its influence will be cumulative. It will serve as a spur to others, will show them that real service is not unappreciated. And it will serve as a reminder that the passing of the local option measure, to quote Senator Walker, was, "in the last analysis, in the interest of the people rather than in that of the motion picture men."

Suggest International Exhibition for 1920

THE Chambre Syndicale and the Syndicat Francais des Directeurs de Cinematographers have initiated a movement looking to the holding in Paris in 1920 of an international exhibition of cinematography and its allied industries. Emile Dupont, Senator from Oise, president of the committee of French exhibitions, replying to a letter from the president of the French Syndicate of Cinematograph Managers, say the project has his complete accord and asks to be kept fully informed of the successive steps that may be taken in its furtherance.

The plans so far outlined call for an exposition opening July 15 and running to September 30. Only such businesses and industries as pertain to nations not having been at war with France are eligible to admittance.

Disproving an Ancient Superstition

THERE is an ancient superstition, which laboriously or otherwise has been fostered by generations of jokesmiths, that young married men have no reason to be fond of their mothers-in-law. Cases have been known where the aforesaid young men—sometimes backed up by older and perhaps more widely experienced males—have affirmed all that the humorists have alleged.

Down in Dallas Manager Lou Bissinger, of the Washington Theatre, believes he has disproved the ancient superstition. He announced early this month that the young man who, bearing on his arm his mother-in-law, also bought the first pair of tickets to be sold for a certain performance should be the recipient of a season's pass. When the box office opened there was in line a "fair-sized gathering" of young men accompanied by elderly women.

It would seem off-hand as if Manager Bissinger had spiked the pens of the jokers. It is possible, though, that older sons-in-law sneeringly may intimate the incident proves nothing; they even may state, with an air of conviction, that as between a young man and two wily women the former had absolutely no freedom of action.

New York Again Faces Censorship

THE New York State Conference of Mayors, at a recent session in Albany, decided to name a committee to consider the subject of motion picture censorship. The members are to be "experts" on the general subject. In the suggested composition of the committee will be a representative of the National Board of Review and also of the producers, distributors and exhibitors. It is likely the members who will be able to qualify as experts will be limited to the foregoing. It is not reasonable to assume that those constituting the remainder of the committee will come within the classification—i. e., those from the State Federation of Women's Clubs and the Catholic and Protestant churches of the state.

The conference does not proceed upon the basis that it is advisable to determine whether censorship is necessary. Its secretary plainly states that "censorship in this state is coming." In his mind the only question is in what form shall a censorship measure be framed. The aim of Mr. Capes, who for several years has been a member of the Board of Review, is to prepare data for the benefit of the Legislature of 1920. He avers that the committee should secure information and of the sort that will not injure to any degree the interests represented—in other words, he favors a beneficent censorship.

We'll take the responsibility of suggesting that the Motion Picture Industry of the State of New York as an organization will be disinclined to concede that there is any such thing as beneficent censorship of the official variety—to insist that "there ain't no such animal."

Forewarned is forearmed.

Greetings to Elsie Janis

THERE will be a hearty welcome for Elsie Janis, who is announced this week as among the newcomers to the screen. Few there are anywhere who deserve better of their countrymen. As two million doughboys will assure you, she is an "ace." And when that number of soldiers agree on anything it's a safe bet they are right.

Tolerance Has the Call in Adrian

STICK a pin in your map of Michigan where one of the dots is marked "Adrian." Picture showmen owe a vote of thanks to two Adrian men of religious training who have spoken of and acted favorably toward Sunday showings of screen offerings. It is to be especially noted that both the Protestant and Roman Catholic faiths are represented by these crusaders for better Sunday conditions.

"Take away the Sunday motion picture," says the Protestant minister, "and you'll find something really injurious springing up in its place."

"There is a certain class of people," declares the priest, "going to extremes to control the habits of others."

In the local fight to maintain Sunday openings the opponents are sponsoring an ordinance that would inflict a $50 fine and ten days' imprisonment upon showmen who charge an admission to display films as an offset to the call of the golf links, the chug of the motor car and the swish of the fishing line on the first day of the week.

Two of Adrian's clergymen are helping the showmen. They have no fear of picture "opposition" afflicting them with empty pews.

Northwestern Exhibitors Are Cheerful

WE print this week a story from the Northwest, as we in the East refer to the Minneapolis territory. It is a story of cheer, of prosperity. Exhibitors are swarming into Minneapolis to arrange for their summer bookings. With them they bring a tale of big crops and of a tendency toward an increase in the price of theatre admissions. Dan Chamberlain sounds a note of warning in a statement to the effect that "the exhibitor who continues to raise his price is driving a certain element of his patronage to the legitimate theatre." Mr. Chamberlain qualifies his expression of opinion by saying that his reference is to wholesale advances without regard to the character of the pictures being shown. The statement is worth reading in full.

Texans Build Against the Future

TEXANS do things in a big way. Eastland, in the oil belt, furnishes the latest example of their hustling propensities. Here is a town of 3,000 persons which soon will have a theatre—the Connellee—that will cost $90,000. It is a fine and a courageous example of discounting the future.

Last Call for St. Louis

THIS week is sounded the last call for the convention in St. Louis, which opens June 25 and closes the 28th. The New York State Exhibitors have elected three delegates, and of these two are of the triumvirate which led in the successful fight for local option on Sunday opening. They should be able to impart to their confreres much valuable information as to how the victory was achieved. Perhaps, after all, it simmers down to a simple matter of effective organization—and surely enough that's a subject in which exhibitors everywhere are vitally interested.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD hopes there will be a large gathering of picture showmen and that much constructive good will flow from the sessions. So far as can be seen there are no storms on the horizon, not even a cloud, to mar the peace of the occasion. With nothing of a factional sort to interfere with calm consideration of exhibitor problems we are entitled to hope for a most successful meeting.

The Danger of Half-Truths

THE efforts of the organization which calls itself the Motion Picture and Theatrical Co-operative Association will unquestionably receive the support of the motion picture trade papers so long as it confines itself to matters that are free from partisanship. If it does not represent the whole industry and permits itself to be used by any group of producers, exhibitors or allied interests for private ends it cannot, of course, measurably succeed. In listening to the opinions expressed by the different speakers who are directly interested in the production of motion pictures it must do all in its power to detect the half-truth when it is uttered at its meetings and to make every effort to have the full facts brought out on every subject under discussion.

This warning is the result of the attack on the star system made by a speaker at the meeting of the association on June 14. To imply the wisdom of the wiping out of the entire system by failure to explain that there are stars who are doing their full share in advancing the screen is to mislead a portion of the members of the association who are not familiar with conditions. It will take many meetings and talks by many classes of speakers before the available list of known facts which will give the motion picture the expected uplift will be in the possession of the association.

As originally outlined the scope of this association put the labors of President Wilson and the entire Peace Conference in the piker class. Sane council and the wisdom which comes with experience will enable it to accomplish more than its share of good—even if it fall far short of the ambitious but visionary plans of its first concept.

DISCUSS STATE CENSORSHIP AT ALBANY

Conference of Mayors Empower Their President to Appoint Committee to Investigate Problem

Albany, June 16.

WHAT probably will be the most important step thus far taken in New York State in determining the needs of censorship, has been made by the State Conference of Mayors in empowering President Walter R. Stone, of Syracuse, to name a special committee of experts to study the problem so far as this state is directly concerned. This commitee will report at the mid winter conference in this city in 1920. The committee, as suggested, will consist of a representative of the following: the National Board of Review, the film producers, distributors and exhibitors, as well as a member of the State Conference itself. It is probable that the State Federation of Women's clubs, which has been actively interested not only in censorship but along Sunday motion picture lines, will also be asked to name a representative to attend the committee meetings. It is also planned to have some representative present of both the Catholic and the Protestant churches of the state.

This action on the part of the State Mayors' Conference came at the tenth annual meeting held in Schenectady this past week, which was attended by practically every mayor in the state, and also by the city clerks and others identified with municipal life.

Secretary Capes Makes Suggestion.

The resolution was recommended by the advisory committee of the State Mayors Conference, of which Mayor Samuel A. Carlson, of Jamestown, is chairman, and followed a suggestion on the part of Secretary W. P. Capes.

"There is no question," said Mr. Capes, in speaking before the Conference of Mayors, "but that censorship in this state is coming, and I think that it is within the province of this gatherin· of the heads of practically every city in the state to do our share in solving as far as is possible this problem, in order that our findings may be presented, if desired, at the next session of the Legislature, when some action will no doubt be taken in the way of providing a state-wide censorship of film.

Not Certain What Is Best.

"This has been brought about and intensified by the passage of the bill permitting localities to themselves decide whether or not they wish Sunday motion picture shows. I have been for several years a member of the National Board of Review and am frank in saying that I do not know just what is best for the Empire State, and with that idea in mind I have suggested to the advisory committee that the president of the association name a committee of experts, men and women who are familiar with all the various phases of the business, from the producers' and exhibitors' end as well as from the standpoint of the church and the morals of the growing boys and girls.

"Guiding Light to Other States."

"I am firmly convinced there is an urgent need for some sort of censorship, and the Mayors' Conference in taking this official step will secure valuable information which will become available for any committee from the Legislature which may be intrusted next year with the drafting of a bill along censorship lines. We have several months before us in which to study the problem in all its various angles, and I trust the outcome will bring us most valuable information and of the sort that will not injure to any degree the interests represented, and that the state itself will be benefited, and through this informatiou prove a guiding light to other states." Williams Resigns from World.

Frank H. Williams, who for the past two years has been assistant advertis-ing manager of the World Film Corporation, has resigned to accept a position on the editorial staff of Printer's Ink. Mr. Williams has for some time been contributing articles about advertising to this publication, and his extensive newspaper, printing and advertising experience makes him particularly well qualified for assuming his new responsibilities.

Announcement is made of the appointment of J. L. Shipley as the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation manager in Des Moines. Mr. Shipley was formerly on the reportorial staff of a prominent Des Moines daily.

CAPITAL FILMS PREPARE FOR BUSINESS

Old Metro Studio Has Been Secured for Series of Two-Reel Pictures Made by Three Companies

E. C. ECKELS, assistant general manager of the Capital Film Company, when seen last week in the company's offices, in the Consumers Building, was busy getting in readiness for the handling of the new two-reel pictures which are now being produced in the West. He spent two weeks in Los Angeles recently, and secured a five-year lease on the old Metro studios, which afford ample space and facilities for the working of five companies at the same time.

Work was started June 9 by the Neal Hart, Al Jennings and Wallace Coburn companies. Neal Hart is known as the "merry-go man" of moving pictures; Al Jennings as "the bandit king of the screen," and Wallace Coburn as the "only living white chief Indian" in the country.

The Hart productions will show him as the star in twenty-four super-short Western features for the year, and he will have twenty-four persons in the working cast. Al Jennings will also have a series of twenty-four two-reel features for the year, with a cast of eighteen, and Wallace Coburn will appear in a series of twelve Indian Western two-reelers during the year, with a working cast of twelve.

Will Produce Two-reel Films.

Mr. Eckels emphasizes that the aim and policy of the Capital Film Company is to produce two-reel pictures of such quality that they will possess the feature pull. In each picture of the three series mentioned there will be a compeling punch in the story, as well as incidents of an unusual, hair-raising type.

In order to vary the casting of the principal parts (outside of the stars) in each production, there will be an interchange of the members of the three producing companies. This will serve to quicken the interest of spectators, Mr. Eckels believes.

Neil Hart will be his own director. He will be assisted by Al Russell, brother of William Russell, of William Russell Productions. E. H. Van Dyke will direct Al Jennings' productions, and Johnnie Powers (former directing manager of Francis X. Bushman) will have charge of the Wallace Coburn pictures.

Use Old Metro Studios.

The three companies are now making the interiors of several pictures in the old Metro studios, under the direct supervision of C. M. Giffen, after which they will go several ways to film the exteriors. Hart will make his first outside scenes in Wyoming, on a thousand-acre sheep ranch. Jennings will make his exteriors chiefly in Arizona and New Mexico, where he held up trains years ago. He is now widely known as "America's reformed outlaw." Wallace Coburn will make all his exteriors on Indian reservations through the country.

The stories for the three series of two-reel features will be submitted by the foremost writers of thrilling Western life, and C. M. Giffen will have the final word on the acceptance of any or all of them.

Mr. Eckels advised the writer that the home office of the Capital Film Company has been changed from Indianapolis to the Consumers Building, Chicago.

J. E. Willis Now Manages Triangle's Chicago Office

J. E. WILLIS, well known in film circles in New York, Chicago and elsewhere, was appointed manager of Triangle's Chicago office, Monday, June 9, to succeed R. E. Bradford, who resigned to accept another position. Mr. Willis has been actively engaged in the distributing business, in various official capacities, for ten years. For the past two years he has been a member of the firm of Willis & Eckels, engaged in manufacturing Filmcraft trailers, announcements, titles, commerical films, etc.

Mr. Willis expresses himself as much pleased with the business being done by Triangle in Chicago and with conditions generally in the Chicago office. He received numerous congratulations from brother exchange managers and exhibitors on his appointment, and has taken hold of his duties with all his oldtime vim.

Ben W. Beadell Makes Exciting Trip in Indiana

BEN W. BEADELL, sales manager of Select, had an exciting trip in Indiana last week. Thursday, June 12, while traveling on the Interurban R. R., between Kokomo and Frankfort, a cyclone and cloudburst was encountered. For over three-quarters of a mile the roadbed was washed out, on the Frankfort side, and the train was forced to return to Kokomo. On the way back all the men passengers were obliged to get out on three occasions and assist in removing from the track Interurban stations which had been washed from their foundations and obstructed the train.

Had Narrow Escape.

No one was injured; but the keen eyed motorman, in the midst of the storm, narrowly escaped a catastrophe by clamping his breaks just before the train reached the broken rails, while speeding towards Kokomo.

Mr. Beadell reported satisfactory business both in Fort Wayne and Kokomo.

Pioneer Film Corporation to Open Office in Chicago

M. H. HOFFMAN, general manager of the Pioneer Film Corporation, New York, spent two days in the city during the week of Monday, June 8, arranging for the opening of an exchange office in Chicago. While here he signed a lease for permanent quarters in the new film building that will be erected on Wabash avenue and Ninth street. This organization is handling "The Boomerang," with Henry B. Walthal, on the state rights plan.

Ziegfeld Showing to Capacity.

The Ziegfeld Theatre was renovated and redecorated recently, and an improved ventilating system has been installed. Messrs. Jacoby and Linick, who hold the lease on the house, report capacity business. "The Third Degree" went over big for two weeks and was succeeded by H. B. Warner's, "The Man Who Turned White," which showed to excellent business. Constance Talmadge, in "Happiness a la Mode," was the attraction for the week of Saturday, June 14.

"Secret Service" at Orchestra Hall.

Robert Warwick, in "Secret Service," is the Paramount-Artcraft special attraction which heads the program at Orchestra Hall for the week of Sunday, June 15. In addition, the bills announce a Paramount-Bray Pictograph, an International News reel and a Burton Holmes travelogue.

"True Heart Susie," a Griffith feature with a gripping pull, showed to capacity the week preceding.

Stork Visits Flaherty's Home.

Buck Bill Dies in Last Hours of Legislation

THE Illinois Legislature closed its session Wednesday night, June 18. In the last days of the session over seventy-four bills were awaiting final disposition and it was expected that many of them would not be reached. On Thursday morning C. C. Pettijohn received from President Schaeffer, of the League, information to the effect that the Buck bill had been killed.

Northern Ohio Towns Join with Miami Valley League

THE membership committee of the Miami Valley Exhibitors League went to Lima, Ohio, and other northern state towns June 10 in quest of new members. The trip was a success. The first stop of importance was made at Lima, where a meeting of the theatre managers had been called. As a result of this meeting the Lima exhibitors were enrolled in the league 100 per cent. Several who were not present signified their intention of joining at a later date.

There were also exhibitors from Bellefountaine, Sidney, Van Wert, Wapokanita, and Delphos at the Lima meeting and representatives from these towns were enrolled as members.

The committee who did the work and who were appointed by President John Seifert, were: Mark Gates, managing director of the Dayton Theatre; A. F. Kinzeler, manager of the Elite and Wyoming theatres; and A. McL. Marshall, legal adviser for the League.

Members of the committee stated last week that if enough time had been taken practically the entire northern half of the state would have been enrolled. It is planned to later get the smaller towns in that section. Within the next week this same committee will journey to Middletown, Hamilton, Franklin, Miamisburg and other towns south of Dayton.

Harry Levey Inaugurates Educational Film Library

ONE of the most interesting developments in the educational and industrial film world is announced by Harry Levey, general manager of the educational and industrial departments of the Universal Film Company. This is the inauguration of the first comprehensive educational and industrial film library in his country. It will have forty-six branches in the United States, and twenty in foreign countries.

This step is being taken in co-operation with Dr. Francis Holley, director of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, which will place its thousands of film subjects at the disposal of the Universal library.

Universal's complete program, which embraces some 1,000 industrial and educational subjects, and those available through the bureau, will be offered free of charge to corporations throughout the country who make a practice of showing this type of picture to their employes.

The distribution of the pictures will be in charge of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, through the state universities. The bureau plans to provide each organization desirous of using this library with a service card which will be countersigned at the bureau.

Each one of the many Universal exchanges throughout the country will serve as the distributing point for the territory in which it is located.

"Salome" Has Long Runs in Large Cities in Italy

"SALOME" has been having a fine time in Rome, according to advices reported by the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation. "Not only has 'Salome' had big runs in Rome," says the bureau, "but there is a constant demand for the picture from many other cities of Italy. Apart from the love of art which exists in Italy, the soldiers on leave or demobilized are eager to forget the hardships and horrors of war, while the working people are receiving high wages. Consequently motion pictures are enjoying unprecedented prosperity—and this prosperity manifests itself in an enormous demand for American film."

One of the interesting phases of the picture situation reported from Italy is the demand for finer and larger theatres and on this account an architectural commission is to come to America to study design and construction.

Los Angeles Now Looks Upon Industry as Asset—Neilan Encounters Difficulties in Attack on Accordion

By Giebler

I WISH that every one who believes that a prophet is never without honor save in his own country could arise and come to Los Angeles. The Movies are being honored right here in their own bailiwick.

Civic bodies are cultivating us. The Chamber of Commerce has adorned the street cars with tasteful little signs, calling attention to the magnitude of the movies as an industry. Pleasing paragraphs, pulsating with praise, are appearing in the daily press. Edifying editorials are being written about us.

We are no longer like the unloved orphan child at the picnic; we are looked upon with the beaming eye of approval. The public is urged to take us to its bosom and cherish us—nourish us with the milk of human kindness.

Why all this pother?

Los Angeles Discovers Movies at Last.

We are an asset. It has been discovered that we spend a lot of money in the town; that a large number of people are employed in the studios; that many feet of lumber and many tons of building material are used in the construction of our sets; that many sheepskins are used in making cowboy pants for our western actors; that we burn much gas in our motors, and that we inhabit many bungalows and apartments

We are even more important as an asset than the tourist. The tourist is an undoubted asset, but he is seldom, if ever, an attraction. Some folk, indeed, say he is an abomination, because of his habit of asking questions—wanting to know what the steam radiators in an apartment house are used for—why oranges cost more here than they do at home, and other things like that.

We are greater than the tourist because we are an attraction as well as an asset. We not only qualify as an asset by keeping both feet on the gas in the spending line, but we serve as a lure to get the tourist out here, and once he is here we amuse him and keep him from straying away to look at the alleged wonders of rival towns.

Vicinage Has Nothing on L. A.

What tourist would go over to San Gabriel to gaze on the big grapevine when he can feast his eyes on Fatty Arbuckle? Why should any one pay car fare to visit the ostrich ranch at Pasadena when he can go down to the Alex lobby and see the actors parade on the magic rug? Who will say that any old mission is a grander sight than Charlie Murray? What visitor would go traipsing out to the alligator farm when he can see Charlie Chaplin by going out to Hollywood? Why should any one want to look at Mount Baldy when Billy Parsons is available?

Of course it goes without saying we are grateful for the nice things that are being said about us, and if the local press will stop their smalltown habit of calling every poor little rattle-brained floozie of an extra girl a film star the minute she gets in bad with the police our cup will positively slop over with happiness.

Everybody is happy, hot, dusty and busy—and working like the proverbial Trojan.

King Baggot Hits Town.

Carl Laemmle is out at Universal City, revising things, arranging for new stuff and a big busy summer and fall. Nazimova is again in our midst. Will Rogers came in last Sunday, and was met at the depot by a reception committee from the Goldwyn studio. King Baggot has arrived, filled with serious plans and specifications for a new serial.

Allan Dwan is drilling eight hundred extras down behind Inceville for the big smash to "Soldiers of Fortune," and Marshall Neilan and the Anita Stewart company are getting ready to go to Kentucky to make the final scenes and the big race-track stuff for "In Old Kentucky."

Speaking of Marshall Neilan, I went out to the Anita Stewart studio a few days ago and paid a visit to Mickey and his gang.

It was a most interesting visit and full of important discoveries. The first discovery was that Mickey Neilan is a real simon-pure native son. In spite of the fact that most people think that Native Sons are as common as ground squirrels and palm trees, they are really a very scarce article.

Mickey Is Uncovered as Native Son.

I am glad I found out that Mickey is a native son, and hereafter when I am showing an Easterner around and have pointed out the mountains, the loquats, the phenomenon of an orange, a lemon and a grapefruit all growing on the same tree, and explained that we have as many kinds of eucalyptus trees as Mr. Heinz has pickles, and he will remark, as they always do: "Well, I have seen all of the natural wonders but a native son," I'll just trot him around to Mickey Neilan.

"Behold," I'll say, "a native son. What is a native son? A Native Son that has done something to make the old state proud of him."

And then I'll recite a little biography of Mickey which goes something like this:

"Born in Frisco in 1891. Exhibited a tendency for things theatrical at the age of four by stealing a ride on a stage coach. Learned to whistle at six, and recited Horatious at the Bridge, with appropriate gestures, at ten. Was able to repeat Shakespeare backward at fifteen, and soon after this went on the stage with Belasco stock company.

Some Things Neilan Has Done.

"After this played in Morosco stock, then toured the country with Barney Bernard. Was in pictures with Kalem, American, Universal, Biograph, Selig and Lasky, and was director for Hayakawa, Marguerite Clark, Elsie Ferguson, George Cohan, Mary Pickford, Blanche Sweet and many others. Made many pictures, including "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm,' 'M'liss,' 'Stella Maris,' 'Unpardonable Sin' and 'Daddy Long Legs.' Now getting ready to build his own studio and operate as an independent producer and make pictures according to his own ideas."

Mickey has a specially selected gang of helpers that he carries around with him wherever he goes, and the gang was all there, and I had a chance to size them up.

There were: Al Green, who is a pretty well known director himself, as assistant to Mickey; Buck Ewing, light expert, who has invented a monster 20,000 candlepower light that absolutely takes the flicker out of studio lighting; Tom Held, prop man; William Lanahan, carpenter; William Carr, buyer of supplies; George Richalavie (this makes the seventh time I have spelled George's last name wrong), casting director; Lucita Squires, scenarios, and Tony Guadio, head cameraman, with Henry Cronjager and Benny Pierpoali, his assistants.

Has Bill Parsons Tried This?

Tony Gaudio was wearing one of the new hopeful haircuts. Tony says that if any man who is afflicted with a briefness of foliage on his dome will have a barber mow a path from his brow to the back of his neck with the clippers, and then slick it up with a razor, that when the hair grows back into the path it will be thick and wavy and heavy, and altogether so splendid that he will be both pleased and astonished.

Mickey was making stuff for "In Old Kentucky" while I was at the studio, with Anita Stewart as Madge; Mahlon Hamilton as Frank Larson; Edward Coxne as Joe Lowery; Charles Arling as Holton; Seena Owen as Barbara Holton, and Edward Connelly as Colonel Doolittle.

They were making the interior of Madge's home.

I always like to watch a scene being made; it is always illuminating, and so much can be learned from it. My musical education vastly benefited by this scene.

Gets Poet and Peasant Out of Turkey.

Mickey Neilan had an accordion, one of those old-fashioned dutch pull-outs, which he gave to Miss Stewart.

"Play a little piece on it," he said, "and dance around the room like Madge would have done when she was happy."

Miss Stewart took the instrument in her hands and looked at it askance.

"I'm not sure I can," she said.

"Oh, go on," said Mickey. "Stir up something; try 'Turkey in the Straw,' that's easy."

Miss Stewart tried. Music emerged from the accordion, but it was not "Turkey," it sounded something like Poet and Peasant.

Mickey looked on with scorn.

"Give it to me," he said, "I'll show you."

He pulled out the pull-out about a yard; a smile of satisfaction played over his features, and the sweetly solemn strains of "Old Black Joe" came out of the accordion.

Getting the Worst Out of Instrument.

Everybody laughed, and Mickey looked astonished.

"What's the matter?" he asked.

"That's not 'Turkey in the Straw,' it's 'Old Black Joe,'" said Miss Stewart, severely. "Let me try again."

She tried again, tried nobly, but no Turkey.

"It's no use," she said. "Where's Rudie? He can play any kind of a tune on any kind of an instrument. Somebody find him."

Miss Stewart referred to her husband, Rudolph Cameron, and some one started to look for him.

All the time this had been going on I had been humming "Turkey in the Straw" under my breath, and I stepped forward now in my usual helpful manner and offered to whistle the air for them. I was going good when Mr. Cameron came up.

"It's all right," said Mickey. "We're getting it."

"Getting what?" asked Mr. Cameron.

"Turkey in the Straw," said Mickey.

"That's not Turkey, that 'Suwanee River' in rag time."

He then showed us how Turkey sounded, and he may be right, but what I want to know is, who changed the name of that tune?

"JOAN THE WOMAN" SUIT IS FINISHED

Complainant Not Wishing to Press Charge, Alleged Copyright Case Dismissed by Knox

THE indictment returned in November, 1917, against Fred Beck, Louis Weiss and Leo Singer on a charge of distributing films alleged to infringe on the photoplay entitled "Joan the Woman," was dismissed by Judge Knox in the United States District Court on June 16 upon the motion of the Government.

Assistant United States Attorney Taylor explained that the defendants have made restitution to the Cardinal Film Company, the complainant in the case, which no longer desires to have the criminal charge pressed, and that it was not likely a conviction could be obtained as the validity of the film company's copyright could not be legally established.

Proof Cannot Be Obtained.

"It would be necessary for the Government to prove the validity of the alleged copyright of the Cardinal Film Company," declared Mr. Taylor. "The requisite proof on this point cannot be obtained." He also added that one of the principal witnesses in the case has disappeared and there is little probability that a conviction might be obtained.

Notwithstanding the dismissal of the case it is believed that the main object of the indictment has been achieved as it has taught a salutary lesson that the rights of film companies in copyrights to plays must be respected and that was all that the Cardinal Film Company sought to accomplish.

A Victory for Film Industry.

At the time the indictment was returned Ralph Kohn, counsel for the Cardinal Film Company, regarded it as a distinct victory for the film industry in the fight being waged by the leading producers to protect their property rights from infringement by less scrupulous persons.

John B. Johnston was appointed receiver of the Crystal Film Company on June 16 by Judge Martin T. Manton under a bond of $25,000.

Scenic Vacation Trip Is Offered Picture Patrons

HERE'S an idea for billing "educationals" and "scenics" that every exhibitor playing that class of films can "hop to" with avidity—and profit. The scheme seems to have originated with Loeb & Lazarus, managers of the New Albany Airdrome, Brooklyn, but it is just as practicable for an indoor as it is for an outdoor theatre. Loeb & Lazarus have distributed handbills—about 15 inches long by 4 inches wide—with the heading "Take Your Vacation Trip" at the New Albany Air Drome.

In the specific instance of the New Albany "scenics" are featured Monday and Friday. The bill is divided by fine rules into 22 sections, each section bearing a date prominently. Between the lines referred to by date is a description of the scenic to be then shown.

For instance (we quote): Monday, June 23. New Brunswick, Canada. (Forests of New Brunswick, the greatest game region of Northeastern Canada.) Starting into the woods. Then follows one separate line naming the feature for that date: Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs."

List the Whole Summer's Trip.

Attractive main captions are given to the various "scenics": The Canadian Rockies, The World's Road, When the Mountains Call, and similar appeals to the heat-oppressed individual are given prominent type. As the whole summer's schedule appears on the one bill, prospective patrons are given a chance to pick out their favorites—even though they may not be attracted every time.

"Buy tickets for the entire trip now and save money," is a line that catches the eye under the last dated offering (Sept. 5). For twelve weeks, twice a week, the season price is $3, with 48 cent war tax extra. For children a rate of $2, plus 24 cents war tax, is announced. "Tickets cover all expenses," the bill informs, "except sleeping accommodations—not allowed."

GOHLMAN RAPS SINGLE PICTURES

Manager of Dallas' Rex Says System Would Mean the Installation of Auction Block in Exchanges—Declares It Would Mean Withdrawal of "Class" from Industry

By Leon S. Gohlman
Manager the Rex, Dallas

NOTHING so degrading to the motion picture industry as a whole, and nothing so dangerously vital to the motion picture exhibitors of America as a profession, has ever threatened filmdom as the "single picture" booking policy which, it seems, has some advocates. I had thought seriously about the single picture system before the Moving Picture World published the statement of James D. Williams, manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit. After reading his concise analysis of it I am now more confident than ever that if you want to make auction blocks out of your distributing agencies all you have to do is to accept this policy. You might as well go hang out the red flag. It means that Exhibitor John Doe is going to bid and outbid Exhibitor John Roe.

I think Mr. Williams hit the nail squarely on the head when he said the "single picture" policy will make cutthroats of the exhibitors. It certainly will. Where formerly the various exhibitors of a city through local constructive enterprises were friendly and coperated for the upbuilding of the city in which they lived and conducted their business, the "single picture" policy makes such an admirable relationship just about impossible. It gives one exhibitor a never-ending grudge against another.

Says Auctioning Is Distasteful.

The feature I have named in the foregoing is going to prove a mighty weighty argument against the "single picture" policy which provides for cutthroating. It alone, I believe, is enough to condemn the "single picture" policy. I doubt if there are Chambers of Commerce and commercial bodies throughout the United States who would approve for an instant of any system that allowed every man in the amusement enterprise in the various cities of this nation to go on the stand and bid against one another. It is absolutely against the law of city building. I'll grant you this—that once in a while you can put on a public auction, put out your flag and get a pretty good crowd together, but did you ever notice what kind of a crowd took part in this festivity. You'll notice that it was a very mediocre class. That's just the point. Anything that smacks of auctioning is very distasteful to people of business ideals.

System Would Destroy "Class."

I'll guarantee you that provided the "single picture" were forced upon—and I don't think it is even possible that it may be—the exhibitors, the class of showmen would withdraw from the business. Manufacturers' associations and commercial clubs in our country today are doing everything possible and even going to the expense of hiring experts at fabulous sums to bring about a better spirit of business relations between the commercial backbones of their respective cities. That's why there are Rotary and Kiwanis clubs established throughout the nation. And you'll notice that in practically every city theatre managers are among the most ardent supporters of the clubs and among the most active workers for any bit of civic betterment. In Dallas hardly a general campaign is entered into without one of our theatre managers being in charge of some division or other.

Many Arguments Against Plan.

There are hundreds of arguments which could be used against the "single picture" policy of doing business, but I don't think there are any which are as strong as the downright and outright assertion that the theatre managers themselves are of too high a caste to condescend to allow any man or group of men to decree that they shall be herded together and transformed into cut-throats every time they decide to book pictures. In the days when motion picture exhibitors were looked upon with distrust this system of bidding against one another might have worked for a while; but not any more. It seems hard to me to realize that people who understand the magnitude of the motion picture industry today can for a moment make themselves believe that the men who make the motion picture business possible—I mean the exhibitors—will even consider such a paltry method of getting their films. It would be the joke of the business men the world over: Getting your films by bidding against your competitor.

Opens Door for Graft.

And think of the graft that would naturally be possible. Think of the friendship which the various exhibitors would try to cultivate with the manager of the auction block. Think of the bids that would be made only from the floor and which would be lowered when the time came to turn the report into the head office. Just think of the possibility for unlimited shiftlessness, gambling, mismanagement and aggravation for the exhibitors and see just how long the better class of them would stay in the motion picture business. I've got some friends among exhibitors and I know lots of them who would rather drive peanut wagons than have to stand on the auction floor and bid in the open against their friendly competitors for what they want.

Looking at the matter from a purely business standpoint, to the best of my candid belief, there is not an advantage to be gained by the "single picture" policy which could in any way compensate for its shortcomings.

Would Lower Presentation Standards.

It would lower the standard of picture presentation. The problem of putting pictures before the public would turn into a proposition of "let George do it." It would be this way because Exhibitor A wouldn't want to spend any more money than necessary in exploiting a certain star because he would feel that Exhibitor B would reap the benefits from the money he spent in making that particular star a local favorite. Thus the standard of motion picture presentation is lowered. Why? Because the various exhibitors will absolutely refuse to outdo one another in boosting any or every offering. They won't care. They play what they get and they won't care how it's played. It would be the rottenest way to make a living I can think of. Being an exhibitor and being forced to use the "single picture" policy, I mean.

The Public Would Lose.

And have you looked at the matter from this angle? The public would lose. Let us say, for instance, that Charlie Chaplin's newest comedy is to be booked on a "single picture" basis and to be awarded to the highest bidder at every exchange. All right. There is lots of scuffle at the film exchange wherein all of the excitement and turmoil of a stock exchange is experienced. Finally by outbidding, outyelling and out-talking all other contenders, one of the local exhibitors gets the film. He has had to pay a high price for the feature. This is undoubted.

My idea of a good arrangement is that used by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. They have the star-series or non-star series with the one-picture cancellation clause. What could be fairer to the exhibitor? He can go to sleep at night.

Policy Would Play Hob with Business.

I believe the general practice of the "single picture" policy would plainly play Hob with the whole show business and sooner or later disgust every exhibitor to such an extent that he would be glad to get out of the game even at a loss.

I have taken it for granted that you mean just what you said in your editorial in your May 31 issue, inviting your exhibitor subscribers to express their opinions. This one of mine looks long from where I sit, but it isn't a starter to what I really think.

And just one thing more. The Moving Picture World used to be called the Old Bible among us fellows down here. We've changed our term the last few months. With all the snappy idea and good promotion articles you've been publishing, we call it the New Testament. Keep up your good work. We're for you strong.

MARY MILES MINTER REALART STAR

Her Mother, as Guardian, Signs Long Term Contract for Popular Favorite with New Firm

MARY MILES MINTER has signed for three and one-half years to star in Realart pictures. She is the first of the artists to be announced by Realart. Immediately after completing the agreement, which has been under negotiations during some weeks, Miss Minter left with her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, for Atlantic City, on her first vacation in years. She is scheduled to begin work Monday, June 30, in New York, on her first photoplay under the new arrangements.

All the pictures are to be made by the Mary Miles Minter Productions Company. They will come at the rate of six attractions yearly, or a total of twenty productions during the period of the contract. It is stated these are to be made solely from big novels and stage successes.

Miss Minter Still a Minor.

The actual signing of Miss Minter's contract was done by her mother, Mrs. Shelby. This was necessary because the youthful star is still several years under age.

a star on the screen for five years—not in child parts but impersonating young women—and is still a minor. Miss Minter, in all her screen productions, has been a star. Although she started young she never played small parts.

Her first screen part was in "The Fairy and the Waif," in which Percy Halton, of "The Miracle Man" fame, was featured with her. This was made in 1914 by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, and distributed on the World program. Her next contract was with Metro. Then followed her long-term engagement with the American.

Played on "Legitimate" Stage.

She had the unique experience for one so young of appearing for four consecutive years in one part on the speaking stage, the title role in "The Littlest Rebel." Before that she had played in the companies of Nat Goodwin, Robert Hilliard, Minnie Maddern Fiske, Bertha Kalich, and Dustin and William Farnum.

Under her new engagement Miss Minter will work in New York for the first time in four years. She has transferred her residence here from Santa Barbara, where she has lived and made her productions in the past.

Box Office Records Broken by Bathing Girls and Film

EVER since the idea was evolved by Sol Lesser—to take Mack Sennett's beautiful bathing girls along with the film, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," house records are said to have been sent to smash. The bathing girls appear in divertisements and posses in conjunction with the picture, and the featured artist of the production, Bothwell Browne, is also appearing in person in a specially arranged mystic dance.

In San Francisco at the Tivoli the week's receipts were $10,300, while a two-weeks' engagement at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, at the very door of the home of the Sennett productions, the receipts were $20,100. At the Rivoli in Denver the receipts were $9,000 and at the Turner & Denken Theatre in Oakland the accumulation at the end of the week was $9,850.

They're Coming to Broadway!

Indianapolis paid tribute for one week to the extent of $11,300 while at the Lyric in Cincinnati the weekly amount was $10,700. The Hippodrome in Cleveland showed a big week's income with $12,240. This was followed by a six days' showing at the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, $11,000. At the Majestic in Portland, Ore., the gross was $10,250 and at the Adams Theatre in Detroit a week's receipts amounted to $9,500. All of which indicate that the public are eager to see this novel entertainment, which will be seen at the Broadway Theatre, New York, in a fortnight.

Majestic Continues with Pictures.

The Majestic Theatre, Dallas, has closed down its vaudeville season and, departing from former custom, will run the summer out with high class moving picture features. Sunday, June 15, it presented its first moving picture show, "The Little Shepherd of the Hills." The house was crowded. Majestic theatres of the Interstate Amusement Company in all parts of Texas will present pictures during the summer months.

Iris Theatre Opens.

The Iris Theatre, the largest one-floored house in the South, has opened in Houston. The theatre, which is located on Travis street, seats 1,000 persons on the main floor. There are no galleries. It has a special cooling plant and the interior and lobby are finished in decorative green tile.

Don't be content merely to keep your house going—keep it growing. That's the better way. The sure way to success.

CLEARING THE CANADIAN SITUATION

Legislation Ordering the Elimination of "Old Glory" from Films Shown Across the Border Seems to Be the Logical Outcome of Naturally Developed Sentiment

By L. B. N. Gnaedinger

RECENT passing of legislation by the Canadian province of Ontario requiring that exchangemen, exhibitors and operators be British citizens, following on the province's action in last November forbidding the showing of the American flag in films and stipulating that topical weeklies be British, seems at first sight to be an example of unwarranted prejudice. In support of such an opinion would be the fact that the flags of the other allies of Great Britain have had no similar steps taken against them.

The reason for Ontario's action is, of course, obvious. Canada, lying next door to a nation which produces more moving picture films than any other, is naturally deluged with such products. American producers are not backward about introducing Old Glory into their pictures; as a result the average Canadian was shown the American flag easily ten times oftener than he was shown his own. Similar action would have been taken if similar conditions had arisen in connection with the standard of any other nation. The present measures have been adopted for strictly impersonal reasons.

American Films Preponderate.

This legislation shows that American films have assumed a preponderating position in the Canadian field, for otherwise a question of the subject-matter of films would not have been made a cause for parliamentary action. In fact, since shortly after 1914 the American product has monopolized Canada.

That the United States should have a large proportion of control was inevitable, owing to its favorable position and the fact that any film ever exposed in Canada was originally manufactured south of the line. The war, however, intensified this situation.

Thus it would seem that the advantageous position of the States has much to do with their film supremacy in Canada. That this is the main reason for its success is indicated by the action of the Ontario legislature. That action, as will be explained later, is not by any means a movement originating at the top, but is a response to a growingly insistent appeal from the mass of voters.

Explanation of "Popularity."

The "popularity" of American films in Canada is perhaps best explained by a reference to the "popularity" of the works of Charles Dickens in the States fifty years ago. At that time the English novelist had more of his works sold here than did any other author. Yet his books did not deal with the scenes and problems with which Americans at that time were most vitally interested.

On the contrary, they were permeated with the atmosphere of English life, not only by reason of their subject matter, but by the very style and idiom in which they were written. And at that time there was a distaste frankly expressed by the American people for England and things English.

The reason for the popularity of this author, unsympathetic toward things American, is summed up in the one word—cheapness. Dickens never rereceived a cent of royalty for his works sold in the United States—owing to the copyright laws existing at the time—and therefore no native author could compete with him.

Exhibitor Wants Cheap Films.

It is a similar condition in the world of film, arising, however, from different reasons, which has put the American film paramount in Canada. It is again a question of cheapness. American enterprise has resulted in American producers being able to offer better prices to the Canadian showman than can their European rivals.

Not only that, but the territorial situation of the United States producers gives them added supremacy. The Canadian exhibitor is naturally out for money, and nothing can equal to him the one great argument for purchasing the American product—cheapness.

Thus the Canadian seeker for diversion is deluged with a flood of narrative in which he cannot possibly have any more interest than could the American of fifty years ago have had in the narratives of Charles Dickens. Not that the American film does not possess an interest in itself just as did the novel of the English author; but it has a circulation in Canada out of all proportion to such interest just as once did a book of Dickens in the United States. It is again a case of commercial expediency offsetting public demand.

Reason for Popularity in England.

If this be so, it may be asked why the American film is so popular in Great Britain, where, presumably, there is no more interest in things American than there is in Canada. The answer is that before the war the American product was leaven in the mass of British-made films, French and Italian, with which the market of the United Kingdom was liberally supplied. The share in the British market of the American film was so small, when compared with its monopoly in Canada, that it provided, not a monotonous diet, but an element of novel seasoning.

Given in adequate proportions, films dealing with American subjects were considered as novel in England as would be films dealing with Argentina, South Africa, or any other territory a sufficiently far away—on the theory that the picturesqueness of a country increases with the square of the distance of the observer from it.

American Films Adapted.

In view of the competition they were up against in England, American producers were forced to make their products especially acceptable to the British cinema-goer. Several American companies shipped companies and outfits to the old country in order that they might take advantage of locations which would make their products palatable to the British public. Films were and are specially edited in order not to run against local prejudice or opinion.

Canadian Wishes Not Consulted.

But when it came to Canada, the favorable position of the United States rendered all such precautions unnecessary. The American producer knew that the Canadian exhibitor had to fill his program, and that, especially since 1914, he could not depend very much on the British or Continental product.

Previous to that year Canadians had films foisted upon them, such as one showing the raising of the battleship Maine—an incident connected with a war which Canadians knew and care as little about as do Americans of the South African war of 1898. The producers of this film, finding it difficult to fill the reel, introduced considerable film-lengths of close-ups of the American flag.

The somewhat disgraceful demonstrations which took place at some showings of this film were not so much the result of the state of boredom into which the audience had been thrown, but from realization of the fact that their sentiments had not been considered sufficiently important to warrant the simple expedient of making some cuts in the film.

War Accentuates Feeling.

This tendency, ever apparent during peace times, became accentuated after the declaration of war in 1914. The absurdity of the situation was then shown when films of American national guards performing peace maneuvers were exhibited before audiences vitally interested in whether the Germans would break through to Paris or not; and who had probably the day before witnessed the departure of troops of Canadians bound for the real thing. Nor could it be expected of audiences to be excited when a film caption termed heroes a number of negro troops who had survived a brush with Mexican bandits, when outside the theatre newsboys were crying editions in which appeared the latest casualty lists from the battle of Ypres.

That the aversion toward American films which increased steadily after 1914 was perfectly consistent, was shown by the favorable way in which the "Birth of a Nation" was received. The only cuts in the film were made in connection with the allegorical scenes supposed to represent the horrors of war—which were, of course, perfectly superfluous in Canada at the time.

Old Glory Popular in 1917.

Possibly no film has presented so vividly a section of American life as did this. Yet it received universal approbation in the Dominion. The reason for this was that the picture appealed on the strength of its artistic merits alone and not on flag-exhibition.

Sentiments toward American films underwent a temporary change when the United States joined the Allies in 1917. Every showing of "Old Glory," whether actual or on the screen, was the signal for outbursts of applause. This continued until American topical weeklies became surcharged with scenes showing the erection of barracks for the housing of the troops the United States was drafting.

All that sort of thing had been witnessed with great composure by Canadian audiences far back in 1914; and they had become tolerably familiar with the humor or human interest displayed in the process of changing civilians into soldiers. When, after showing a number of doughboys drinking coffee, the films concluded by entreating the Canadians present to "Work for Uncle Sam," many of those in the audience who had had relatives at the front since 1915 felt they were being favored with unnecessary advice.

War Propaganda Not Liked.

In the same way, all war propaganda in films, however used in the States, was obviously uncalled for in a country like Canada, particularly as all such propaganda stressed the part this republic was playing in the war. Thus interest in things American soon relapsed to the normal. American patriotism, nationalism and heroism, however sincere and vital, could not possibly compete in attractiveness to Canadians as could their own manifestations of these virtues.

Producers Indifferent.

If the American producers had taken the trouble to edit their films for Canadian consumption, the situation might have been made a good deal less acute by means of judicious cutting. This simple expedient, however, the exchangemen were unwilling to adopt. Throughout they maintained an attitude of strict indifference. The result was inevitable.

The Ontario government, no more sensitive to public opinion than any other, finally had to take cognizance of the wishes of the people. Having delayed so long to take the necessary steps, they made up for lost time. Since most films have their first showing in Ontario, this alone would have a great effect on the Canadian market, even if the movement had not swept of its own accord through the nation.

British Films Popular.

British-made films have always been more popular in Canada than the American variety. At the beginning of the war, such films as "England's Menace" and "England Expects——" were run as complete shows in themselves. But the contingencies of war soon cut off the supply from over the Atlantic, and the anomalous result outlined above followed as a natural consequence. Now that normal conditions are returning the British competitor is once more in the ring—to such an extent that British producers claim London is to be the coming film center.

Present Situation.

In the mean time, Canadian exhibitors are seeking to please their long-neglected audiences. Films with Canadian locale are featured. "Hearts of Humanity," for instance, was advertised in Montreal as being "Canadian throughout."

A film, now released in the United States, shows scenes of fighting at the front. Before release in Canada, these scenes will be replaced with those showing men in Canadian uniform. The Canadian picture fan is not so discriminating, but that such expedients will be more than sufficient.

Films like "The Better 'Ole" are supreme in Canada as house fillers. It is with similar films the British producer is entering the field for the trade of the British Empire. To meet this competition, it will be necessary for the American producer to modify his product so as to give it the earmarks which will make it as attractive to the Canadian movie fan as the British product. This has been done for the English market; there is no reason why it should not be done for the Canadian.

Adolphe Osso Will Sail with Capellani Films

ADOLPHE OSSO, vice-president and general manager of the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., will sail shortly for Europe to actively take charge of his offices in Paris and London, which were established during his last visit abroad.

In the future, Mr. Osso will spend several months in Paris and London each year. When Mr. Osso sails, which will be some time during the next ten days, he will take with him those negatives of the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., which are completed at that time, including "Oh, Boy!" "The Unknown Dancer" and "The Gutter."

Upon his arrival in Paris and London, Mr. Osso will personally supervise the initial presentation of these productions in both cities. He has already arranged for the initial presentation of the Capellani productions in Paris at Marivaux Hall (La Salle Marivaux) which is not only the largest theatre in Paris but in all Europe.

In addition to the Capellani product, Mr. Osso takes with him a print of "Raffles," the rights to which he acquired for Charles Delac Vandal & Company for France, Switzerland, Belgium and Holland, through Bobby North, of the Apollo Trading Corporation. This company will release this production in Europe.

MacGowan Given "Bon Voyage" Dinner.

A "bon voyage" dinner was given to C. H. MacGowan, of Universal, by a number of the company officials and employes at Mouquin's café on Tuesday evening, June 10. Mr. MacGowan left for Europe on June 12. He will visit many of the European and British cities, where he is to look after Universal foreign interests.

The group of some fifty or more friends made it known to Mr. MacGowan that he was to spell success overseas for Universal as well as for himself. Many original stunts were "pulled." A telegram from Carl Laemmle, president, was read and R. H. Cochrane, vice president, made the first speech he had been known to make in eighteen years. In fact, he made three speeches during the evening. Practically everyone present made a short address.

New York Exhibitors Meet and Elect Three Delegates

THE executives committee of the New York Exhibitors State League met in special session at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Thursday, June 19. About forty representative exhibitors from all over the state were in attendance. The body met behind closed doors.

Three delegates to the St. Louis convention were appointed: Samuel I. Berman, C. A. Heyman and Charles L. O'Reilly.

The question of repealing the admission and film taxes was taken up, and the best methods of strengthening the appeal, which is now being made in Washington, were carefully considered.

Among the representatives in attendance were Edward Weil, of Syracuse; W. H. Linton, Little Falls; Emmett Cornell, Syracuse; William Dillon, Ithaca; M. Silverman, Schenectady; David Cohen, Binghamton; Mr. Ulman, Buffalo; Ira Mosher, Rochester, and Sydney Cohen, Charles L. O'Reilly and Samuel I. Berman, New York.

DAYLIGHT SAVING TO BE ABANDONED

Both Houses of Congress on Record Concerning the Final End of "Daylight Saving" After October 26

BY action taken in both branches of Congress at Washington, June 18, definite prophecy may be made that "daylight saving," originally introduced as a war measure, will be abandoned after the current term of "saving an hour" ends on Sunday, October 26. When the clocks are then adjusted to the old system they will stay there according to every indication.

The repeal bill was passed by the House of Representatives, the vote being: For repeal, 233; against repeal, 122; present, 5. The bill now goes to the Senate. Shortly after this action the Senate voted 56 to 6 in favor of the daylight saving repeal rider to the Agricultural Appropriation Bill.

The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has rendered a favorable report on the bill to repeal the Daylight-Saving Law, recommending that the repeal take effect with the close of the daylight-saving period for 1919 "on the last Sunday in October." The most numerous class opposing the present law is the farmers. Their objections, the committee states, are well founded. As they must maintain their relationship to the public school, the church, the store, and the bank, they feel compelled to observe the law, notwithstanding the fact the law is not mandatory. They find it difficult and often impossible, if they observe clock time, to get assistance from their children in doing the customary farm work if the children are to reach school at the advanced hour each morning. Village and city stores observe the present law and close at 5 p. m. sun time—the very best hour in the whole day for harvest work. "The movies and other places of amusement begin while he is still in the midst of his work."

Airdomes Hit Hard.

The motion picture men opposed the law because of the difficulties they experienced in their business. The moving of the hands of the clock knocked out the airdomes in many cities, because of the inability to commence the shows until an hour when the people are getting ready for bed. With daylight until 9.30, one show at the most is possible, making the proposition so unprofitable that many open-air enterprises were discontinued. The men conducting closed houses found it difficult to get their patrons to come to their shows while it was still light, and the first two shows of the evening were consequently very poorly attended.

Director Hoyt Gives Views on Film Continuity Writing

A STORY may be surcharged with action and yet the action be of a character that makes it impossible of conversion into dramatic form," says Harry O. Hoyt, who is now directing Montagu Love in "A Broadway Saint." Mr. Hoyt is the author of over 600 stories that have had screen production. "It is the story element that often influences scenario writers in accepting a manuscript, and too often the drama necessary to a successful photoplay is not taken into consideration. A man may be the greatest story writer in the world and yet fall absolutely flat as a writer of stories for the screen.

Such a writer does not take into consideration that a reader of a story can lay down his book or magazine at any time; go away for an hour or two, or even a week, and pick up the story or book where he left off and finish it without an interruption of the continuity of interest.

A man can go to the theatre to witness a play and keep his eyes on the stage or not. The voice of the actors as they read their lines, conveys to him the continuity necessary in order to maintain his interest to the end of the play. With pictures it is entirely different. The eye is absolutely necessary to get any or all of the value and merits of the photoplay.

Thus the test in writing a manuscript is: "Will this situation or that be acceptable to those who sit out in front?" If the writer is in touch with the world and has made a study of audiences he is qualified to be successful in writing or passing on manuscripts for the screen.

Universal Sends Exchanges Three Big Jewel Subjects for Pre-release View

FOLLOWING the statement that the exhibitors of the country would have a chance to see all future releases made by Universal far in advance of their release dates comes the announcement of the completion and distribution to exchanges of three of the finest pictures ever produced under the Universal banner. They are a part of a new program which the company announced the beginning of its anniversary month of June. The three productions are of the Universal-Jewel brand and have for their stars two of the most popular actresses of the screen supported by all-star casts.

The three Jewels which are now being sent to the exchanges for the exhibitors to see are "Home," in which Mildred Harris is starred; "Paid in Advance," starring Dorothy Phillips, and "Forbidden," starring Mildred Harris.

"Home" was written and produced by Lois Weber. The production was several months in the making and contains some excellent scenic pictures of wealthy homes and gardens.

"Paid in Advance" was written by James Oliver Curwood. Dorothy Phillips is supported by two male stars, William Stowell and Lon Chaney. The scenes are laid in the North country.

Just Lounging Around
Is Elsie Ferguson, who doesn't fear the crush of "The Avalanche," her next Artcraft.

The story abounds with dramatic incidents. The life, manner and customs of French-Canadian and Indian mixed breeds of the fur districts of Canada and the life of the miners during the gold rush of the Yukon are excellently portrayed in this production.

The other Mildred Harris production was written by E. V. Durling, a New York newspaper man. The production was directed by Lois Weber and Phillip Smalley. This story of a country girl who longs for the city and who marries a wealthy man who longs for the country contains many dramatic points where the heart interest is especially keen. As in "Home" the interior scenes are of the wealthy homes and the rural scenes in keeping with the life of a farm girl. Scenes of the life in New York's Bowery section are shown. Henry Woodward and Fred Goodwin are in support of Miss Harris.

Western Dramas Interest Peoples of Indian Empire

INDIA, with its three hundred millions of people, appears to be showing a steadily increasing interest in communities speaking these dialects, motion pictures. The number of dialects, and the difficulty of making the titles fully intelligible to the various communities constitute one of the problems confronting the motion picture producer.

The action is made intelligible to the various peoples by the application of neat simplicity to the titles. Swift action is the universal demand of the Indian peoples, and the Farnum, Mix and Walsh pictures especially meet this demand. The Indians show the keenest appreciation of the dramatic powers of Farnum, the thrilling Western stunts of Mix and the athletic prowess of George Walsh. They are by no means averse to showing their appreciation by prolonged applause, and it is said, they read the motion picture matter in the columns of their native papers with great relish.

The Fox foreign department announces that Fox pictures are now being shown with marked success in Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Columbo in Ceylon, Bangalor, Haidrobad, Nagburberar, Katilvar, Adjimir and other Indian cities, while in Persia, which is rapidly responding to Occidental influence, plans are under way for the erection of fine theatres in Teheran, Asterabad, Tabriz, Recht and Ispahan.

U. S. SUPREMACY IN THE FILM WORLD

Shown by Report of Department of Commerce for April—Twelve Million Odd Feet Exported

EXPORTS of motion picture film continue heavy, to judge from statistics which have been compiled by the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, covering the export business of the industry for the month of April.

During April, according to the report, we shipped 405,456 linear feet of unexposed film, valued at $11,738. Of this amount, 130,207 feet, valued at $4,092, went to Brazil; 180,000 feet, valued at $3,146 to Japan; 85,249 feet, valued at $4,060, to Canada, and 10,000 feet, valued at $440, to Venezuela.

Our exports of exposed film during the month, however, reached a total of 12,107,273 linear feet, valued at $619,793, and markets for it were found in nearly every part of the world, as shown in the following table, prepared by the bureau:

G. R. Meeker Gives Opinion on Question of Rebooking

ONE of the biggest problems that confront the exhibitor is whether or not it would be profitable to repeat a booking on a picture that has pulled the crowds and made good, or where a picture has been shown and did not get business, but made a big hit with those who saw it," says George R. Meeker, general sales manager of World Pictures. There are hundreds of exhibitors who failed to realize the worth of a picture when they booked it and failed to apply the proper method of exploitation. The consequence was that a good picture in every sense of the word, did not measure up to a box office winner.

"Yet a dozen different things could have been done to boost it. The patrons who did see it were pleased. As they passed out through the lobby they had taken the time to stop and tell him how good it was. Afterward, while sitting in his office, his day's work finished, he began to think what John Smith said and Mrs. Brown's comments on the feature, then the thought struck him that he had not played fair with his merchandise. He showed a lack of salesmanship in selling his offering.

"He reviewed the appeal of the picture, its subject matter, the star, the supporting company, the author, and a hundred different things about the film that would lend to exploitation. Then and there he resolved to play it again.

"This time he cashed in. He knew what he had and made the most of it.

"There is not enough return bookings. Many exhibitors are like small children—they want new toys."

"Ladies' Home Journal" Features Gowns Irene Castle Wears in "The Firing Line"

THE Ladies' Home Journal, with a national circulation of over two million, has placed itself and its staff of exploitation experts scattered all over the country at the disposal of every exhibitor who has booked or will book to play, "The Firing Line," the Paramount-Artcraft Special starring Irene Castle.

In the July issue of that publication, which will be on the stands by July 1, three full pages are devoted to a description of the gowns which Irene Castle is wearing in the Paramount-Artcraft Special. They are copiously illustrated and the entire article, written and signed by Miss Castle herself, is one of the features of this issue of the magazine. Incidentally, prominent mention is made throughout the article to the effect that Miss Castle's forthcoming motion picture production is "The Firing Line."

Million Cards to Be Issued.

To bring to the attention of its two million readers the fact that the July issue contains the illustrated article, the Ladies' Home Journal, through its exploitation department, is having distributed throughout the country one million cards, in several colors, of the same size as the regulation window cards, which will be put in store windows, tacked on fences, telegraph poles, etc. Mention in big type is made of the fact that the gowns shown and described in the article can be seen in action in the Paramount-Artcraft Special.

The home office of the Ladies' Home Journal at Philadelphia has instructed its staff of exploitation experts centered in the big cities throughout the country and covering the entire United States to place themselves at the disposal of the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges and through them at the disposal of the exhibitiors playing "The Firing Line." Arrangements for the services of the local magazine representative can be made at the nearest Famous Players-Lasky exchange, and no exhibitor is too far away from the exchange or from the headquarters of the magazine's representative to receive the benefit of his services.

FILMS PROPOSED AS AID TO JUSTICE

J. C. Hummelbaugh Says That the Law Should Offset Science of Criminals by Use of Cinema

THAT the moving picture film and even the screens of many theatres are bound to play a very important part in the detection of crime and the capture of criminals is the conviction of Jesse C. Hummelbaugh, a Rochester man who has attained considerable fame by proposing the film as an aid to justice. As the modern methods of criminals are intended to defy and set at naught the carefully laid plans of justice, Mr. Hummelbaugh says the authorities must go a step further and make use of the many wonders of science to checkmate crime, not overlooking the moving picture film.

In his capacity as a criminologist Mr. Hummelbaugh some months ago became interested in the investigation of a murder which had defied the police. A man had been beaten to death in his bed and many valuables taken. Clues were left behind, but not very tangible ones. The police set to work on the case, but the most they could no was prepare evidence against someone they expected to arrest later. The preparation of maps, charts and blue prints which are usually employed at a murder trial offered a practical test of an idea Mr. Hummelbaugh had long in mind—the use of the moving picture instead.

Films an Aid to Jurymen.

His idea immediately found considerable favor. It was quickly realized that it would be more convenient to take moving pictures of the scene of the crime, the approaches and everything on the premises at the time. Films could be run off in a court room in much less time than it would take for technical experts to explain what their maps and blue prints meant. Not only that, but as Mr. Hummelbaugh says, it is easier for the average juror to grasp pictures unfolding before him than it is to reason out a lot of blue prints and charts—things with which he is not familiar.

At that time, Mr. Hummelbaugh's plan was an experiment, but the many letters of inquiry and the general and widespread interest in his plan convinced him that it was only a question of time before the film would be in general use as an aid to the law. As a result he is now devising ways and means in which the film may not only be used to visualize evidence and scenes of crime for a jury, but by which the criminal will have reason to fear the law more than ever.

Animated Rogue's Galleries Suggested.

He proposes that so-called rogues' galleries have on files short films showing the face, stature, mannerisms, distinguishing features and general appearance of the professional criminals. From time to time these films could be run off for the benefit of the detectives and policemen, so that they could become familiar with persistent offenders. If a man were wanted by the police, it is proposed that in certain instances the film might be run in theatres, so that the public too might be on the lookout.

Mr. Hummelbaugh is of the opinion that the guardians of the peace will soon come to realize that the film is one of their principal aids and he predicts that once it is really put into general use scores of new applications will be found for it. With criminals becoming more skilled in their operations and more crafty in eluding the law, he believes that the moving picture will be the greatest use in their detection, capture and conviction.

Spitz Supervised Making of Stage Women's Films

OF all the officials and producers in the motion picture industry there is hardly a more modest one than Eugene Spitz, the man who was responsible for the production of the Stage Women's War Relief series of pictures. In a quiet way Mr. Spitz is known to many in the industry, but there are not many who know that he was the "power behind the throne" in the production of this series of pictures.

The stage stars who appear in this series number among the greatest on the American stage today and all volunteered their services. When the Stage Women's War Relief organization looked about for a man to supervise the making of this series they found a willing hand in the person of Mr. Spitz. He gave the use of his property, the Estee studio, on 125th street, New York City, and told the organization that he would see that the pictures were produced.

Eugene Spitz
Supervising director of Universal's Stage Women's War Relief Series.

At the time he said this Mr. Spitz himself hardly realized the enormous expenditure of money and time that would be required to produce these pictures. And after the last of the series of twelve pictures which are to be released by the Universal company were completed, Mr. Spitz said he was confident the productions were among the best screen dramas ever made.

Mr. Spitz has been in the production end of motion pictures for a period of ten years and at one time produced a series of pictures for the United States Government.

Robert Lowenberg to Open Big Theatre at Whitestone

WORK on the new Rialto Theatre, located at Whitestone, Long Island, is rapidly nearing completion. The Rialto is advantageously located, being in the heart of a thriving residential section and one-half block from a trolley line. The new house will have a seating capacity of 800 and will be one of the best equipped and most modern motion picture theatres in the Long Island section. The Rialto will be under the management of Robert Lowenberg, formerly manager of the Burland Theatre in the Bronx.

One of the first steps taken by Mr. Lowenberg upon assuming the management of the theatre was to contract for Goldwyn pictures.

An attractive feature of the new house will be the installation of a large Hope-Jones organ. Manager Lowenberg plans to make Sunday morning organ concerts an important phase of his campaign to establish and popularize the new house. A special and elaborate lighting system has been installed and a large stage is being erected to enable Mr. Lowenberg to surround his programs with presentation effects.

The interior has been decorated with a color scheme of gold, silver and black, giving a harmonious and restful effect which will be further enhanced by a series of side-wall lights softly shaded by drapings of old-rose color. The spacious lobby has been inlaid with white tile and will be illuminated by three large globes partially set into the ceiling. One sheet stands have been set into the side walls of the lobby and over each stand, a row of shaded lights has been set. The entrance of the theatre covers about thirty feet while the entire front of the house is of white brick.

Physical Culture, Inc., Reorganized.

Physical Culture Photoplays, Inc., has reorganized for the purpose of producing a series of fifty-two one-reel subjects under the general supervision of R. Robert Riskin.

The reel is to be called the "Physical Culture Screen Magazine" and comprises a few hundred feet of an educational subject along physical culture lines, followed by a human-interest story. The picture is interspersed with comedy.

Ben Schulberg has purchased the foreign rights on the entire output. No definite arrangement has yet been made for the distribution in this country. Mr. Riskin has engaged Caryl H. Fleming as director.

Extend Time for Tax Reports.

Owing to the fact that the blanks for the return of taxes under Section 906 (film rentals) have been delayed and are not yet distributed throughout the country, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has announced that a further extension of time until July 20 will be allowed for the filing of these reports for the month of May. These returns are to be filed monthly, and were due on June 30.

JESTERS GAMBOL FOR FIRST TIME

New Haven Organization of Film, Theatrical and Newspaper Men Holds Midnight Frolic

THE Jesters Society held their first annual gambol at Poli's Palace Theatre, New Haven, on Friday night, June 13. This organization, started about three months ago, now numbers one hundred members. It embraces the film, theatrical and newspaper life of New Haven. As these three professions have no established working schedule, it is necessary for the society to hold its business or social functions at such times when the world is asleep. For this reason the gambol did not start until 11.30 p. m., and continued until 2.45 Saturday morning.

First Affair of Its Kind.

This midnight gambol was the first affair of the kind ever held in New Haven, and the novelty of it appealed to the people to such an extent that every one of the 3,300 seats of the Palace was filled at 75 cents to $1.50. Not only citizens but exhibitors and their wives from all over the state were in attendance.

Headliners who were performing in nearby cities volunteered their services, providing one of the finest programs ever presented. The most novel number, and the one in which local interest was centered, was "School Days," a sketch given by the following film men: Geoffrey Whalen, Lester Tobias, Harry Germaine, Phillip Cantanese, Nathan Furst, Ben Simon, I. Levine, Bob Horsley, Austin Interante, Ray Webster and Henry Germaine, all of whom performed with credit and distinction. Some disappointment was expressed at the nonappearance of the screen stars who were expected to be in evidence.

Those Who Attended.

Some of those who were in attendance were A. G. Skidmore, of the Elite Theatre, and family; M. Leighton, of the American; Nathan Lund, of the West End; J. C. Lund, of the South End, and J. Renchy, of the Orpheum—all of Bridgeport. George Poli; Moe Sleepack, of the Globe; J. Gentile, of the Liberty; L. Coppola, of the White City; K. C. Kazian, of the Garden; M. Luipplel, of New Haven; I. Hoffman, of the Pastime, of Ansonia; R. Cabol, Rialto, of Nangatuck; M. Young, Strand, Hartford; J. Belasko, Palace, and P. Peraskos, of the Scenic, New Britain; J. Healey, Princess, and J. Saperstein, Bristol, of Bristol; M. A. Gill Sterling, Derby; M. Culhane, Shelton, of Shelton and S. Ordono, Grand, Middletown.

Exchangemen were Morris Caplan, of the Famous Players; William Scully, representing Metro; M. Rabemeus, of Triangle; William Weisfeld, of Pathe; Austin Interante, of Fox; N. Furst, of Fox; I. Levine, of Select; R. Horsley, of Vitagraph; L. Tobias, Exhibitors Mutual; Sam Rosen, of the Exhibitors Film Delivery of Connecticut; Harry H. Thomas, of the United Pictures Theatres; Geoffrey L. Whalen, of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston; Lewis Garvey, of the Bijou, and Walter Griffith, manager of the Palace.

Officers of the Society.

The officers of the Jesters are: Henry Menges, president; Israel Levine, vice-president; Morris Caplan, treasurer; H. C. Higgins, recording secretary, and Louis Capollo, sergeant-at-arms.

After the performance, the guests and talent were invited to attend a banquet at the Cafe Mallone. Over three hundred sat at the feast. During the festivities a check for one hundred dollars was presented by the Jesters to the captain of the local Salvation Army to help along its good work. SPEDON.

Special Performance for Women Only Draws Many to "What Woman Wants"

AN increased patronage of 500 persons in a town the size of San Pedro, Cal., represents the most intelligent kind of exploitation on the part of the exhibitor. Yet Mr. Adler, of Pierson and Adler's Victoria Theatre, made the box office record that number of paid admissions over any other matinee's business in the history of his theatre when he recently played the Robertson-Cole feature, "What Every Woman Wants," released by Exhibitors Mutual.

And all by the simplest and, it might be added, the cheapest kind of advertising—cheap from the standpoint of cost but high class in the manner in which it was worked out.

Yet all Mr. Adler did to obtain his record attendance was to advertise a "Special Matinee for Ladies."

That was all, but his campaign was so skillfully conducted that there was hardly a woman in San Pedro, and even in surrounding communities, who was so eager to know what every woman wants—as if she didn't already know what she wanted—that she grasped the opportunity presented at the Victoria.

The circulars issued by Mr. Adler were simple. Centered, in black type, was a box in which there appeared the following:

A Ladies Only Matinee.

In order to give the ladies an opportunity to see and privately discuss the merits of this remarkable picture, without some mere man "listening in," there will be a matinee for ladies only on Wednesday, (last day of the showing) between 2 and 4 o'clock. Positively no men will be admitted during these hours.

Even his men ushers were withdrawn by Mr. Adler for this performance and women substituted.

No exploitation could be more simple. Mr. Adler could have conducted another show for "ladies only," and would have had a big attendance if he had admitted only those who were unable to obtain admission.

Winnipeg Showmen Defy Strikers.

Soon after the theatres of Winnipeg, Manitoba, secured "permission" from the strike committee which engineered the general strike in that city, the exhibitors received notification from Edward Brown, provincial treasurer, that they must remove the "permit cards" from the lobbies of their theatres or licenses would be revoked. These permit cards had been issued by the strike committee which had tried to assume the government of the city. The cards came down in a hurry and the threats of the strike committee were of no avail.

The Winnipeg exhibitors figure that their business during the strike period has been reduced to 40 per cent. of normal and they, along with many others, have suffered financially as a result of the disorder which has been prevalent since May 15.

The Universal Jewel production, "Home," shows the attainment of happiness, but not through the money route. The scene on the right pictures the failure of that means.

PHILADELPHIA GETS THE "BREGSTEIN"

Moving Picture World Traveler Studies Theatre and Exchange Conditions There and in Camden

IF you wish to cover Philadelphia by street car, study mathematics. All the street cars have numbers, but don't think you are on Manhattan Island. Number 23 may not go to Twenty-third street and 52 does not run on Fifty-second street, according to Nat Bregstein, traveling representative of the Moving Picture World.

Verily they go elsewhere. For instance, to reach the Strand Theatre, take a Germantown avenue car, get off at Vernango and Germantown avenue. The Strand, seating 1,700, is one of the most up-to-date in Philadelphia and is one of the finest in the country with admission prices of 20 and 30 cents. J. Effinger, the manager, informed me that he just put his first finger in the pie of the Big Four. He claims a good business for this house right along.

Boyd Interests Active.

On the other side of the street is A. R. Boyd's magnificent Great Northern Theatre. This house seats 1,200, with an admission price of 22 cents. The Broad Street Casino, next door, under the same management, will shortly be remodeled. The A. R. Boyd interests seem to be active. They will erect shortly a new house at 722 Market street. J. Murphy is the general manager and reports good business for all of Boyd's houses.

Out in the Kensington section I called on C. H. Relhner, of the New Brunswick Theatre. Business has been only fair during the last two months, owing to the fact that the parks are open. Mr. Relhner informed me that the open market is the real thing as far as he is concerned. His theatre seats 600 and has an admission price of 17 cents.

Another house in the Kensington section is the Majestic, located right above York street. This house has admission prices of 5 and 11 cents and is under the supervision of C. K. Stanley. Another theatre getting the business in the same section is the Bellevue Theatre, owned and operated by Lewis and Low.

A Tour of the Exchanges.

All the exchange activities in Philadelphia are centered around Thirteenth and Vine streets. Stand on any one of the four corners and you are bound to meet all the exhibitors. I started on a tour of inspection and I first visited the Goldwyn offices. I met H. M. White, the manager, and I was indeed glad to see him. The last time I saw Mr. White was when he was connected with the World in Indianapolis. He has been in Philadelphia with Goldwyn since April 21 and is very enthusiastic about Madge Evans in "Strictly Confidential" and Tom Moore in "The City of Comrades."

At the Triangle office is the youngest manager in Film Row. Bill Humphries is only 26 years old but he has a number of years' experience and is up on his toes at all times. He claims good business on the Taylor Holmes productions and the Olive Thomas pictures. Bill says Triangle will soon have something that will make the boys sit up and take notice.

Lynch Gets the Medal.

At the Fox office I greeted George Dembow. I asked George how business was. George said that business was 25 per cent. better this year than any previous year, with William Farnum and Tom Mix going good. Leo Burnstine, who has been with the Fox for eighteen months as assistant branch manager, is going to Cincinnati to take charge of the Fox office. Good luck, Leo.

J. S. Hebrew is the manager of the Vitagraph exchange and has been for five years. He says "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The Third Degree" are going great. A Heyman, formerly with the Triangle, is now at this office.

At the Metro office is Bob Lynch who, when he isn't busy with the exhibitors, is at work putting out fires. Film Row owes Mr. Lynch a vote of thanks for the fireman part he played recently when the World branch was on fire.

At the Independent Sales Corporation B. R. Tolmas, manager, reported big business on all productions.

At the Pathe office, George Ames, the manager, was busy, and at the Universal office everything was going at top speed.

At the Select office Max Milder's smiling countenance may be seen at all times. His exchange is one of the neatest in the country. I asked Mr. Milder how long he has been with Select. "One of the first to be selected," said Max.

I met J. F. Gill, manager of the Mutual office. This gentleman is on the sick list at present. He manages to get down every day, however, and reports business humming right along.

World in Temporary Quarters.

Owing to the fact that the World office was burned out they are making their temporary headquarters at the Electric Theatre Supply Company, Thirteenth and Vine streets.

At the National W. J. Heenan, manager, said everything was, as usual, "big."

A few of the independent exchanges are the Quaker City Feature Film Company, Joseph Singer, manager; Supreme Photoplay Productions, Miss B. Nelson, manager; Masterpiece Film Attractions, B. Amsterdam, manager; Entente Film Corporation, Benjamin Primavera, manager. The Community Motion Picture Bureau also maintains a branch in Film Row. T. F. Burhans is in charge.

Looking Over Camden.

Camden, N. J., is just a ferry ride from Philadelphia. One of the oldest exhibitors in the town is A. Greenberg, who owns and operates three theatres, the Plaza, Princess and Grand. I asked Mr. Greenberg how he felt about the open market. He says in his opinion it will be a cutthroat proposition. Competition is very keen in Camden. Mr. Greenberg claims first run on all Paramount, Goldwyn, Metro and Select. He has just bought a piece of property for an 1,800 seater to be erected on Market street in Camden.

A. J. Rovner controls two houses, the Lyric, seating 1,200, and the Garden, 1,000. The Garden will shortly have a new organ costing several thousands of dollars. It was a hot night at the time of my visit and I was surprised to find the Garden doing a big business.

The Broadway Theatre is under the management of W. M. Taylor Company. This house seats 1,400, admission prices 10, 15 and 25 cents.

Veterans of the Argonne in a Scene from "The Lost Battalion."
The actual flesh and blood cast of the original drama re-enacts its heroic play in the MacManus film.

Jennie Lee Engaged by Universal.

Jennie Lee, "the grand old lady of the films," who has been seen in the mother role in many of D. W. Griffith's successes, has been engaged by Universal to play in support of Harry Carey in "Jim of the Ranges," his newest Western vehicle. Gloria Hope and Claire Anderson will be the leading feminine stars in this production.

LOUIS B. MAYER SIGNS MILDRED HARRIS

Wife of Comedian Enters Long Term Contract with New Company—To Build Studio in Hollywood Zone

MILDRED HARRIS CHAPLIN, wife of the famous comedian, Charlie Chaplin, has signed a long term contract to appear in pictures produced by Louis B. Mayer, who recently organized the Mayer Productions Company. Miss Harris Chaplin, who will be known by that name under the Mayer management, is said to have received a large bonus for signing with Mr. Mayer, who announced that she will be starred in a series of productions founded on the works of well-known authors.

In the marketing of the Harris Chaplin pictures Mr. Mayer will pursue the booking policy adopted by the Big Four —Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith—excepting that the exhibitor for his own protection may have the privilege of booking the series if he so desires. Speaking of this plan, Miss Harris Chaplin, said: "I realize that the open booking method is the coming policy of the film industry, and I further believe the independent producer has the biggest opportunity in the business. That is why I have signed with Mr. Mayer."

Zeidman Is Manager.

One of the first moves of Mayer and his associates will be the construction of a new studio in the Hollywood zone district at a cost of more than $100,000. It is expected the studio will be completed in September, at which time Miss Harris Chaplin will begin work on her initial picture. The Mayer organization will have three stars heading their individual companies and specializing in the picturization of well known books and stage plays. There also will be one carefully picked company to make four special productions next year. The cast of this company will be of the all-star variety, the producers claim.

Bennie Zeidman, erstwhile publicity manager for Douglas Fairbanks, has been appointed general manager and supervising director of exploitation by the new company, and is already in harness.

Mr. Mayer, who owns the Anita Stewart Company, will leave the coast for Kentucky next week with Miss Stewart and Marshall Neilan.

Realart Pictures Is Sent Showmen's Congratulations

LAST WEEK'S announcement of the launching of Realart Pictures Corporation brought a flood of congratulations and good wishes to that office. Where no announcement was forthcoming regarding Realart stars, President Arthur S. Kane said he hopes to be able to release this information in a few days. The Realart offices, at 112 West Forty-second street, present a busy appearance. A business campaign is being mapped out that will be in keeping with the standard set for the organization. Here are a few of the congratulatory messages received:

Governor Henry J. Allen of Kansas: "Here's hoping you will have all sorts of luck and that you will become so rich you will have to be regulated by legislative enactment."

S. Barret McCormick, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis: "My best wishes for the success of your company."

Robert Lieber, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind: "Allow me to express my very best wishes for your success."

James Q. Clemmer, Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, Washington: "Accept my heartiest congratulations for huge success both for yourself and Realart Pictures Corporation."

Air Raid on Salt Lake Booms "Sahara" Film

SALT LAKE CITY is to be bombarded from the air. But the bombs will not be of the Hun variety, though they probably will result in the formation of searching parties to ascertain where they "struck."

When three big aeroplanes arrived in that city a few days ago George Mayne, manager of the American Theatre, began to figure out what they might be used for aside from carrying passengers on sight seeing trips over the city. Then he hit upon a scheme. Why not bomb Salt Lake with literature advertising 'Sahara," the special production which comes to the American June 17 to 20 inclusive.

Accordingly, 5,000 heralds announcing the showing of this picture will be scattered over the city by the aeroplanes together with a goodly number of free theatre tickets for the days the picture is on the screen. Mr. Mayne has completed arrangements with the Western Aircraft Corporation for this novel advertising campaign, which will begin on June 16 and continue for the entire showing of the picture.

Films Replace Slide Advertisements.

Instead of using slides for titles and advertising coming attractions, Mr. Carpenter, of Paramount Empress Theatre Salt Lake City, proposes to use regular films. As for an illustration a moving picture of the crowds outside of the theatre attracted by a lobby display may be used to advertise a coming attraction. All sorts of titles may be made in this manner, and there is no limitation to the innovations which readily present themselves.

To make possible the making of these films a small manufacturing plant is now being constructed in the rear of the theatre. It will be thoroughly equipped and will enable the Paramount Empress to offer something which is as unique as it is new.

Realart Pictures Expect to Release in September

REALART PICTURES will begin production in the middle of July and expects to make its first release early in September. In view of this there is daily increase of activity at the executive offices of the corporation, 112 West Forty-second street, New York, and there has been an addition made to the staff in the person of Hugh Harvey, who will assist John Pond Fritts, director of publicity.

Mr. Harvey has had considerable experience in newspaper, theatrical and advertising circles. He was on the west coast staff of the Morning Telegraph and the Los Angeles Express-Tribune, in addition to which he has been connected with several leading theatrical producers in New York.

Before joining the Realart Pictures Corporation, Mr. Harvey was with the publicity bureau of the Salvation Army in the interests of that organization's recent drive.

Adams Is Cameraman for Blackton.

In addition to the names previously listed, the roster of those associated with Commodore Blackton in the technical departments of his new organization, J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., includes W. S. Adams as photographer.

Last August Mr. Adams left Vitagraph to enlist and was assigned to the photostat department in Washington. The signing of the armistice released him from service and he was engaged by Commodore Blackton.

FAMOUS PLAYERS HAS CANADIAN PLANS

Rumors Say Number of New Exchanges Will Be Opened—Interests Centred in Theatre Chain

DEFINITE details are now available regarding the plan which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of New York will follow in connection with the establishment of new relations throughout the Canadian market to start next September. It is intimated that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will open its own exchange offices in a number of principal cities of the Dominion, but that its primary interest will be centered in a chain of theatres which has been built up by Paramount Theatres, Ltd., and other interests affiliated with Regal Films, Ltd.

The declaration is made that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has acquired a substantial interest in the theatres controlled by Paramount Theatres, Ltd. These houses have been operated under the direction of N. L. Nathanson, managing director of Regal Films, Ltd., and are located principally in Ontario.

In the meantime, financial men associated with N. L. Nathanson have organized Eastern Theatres, Ltd., headquarters at Toronto, with a capitalization of $1,800,000, for the erection of a huge theatre in Toronto and for the acquisition of an extended circuit, these houses to have Pantages vaudeville. The new company holds a long term franchise for Pantages' vaudeville bookings in Eastern Canada.

Officials Ignore Reports.

Toronto officials of the Regal and Paramount companies, who are practically identical, will neither deny nor confirm any reports, but the above declaration is understood to be correct. The Regal Films, Ltd., has six offices across Canada, these being located at Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. Other large film distributing companies in Canada also have branches in these cities, and it is quite likely that the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will shortly be found in the six cities mentioned.

Philadelphia Manager Says Summer Closing Is Needed

DAVE MORRIS, during four years manager and owner of the Imperial and Hippodrome theatres, located in the thickly populated section of South street, Philadelphia, told a representative of the Moving Picture World last week that it was a mistake for the exhibitor to keep his house open during the entire year. He stated that if the theatres would close during July or August the picture business would not only be greatly benefited, but the majority of exhibitors would have an opportunity of giving their theatres a thorough cleaning.

"There never was experienced such a tremendous influx of business as occurred immediately after the ban was lifted on the influenza epidemic. People in general would be greatly more interested if they were kept away from the theatres for a month at least. The exhibitor would experience a higher average of business conditions," said Mr. Morris.

As far as he has been able to observe, Mr. Morris states that nearly all of the local exhibitor's leagues organized there have invariably failed in their main purpose, greatest success having been displayed in the promotion of picnics, excursions and balls. As to aiding the material welfare of the exhibitors, he states that in almost every instance they have failed in this respect, the chief cause for this being the lack of cohesion necessary to carry out plans with any degree of success. The league would be in a fair way of redeeming themselves at this time if the question of summer closing was taken up and some action taken to enlist a score of exhibitors to join in the movement.

Jesse D. Hampton to Produce Three Films Based on Bret Harte's Western Narratives

THREE of the most popular stories of the West written by Bret Harte have been purchased by Jesse D. Hampton and will be made into features for release by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual.

William Desmond will have the featured role in all three of the stories.

The first of the series of three Harte stories to be produced will be "Cressy," which of all Harte's book is probably the best known. The second offering will be "In a Hollow of the Hills," a tale of romance, adventure and big moments. The third story is "Maruja," which of all Harte's books is probably unusually interesting and colorful melodrama. The locale of all three stories is in the high Sierras back in the early fifties, and Hampton is planning to spare neither money nor effort to make these Harte stories as perfect as it is possible to make them.

Tons of Dynamite Used.

In the production of the second Harte feature it is necessary to virtually destroy an entire town. Hampton has already made arrangements to film this scene, having obtained permission to blow up an entire hill in the Sierras which the authorities wish to have removed in order to build a new road through to one of the canyons.

William Desmond has been running strongly to Western comedy dramas.

Entire Villages Will Be Erected.

Hampton will begin the production of the Harte series shortly. His plans have been completed for the details connected with the erection of the towns where the stories will be centered. The Robertson-Cole producer will have to erect entire villages in the Sierras, which entails not only a heavy expenditure, but a vast amount of work. Most of the material will have to be carried to the locations in automobile trucks, inasmuch as there is no other means of transit into the heart of the Sierras where the series of pictures will be filmed.

Hampton will also have to give considerable attention to his selections of types for Desmond's supporting casts, for the strictest adherence to Harte's characterizations will be essential to the success of the series.

Still, Madge Evans Seems Happy.
She's starring here in World's "Home Wanted," but she seems to have found a place in "Lapland."

File Plans for 2500-Seat Picture Theatre in Newark

PLANS were filed last week for the construction of the proposed picture theatre which will have an entrance at 915 Broad street, opposite the City Hall, Newark. The name selected for the new showhouse is the Rialto, leased by Max Spiegel, of New York, from the Third Presbyterian Church. Work will be started within two weeks.

The auditorium, which will have a seating capacity of 2,500, all on one floor, will be in the rear, covering a plot 104 by 150 feet. The general layout has been copied from the Greek theatre. The building will be one story and will have brick walls, with concrete foundation and floor. The present store at 915 Broad street will be used as an entrance, being converted into a lobby 104 feet long. This lobby will lead into a grand foyer.

The grand foyer, finished in marble and silks, will contain all the latest improvements and conveniences. A smoking room has been provided for the comfort of the men, while the women will be furnished with a rest room. A lounging room for the use of all patrons is also provided in the plans.

Nothing will be omitted in the way of furnishing to provide for the safety and comfort of the patrons. The cost of the structure is estimated at $250,000. Mr. Spiegel, who will act as general manager of the new Rialto, is interested in the Newark Theatre, 195 Market street, Newark, of which John B. McNally is managing director, the Strand in New York, and many other theatres in New York State.

Moving Picture World covers its field like a picture covers the screen. It is read in every country and in every clime.

UNIVERSAL EXTENDS SERVICE BUREAUS

Policy Will Include All Foreign Exchanges—Representative Sails to Install London Office

PRODUCERS are realizing more each day that the exhibitor is the man who puts the industry to the front and many are making plans to aid the exhibitor. The Universal company for more than nine months has had a service and exploitation department in each of its exchanges in the United States and Canada. It now announces the extension of this service to all its foreign exchanges.

Already a Universal representative has sailed for London to install a bureau in the London office of the company and to launch its work simultaneously with the Eddie Polo company. Preparations also are being made to establish service and exploitation bureaus in exchanges in Cuba, Mexico and South America.

Universal the Pioneer.

Universal was one of the pioneers in establishing these exchange adjuncts. Nine months ago service and exploitation bureaus in exchanges were unknown. Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, was struck with the idea that patrons should be supplied with a complete service. "It is not enough," Mr. Laemmle announced, "to obtain the exhibitor's signature to a contract. As a matter of fact, when the exhibitor signs his name, Universal's work in his behalf is only begun."

With these general instructions in mind the first service bureau was established by the company's manager, Tarkington Baker. Mr. Baker went into the territory in person and appointed the bureau managers. Later he gave them detailed instructions as to their duties.

Every Exchange a Service Bureau.

Today every Universal exchange in the United States and Canada operates a service bureau. At the head of every one of these is an experienced exploitation and service manager. He is night and day at the service of the exchange's patrons. He not only serves those exhibitors whose theatres are in the city where the exchange is situated, but he makes trips throughout the exchange territory at frequent intervals and gives every assistance in his power to the exhibitor and even to the exhibitor's patrons.

For a long time, Mr. Baker says, not only did Universal provide this service free of charge to Universal exhibitor-customers but went much further and even supplied it to exhibitors who purchased their wares elsewhere.

"I was in Chicago a few days ago," Mr. Baker said, by way of illustrating the enormous demand there is for this service assistance, "and two exhibitors came to our Chicago service manager. They asked him to lay out an extensive advertising campaign in the local Chicago papers; they asked him to contract for the space; they asked him to write the advertisements; and they asked him to prepare circulars to be mailed to residents living in the vicinity of their theatre. All this the Chicago service manager agreed to do, willingly. Quite by accident I asked the two exhibitors what pictures they had booked. Imagine my amazement when I found that they were booking pictures produced by one of our competitors! But that made no difference. We did not hesitate to give them the service they required. They got it—freely and quite as readily as our own customers would have got it."

Service Firmly Established.

This service now so firmly established in the United States and Canada is to be extended to Universal exchanges throughout the world. "That is a big undertaking," Mr. Baker said, "but Mr. Laemmle wires instructions to this effect from Universal City, where he is spending the month of June—and they'll be carried out.

"These service bureaus are not attempting to 'educate' the exhibitors. Quite the contrary. The bureaus are primarily bureaus of assistance."

Cinematographers Unite to Perfect Their Art

THE American Society of Cinematographers, organized January 8, 1919, and chartered by the State of California, has now arrived at a point where it can announce its aims and purposes.

The preamble to their constitution reads:

We hereby organize the American Society of Cinematographers in order to bring into closest confederation and cooperation all—but only—those leaders in the cinematographic science, whose attainments and exquisite art therein, are and we believe will be, an incentive and encouragement to all other followers of the art, to strive for that preeminence of perfection entitling them to membership in this organization—thus advancing the art to a point where it shall become a national pride—an element of patriotism—and at the same time promote the interest and welfare and protect the rights of all who shall be so fortunate as to be called to membership.

Our Motto: Loyalty, Progress, Art.

Our Ideal: That membership in this society may become a mark of honor and distinction based on merit.

Membership in the society can be secured only by invitation, and every man is judged solely upon his record and ability as a cinematographer and his personal fitness as a man.

Our membership to date is composed of the following cinematographers: Philip E. Rosen, Charles G. Rosher, Homer A. Scott, Victor Milner, Wm. C. Foster, Joe August, L. D. Clawson, Arthur Edeson, Eugene Gaudio, Fred LeRoy Granville, Walter L. Griffin, J. D. Jennings, Roy H. Klaffki, Robert S. Newhard, L. Guy Wilky, T. G. Gaudio, Hugh C. McClung, S. S. Norton, Albert G. Heimerl, Walter Lundin, Chester A. Lyons, Charles E. Kaufman, Frank B. Good, R. H. Totheroh, William J. Beckway, Gilbert Warrenton, King D. Gray, A. Scholtz, F. F. Baker, Edward Kull, Paul P. Wenstrom Back with Metro.

Harold Wenstrom, who turned his camera crank on the scene at the historic moment when President Wilson set foot on French soil at Brest, and again when the executive entered the peace halls in Paris, returned to Los Angeles last week and was re-engaged by Maxwell Karger, director general of Metro, to resume the work he left when he enlisted in 1917.

Song Dedicated to Marmont and Brady.

Joseph W. Stern & Co. announces that it has dedicated "I Cannot Believe I Lost You," one of its songs for the coming season, to Percy Marmont and Alice Brady, conjointly. One of the officers of the music publishers' corporation recently saw "In the Hollow of Her Hand," in which Percy Marmont was the leading man to Alice Brady, and decided on this.

The cover of this song will carry a photograph of Alice Brady and Percy Marmont.

TO PRODUCE EDUCATIONAL PICTURES

Plans of Famous Players Include Making School and Industrial Films—First Release in September

FOR several months the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has quietly prepared extensive plans for the inauguration of an educational and industrial department. Nathan H. Friend, for over two years identified with Paramount-Bray Pictographs in the capacity of general manager, took charge of this work and last week announced the completion of these plans and the actual operation of his department.

"Part of our educational department," said Mr. Friend, "will be devoted to the presentation of pictures in schools on a scale never before attempted in the industry. We will produce pictures not with this in mind as an incidental, but as the specific purpose. Films will be prepared for school exhibition only and in such a way as to make them purely educational. We do not intend to supplant the text-book. Our field will be as distinctive in this connection as the motion picture theatre is from the 'legitimate.' In fact, we have the full cooperation of authorities in the arrangement of different courses and have already formed alliances along these lines that will make acceptable the product we will have to offer.

Education by the Foot.

"Educational pictures for the theatre will also be produced. In fact, we have already started on this work and have finished several subjects. These films will be a thousand feet long and will include a program of different subjects presenting practically a complete screen magazine. This product will be known as 'Paramount Magazine.' A number of novel features will be introduced as part of the contents of these films, the nature of which demands that they be kept a secret.

Scheme Heavily Backed.

"In the production of all film for the educational and industrial department, we have at our disposal the entire producing facilities of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in this country and abroad. When the new million-dollar studio in Long Island is finished our chief activities will be housed there.

"The executive department of this branch of the organization has already become a large force at the home office of the corporation on Fifth avenue. Among those who hold important positions are W. O. Hurst, in charge of production; Henry McMahon and Carl H. Carson, handling scenarios, and Paul Terry, Frank Moser, Bert Clark, Harry Leonard, H. M. Shields, Richard A. Jones, N. K. Parkhurst and others.

First Release in September.

"Our first educational film going to theatres, or in other words, the first issue of 'Paramount Magazine,' will be released the first of September. There will be one such release a week. In order to put the best possible quality into these releases we have started work on them three months ahead of release, allowing us ample time to give them every care and attention.

"The quality of the product issued by the educational and industrial department, the producers state, will be entirely in accord with the standards of the other offerings under the Paramount and Artcraft trademark. No attempt will be made to save money or the best brains obtainable in creating films that will be made for the exact purpose for which they are intended."

Mr. Friend's staff is being augmented daily. Mr. Friend, although young in years, has had a great amount of actual experience in the motion picture field and has gone through several years of study of the ideas he is now putting into effect. Further announcement concerning details of this department is promised shortly.

HUGHES DISCUSSES FILM MATERIAL

Explains Why Over-Condensation of Novels Makes Directors "Gallop in All Directions"

ENTRY of the author into the producing field has stimulated a discussion on the novel's relation to the screen, particularly on the material provided for adaptation. One of the cries recently raised is that the action of most modern novels is inadequate to fit the adaptation into the many-reel modern picture. On this point Rupert Hughes of the new Goldwyn-Beach company, Eminent Authors' Pictures, comes forth with this statement:

"If anyone says that novels are not large enough in scope to provide material for full length pictures, that person is positively in error. While, of course, there are many novels in which there is little action and a great deal of introspective psychology, the majority of novels provide enough material in the way of action for fifteen or twenty reels. Any one of Dickens' novels is long enough to make ten seven-reel pictures. A Dumas novel has enough for twenty seven-reel pictures.

Directors on the Gallop.

"Miss Blanche Sweet said that while they were making 'The Unpardonable Sin,' they found material enough for an entire serial and greatly regretted the scarcity of footage which compelled many changes for the sake of condensation. In my own experience directors have apologized for being compelled to eliminate large portions of the plot because of lack of space to show it.

"The unpardonable sin against novels committed by motion picture scenario writers has been the fact that in almost every case they were so eager to condense the plot that they squeezed the soul out of it. The director, disgusted with the scenario, broke loose and went galloping madly in all directions, often not ceasing in his stampede until the film was finished.

"Almost all of our novelists are surprised that the movies buy pictures from them, considering how little of their material they use."

Dallas Society Suppresses Movie Conversationalist

A MOVEMENT has been launched in Dallas through the dramatic columns of a local newspaper for the purpose of squelching picture show pests. It has gained great momentum among genuine film fans and has the whole-hearted support of the managers of local moving picture shows.

The idea of the entirely informal and at the present time nameless organization is to make the theatre a place where screened pictures may be enjoyed rather than a gossiping point or chatter station.

The fan who likes to clench the arms of his chair when Blanche leaps off the cliff, or to wipe his spectacles after the death of the wounded soldier, has found himself fed up on small talk from the seats behind.

"The last time I fried 'em in batter they burned." "Willie is getting so difficult to manage. I am going to send him to military school." This is the sort of stuff which in sibilant whispers drowns the throb of the orchestra and makes fans cuss when they ought to be crying, laughing or otherwise enjoying themselves.

Dallas fans have had enough of it. They are forming a secret society to eliminate the pest. To be eligible for membership all one has to do is to promise to have nerve enough to writhe around in one's seat, direct a baleful glance at the chatterers in the rear and say in frigid tones: "Madam," or "Sir, I have come here to enjoy this picture. Please stop talking or I will have to leave."

Fans are getting moral support through their united effort and so far no fights have occurred.

Two New Fox Managers.

Two new managers have been appointed to Fox exchanges. Rudolph Knoephle has been made manager of the Cincinnati office and Frank J. McCarthy has been appointed manager of the Pittsburgh office.

NEW MOVEMENT TO UPLIFT SCREEN

Formation of an Organization to "Act as a Panacea for All Ills of the Picture and Allied Industries"

THE first meeting of the Motion Picture and Theatrical Co-operative Association, of which J. M. Quinn is president, and which announces its purpose as the formation of "an organization to be international in scope and which will act as a panacea for all ills of the picture and allied industries," was held Monday afternoon, June 14, at the Hotel Astor, New York.

Mrs. John Francis Yawger, a member of the National Board of Review, presided. There were about fifty persons present and speeches were made by Mr. Quinn, George Randolph Chester, editor of the Vitagraph scenario department; Orrin G. Cooks, of the National Board of Review; Judge William H. Wadhams, of the Child's Welfare League; Frank Bacon, now starring in "Lightnin'," and Amelia Bingham. The rest of those present consisted of half a dozen actors connected with the speaking stage, a sprinkling of press representatives, and clubwomen of more or less prominence. Aside from George Randolph Chester and Mr. Quinn, no one actively engaged in the motion picture industry took any part in the meeting.

Would Compel Better Pictures.

The parent association of which the Motion Picture and Theatrical Association of New York is a branch was organized in Los Angeles for the purpose of compelling the production of better pictures. The method by which this is to be accomplished will consist in getting the support of every branch of the industry and every organization and individual out of it that can be induced to do so to become members of the organization, which is to have branches all over the United States. Once this is accomplished the organization expects to be in a position to regulate the affairs of the industry to the satisfaction of itself and the public in general.

At the Hotel Astor meeting none of the large questions which confront the association was touched upon, except the desirability of doing away with local censorship. Remarks were made by President Quinn about the harm the star system had done to the exhibitor, but nothing was said about the stars whose pictures are box-office assets of goodly size. A considerable portion of his remarks was confined to his admiration for Frank Bacon and the class of plays this actor's work represents.

George Randolph Chester confined himself to explaining the duties of a scenario editor, and the necessity for the novelist, no matter his standing, to learn the technic of the motion picture.

Films Will Not Be Made Juvenile.

Orrin G. Cocks, in his remarks, made a plea for the proper regulation of the motion picture in its relation to the young. He reminded his hearers of the folly of attempting to keep the pictures down to the level of a twelve-year-old intellect, and told how when he was a boy it was possible for him to go to the public library and draw out books that were unsuited to his age, although right and proper for the mature mind. This mistake no longer exists. The public libraries have children's departments and place in the hands of young boys and girls only books suited to their understanding. Mr. Cocks urged the same restriction in connection with the screen, and his entire speech was safe, sane and unbiased.

Frank Bacon confessed he had had but little experience with motion pictures and told of how near "Lightnin'" escaped being given to the public first on the screen. Judge Wadhams and Amelia Bingham spoke of abuses that need correcting. The association is to hold weekly meetings.

PEARL WHITE SIGNS WITH WILLIAM FOX

Famous Serial Actress Will Be Seen in Special Productions of Notable Books and Stage Plays

PEARL WHITE, who during the past four years has been seen on the motion picture screens throughout the world by four million pairs of eyes every week, has signed a long term contract with William Fox.

Miss White will appear in special productions of famous stage successes and notable books, which have already been secured and which are now in preparation. Her first picture will be made in the Fox Film Corporation new studios in New York, and the exterior scenes will be laid in Long Island.

The negotiations for Miss White's contract were effected by Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Corporation, and the contract was signed prior to his departure for Europe. Announcement was withheld until a sufficient number of vehicles for the new Fox star would be secured. Some of the scenes of the new first feature production will be laid at Los Olmos, Miss White's country place at Bayside, Long Island. The first production will be released in September.

Pearl White.

She Holds Unique Position.

Miss White holds today a unique place in motion pictures. Her popularity in serials has been so great that a larger international distribution of her subjects has been secured than perhaps for any other motion picture of that description. She literally is known to all classes. It is her ambition, and the ambition of William Fox, for her to appear in productions that will give her exceptional talents full chance for expression. In each of the vehicles selected, the choice has been made with a special reference to versatility, and the screen is promised some surprises that are expected to make new high records, even for Pearl White.

Consolidate Office Staff of Universal and Jewel

THE Universal and Jewel offices at 1600 Broadway, New York, have combined. Sam Zierler has been made general sales manager of both the offices. The booking offices and sales force are now one.

There are now two groups of salesmen instead of three. Formerly one group sold Jewels, Universal Special Attraction and shorter subjects. Under the new plan one group will sell the Jewel and the Special Attraction brand, and the other group will sell the shorter subjects. This will give each of the salesmen a smaller territory to cover in New York City and will shorten the exhibitor's time with Universal salesmen.

W. R. Wilkerson, formerly sales manager of the New York Jewel office, is one of the men selected to act as exploitation and advance man for the series of Stage Women's War Relief pictures.

Exhibitor Steele Seriously Injured.

James Steele, who operates the Regent, Washington and Wenonah theatres, Bay City, Mich., and the Lincoln Square, Detroit, is in a critical condition at Washington County Hospital, Hagerstown, Md., as a result of an automobile accident recently. Mr. Steele, who makes his home in Pittsburgh, was motoring with his family in Maryland when his machine went over a sixty-foot embankment. He was seriously injured, his wife was also injured as well as one of his children. They were all taken to the Washington County Hospital and from latest report Mr. Steele will be confined there for many weeks.

Munsey Engages Scenarist.

Miss Beatrice Morse, scenario writer, has been engaged by the Frank A. Munsey Publications' moving picture department to synopsize its stories. Miss Morse is an experienced continuity writer, having been recently with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and World Film Corporation. She will have access to the files of the several Munsey publications for the past ten years.

KLEINE STRIKES NEW EXCHANGE ANGLE

Because Existing Methods Are Believed To Be Wasteful He Will Negotiate Now with Owners

AS a result of his cumulative experience, extending over practically the active life of the moving picture industry, George Kleine has concluded that the present system of distributor-owned exchanges makes for wastefulness. Having closed his own branches last November and cleared up the situation insofar as he was personally concerned, Mr. Kleine now advances a new proposition to exchangemen who own their own properties and are independent of binding alliances.

In his statement appearing elsewhere in this issue of Moving Picture World Mr. Kleine makes his position clear. He declares that he stopped program releases because he believed the program system had outlived its usefulness and his next step was to close out his branch establishments. Mr. Kleine prints some figures to prove his contentions and, doubtless, has more data that satisfies him in his decision.

Claims Old System Is Wasteful.

"The trend of distribution," says Mr. Kleine, "is toward the exchange owned partly or wholly by those actively in charge. There is a vast difference between the income and operating expenses of these exchanges when compared with similar institutions owned by the distributors who sit at executive tables in New York and hardly know of these independent exchanges."

"It is the incentive of ownership of one's business," adds Mr. Kleine, "that makes the owner-operated exchange the logical method of distribution. I seek now to form a close business intimacy with an independent exchange in every principal city in the United States. When necessary I will assist in establishing new exchanges in the desired localities, and in which I would have an interest."

Mr. Kleine's announcement is likely to be widely discussed throughout the trade.

Believes in Independent Offices.

It is the distributor's contention that ownership, or part ownership, by the men in charge of an exchange will work a conservation of funds and an energy of effort that will place the independent exchange beyond the dangers that have beset the older system.

That George Kleine intends to take prominence among the distributors of moving pictures is self-evident from his announcement. While he does not state in so many words that he will resume production there are those who believe he will again make pictures as well as distribute them. The name of George Kleine has been foremost among the "big ones" since the days when "pictures" were little more than an experiment.

For the past few months Mr. Kleine has not been active—but there is plenty of evidence to indicate that he will not long rest upon his laurels. His first move is to make exchange connections that meet his ideas and will elicit his financial approval.

Sedgwick to Write for Walsh.

Edward Sedgwick, who has had wide experience in motion pictures and was associated with Director Richard Stanton as assistant in the making of "Checkers," a coming big Fox production, has been assigned to the task of writing original stories for George Walsh. His first story is "The Winning Stroke."

Lewis Back on Job Again After Appendicitis Attack

IT will come as a piece of welcome news to the many friends of W. W. Lewis, a representative of the Nicholas Power Company, to know that after a battle with appendicitis he is again recovered and back on the job again fully restored to health.

Mr. Lewis hails from the Middle West and is thirty-seven years old. He is well grounded in matters pertaining to the motion picture business. After leaving school he became associated with the Southwest Electrical Company of Riverside, Cal., remaining with them until 1905, when he went to Portland and assumed charge of the electrical work on the Massachusetts Building of the Lewis and Clark Exposition, later becoming the projectionist with the Wyoming State Commission at its exhibit in the Palace of Horticulture.

Mr. Lewis has been associated with the industry since the early days. The year 1915 found him in charge of projection for the United States Government Exhibit Board in the Palace of Liberal Arts at the Panama Pacific International Exposition, where he operated a Power's Cameragraph, and achieved such distinction that the jury of awards conferred on him the medal of highest award for an exhibit of this nature.

Directly after this he became associated with the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., as its traveling representative.

Harry Cohn in New York.

Harry Cohn has arrived in New York from California with the first three releases of a series to be known as "The Hall Room Boys." The series of comedies is being made by the National Film Corporation for Jack Cohn, who controls the rights and who will soon announce the method of distribution.

Flannigan and Edwards, popular vaudeville artists, are the stars of the series.

Sult Brothers Will Build New Theatre in Berwick

THE Sult Brothers, of Berwick, Pa., owners of the Palace Theatre of that place, will commence building operations on a picture house early in July. They promise Berwick its most up-to-date playhouse.

The new theatre will have an excellent location in the downtown business section, near the corner of Front and LaSalle streets. Sult Brothers, W. M., W. B., and R. E. P. Sult, purchased the property upon which the house will go up some time ago.

The name of the theatre has not yet been announced. The building will be of fireproof construction and will add another instance to the list of beautiful houses now going up in all parts of the country.

It is expected to open the theatre by January, 1920, after which time extensive improvements will be started on the Palace.

Liberty Amusement Brings Suit.

Suit for $30,700 damages has been brought in the Denver District Court by G. W. Atkinson, doing business as the Liberty Amusement Company, against the Leonard-Haler Investment Company, owing to the failure of a lease on a Curtis street building, used as a motion picture theatre, to go through. Atkinson alleges that he entered into a contract with the investment company to lease the building from March 11, 1919, at a monthly rental of $300, and to make certain changes in the building, amounting to over $4,000. His plans were thwarted, however, by the sale of the building to the Colonial Amusement Company, thus depriving Atkinson, he asserts, of $30,000 in prospective profits and $700 other ways.

Bloxbe Features War Heroes.

The attraction at the Harris Theatre, Forty-second street, New York, June 20, 21, 22, will be the first releases of the Bloxbe Film Company's series of pictures entitled "Young America." It is claimed in a sworn affidavit that all incidents depicted are true to life.

The pictures deal with Americans who have been decorated for bravery in the war. As the actual earning of citations in real action did not take more than a few minutes, Philip Van Loan, scenario writer and director of the series, presents the life of each hero before and after the war to make up the full time of thirty minutes which it takes to view each release.

Carpenter Is Now a Daddie.

Roy Carpenter, one of the camera crew under the direction of R. A. Walsh, who is photographing a special production for William Fox in California with Miriam Cooper in the title role, is a proud father. Mrs. Carpenter presented him with an eight and a half pound daughter a week ago.

SAN FRANCISCO ENTERING FILM WORLD

Board of Supervisors Draws Up Resolution Authorizing Body to Exploit City's Advantages

THE campaign to establish moving picture studio facilities in San Francisco is assuming definite form and is being taken up by civic bodies, as well as by the Board of Supervisors. At a recent meeting of the latter, Supervisor James Mulvihill introduced a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, and which paves the way for definite action along this line. In part, this was as follows: "Resolved, That His Honor, the Mayor, in co-operation with the Public Welfare and Publicity Committee, be authorized to invite representatives of the various civic and commercial organizations to attend a conference for the purpose of selecting a special committee consisting of public officials and representatives of the various organizations who will foster and encourage the moving picture industry, which is on the eve of an era of great expansion, and the location of which business here in our midst will mean much to the prosperity of San Francisco." It was suggested at this meeting that a fund of $100,000 be raised to give publicity to the advantages of this city from a moving picture producing standpoint.

Studio Has Lease in City.

Joseph A. Eliason, of the Hermann Film Corporation, of Los Angeles, was a guest at the regular luncheon of the Home Industry League, of California, on June 12, and announced that his concern had secured a lease on the Hotaling Block, Haight, Stanyan, Page and Shrader streets, and would locate a studio there at once. He declared that conditions had become intolerable in the southern part of the state on account of the lack of natural scenic beauty. For variety of scenery and for perfect climatic conditions, he said that San Francisco offered advantages that could not be duplicated anywhere in the world. He exploded certain fallacies regarding light conditions here, that are being assiduously cultivated in the southland, declaring that local conditions are superior and citing government records to prove his point.

Companies Already in Vicinity.

Mayor James Rolph, Jr., is now at Washington, D. C., but upon his return will name a committee, comprising representatives of more than twenty organizations, and work on the studio project will be formally launched. Many companies have been working in this vicinity during the past year, but this work has been confined largely to exteriors, there being no large studios available for interior work. At the present writing, William Russell and Mary Thurman are at Lake Tahoe, working on "The Other Side of Eden;" Henry Walthall, wife and company, are also at this northern California wonder spot, while Earle Williams is likewise there with a company for Vitagraph. Like the Yosemite Valley and the Big Trees, Lake Tahoe is within a few hours' ride of San Francisco.

Marcus Loew's Secretary Marries.

Miss May Levintan, secretary to Marcus Loew and Nicholas M. Schenck, was married Sunday, June 15, to George J. Stalow and left on a trip to Schroon Lake and Montreal and Eastern Canada.

Miss Levintan has been secretary to Mr. Loew and Mr. Schenck for the past three years, assuming the position left vacant when her sister was married.

Walker Has Juvenile Lead in "Impossible Catherine"

JOHN B. O'BRIEN, director-general of the Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc., has selected Johnnie Walker to play the juvenile lead in "Impossible Catherine," the coming production to be presented by Louis Meyer.

Johnnie Walker is by no means a newcomer in filmdom. He supported Mary Fuller when that star appeared in Universal productions, and was Viola Dana's leading man in the old Edison days.

His last screen appearance before enlisting in the Navy was in the Famous Players' production of "The Knife," in which he appeared in the support of Alice Brady.

For the last eighteen months he has been an ensign in the Navy, and it is a curious coincidence that his first role after his honorable discharge should be as the American Ace in the new Virginia Pearson production.

Denver Will Bring Problems to Exhibitors' Convention

DENVER'S representative to the national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, to be held on June 25 at the Hotel Stadtler, St. Louis, will be Harry T. Nolan, president of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club. Mr. Nolan left Denver last week, making several stops en route to the place of the conference.

Nolan is armed with a number of weighty problems forwarded by the Western exhibitors. He will present such issues as censorship, Sunday opening and political domination to the other exhibitors with a view to the solution of these old problems, which, if solved, will be a ten-strike for Colorado exhibitors especially.

"Fit to Win" Favored But Gilchrist Appeals Higher

THE motion picture, "Fit to Win," the public edition of the army film, "Fit to Fight," was freed from court hindrance in New York theatres by a decision handed down by Judge Hand in the Federal District Court on June 14. The decision grants an injunction to Isaac Silverman, owner of the picture, restraining John F. Gilchrist, New York City commissioner of licenses, from interfering with the public showing of the film.

The Brooklyn Opera House had been closed by Commissioner Gilchrist for the exhibition of the picture, and an arrest made in the case of an exhibitor in 125th street, New York.

Mr. Gilchrist gained an appeal from Judge Hand's decree and will contest the matter further in the Appellate Court.

"Fit to Fight" Will Be Heavily Sheared in Dallas

"FIT TO FIGHT," a film which was criticised severely after a private showing in Dallas, will be permitted to be shown there after the shears have been used vigorously by the censor.

The appeals board deferred action while the film promoters gave a showing for doctors and received the indorsement of the Board of Health. Nauseating close-ups showing the ravages of venereal disease on the human body will be lopped out of the film. So will the section that deals with the squalor of the vice district. This was too raw for the medicos, even though they did look at it from a scientific viewpoint.

It is not known what theatre will put on "Fit to Fight." It may have to be shown on the city dump. While there won't be much left of the film after it is fumigated, it has received a good deal of ill-flavored advertising through the dispute as to its merits. The owners, it is understood, propose to show it one day to men and the next to women. The censor has ruled that boys and girls under eighteen may not see it.

Quimby on Tour of Pathe Branches.

Fred C. Quimby, director of exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., will leave on Sunday, June 22, for a six-weeks' tour of the Pathe branches, his itinerary taking him as far as Los Angeles. Mr. Quimby will visit the Pathe offices in Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles during his trip, and incidentally will attend the exhibitors' convention at St. Louis and the Western exhibitors gathering at Seattle. His tour is for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the Pathe branch offices.

CARMEN-FOX CASE AIRED IN COURT

Final Settlement of Young Star's Suit Likely to Terminate Her Year's Absence from Screen

JEWEL CARMEN, the talented screen star, played the leading role in Judge Manton's section of the United States District Court on June 17 at the hearing of her suit against the Fox Film Corporation and the William Fox Vaudeville Company, in which she is seeking to enjoin the defendants from interfering with her efforts to earn a livelihood as a motion picture actress.

Miss Carmen alleges in her complaint that the defendants prevented her from carrying out a contract with the Frank A. Keeney Productions, Inc., by threatening to enjoin the latter company from releasing pictures starring her and by entering into an agreement with the Keeney company to indemnify the latter against loss in consideration of the latter company refusing to carry out the contract.

Offered Higher Salary.

Prior to entering into the Keeney contract under which she was to receive a graduated salary commencing at $450 per week, Miss Carmen testified she was under contract to the Fox companies at a smaller salary, but she said these contracts were executed while she was a minor, and upon being legally advised that she had the right to terminate the contracts she did so in order to accept the more lucrative offer.

The contracts and the indemnity agreement entered into between the Fox companies and the Keeney company were introduced in evidence together with depositions sworn to by members of Miss Carmen's family showing that she was a minor at the time she signed the Fox contracts.

Keeney Did Not Know of Contracts.

Frank A. Keeney testified to having contracted for Miss Carmen's services, but he said he was under the impression that she was free from any contractural obligations and had he known that any technicalities might arise as to the right of his company to employ her he would not have negotiated for her services. Mr. Keeney further testified that he was advised by the Fox companies that Miss Carmen was bound by valid and binding contracts to appear exclusively in Fox productions and the indemnity agreement was finally executed to protect his company.

Fox Increases Salary.

William Fox testified he had been legally advised that Miss Carmen's contracts were valid and he said he was determined to enforce the performance of the contracts by all legal means. Mr. Fox said he was and is willing to employ Miss Carmen at a more liberal salary than the contracts provided for, stating that he had very recently authorized his counsel, Saul E. Rogers, of Rogers & Rogers, to make her an offer of $400 a week.

Whatever the outcome of the suit may be, it now appears likely that Miss Carmen will return to the screen in the near future after an absence of nearly a year due to the pending litigation. Briefs were submitted on the questions of law involved in the case and Judge Manton took the matter under advisement and will probably render a decision in about ten days.

Emerson and Anita Loos Make Permanent Alliance

JOHN EMERSON and Anita Loos have still further cemented their long business partnership by forming a permanent alliance. The well-known writers for the screen were married on the afternoon of Sunday, June 15, at 5 o'clock, at the summer home of Norma Talmadge, at Bayside, L. I. The bride and groom stood under an exquite bower of white sweet peas, carnations and snowy doves. Only a very few intimate friends, the three Talmadge sisters, Norma, Constance and Natalie, Mrs. Talmadge, and Joseph M. Schenck, were present. The ceremony was performed by Judge Frederic Kernochan.

After the wedding, an informal party was held on the lawn of the Talmadge estate, where all the trees were gaily decorated with brightly colored Chinese lanterns. A dinner for sixteen followed in the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. John Emerson have taken a house for the summer at Great Neck, L. I. On Tuesday, June 1, they returned to work at the Constance Talmadge studio, where they are now busily engaged on their story for Miss Talmadge's first National picture, "The Temperamental Wife," which is expected to be ready for cutting and titling in about one week.

Agnel Returning to Chester.

A cable from Raymond Agnel, former Outing-Chester cameraman, announced last week that he has been discharged from the French army, and will be back here in July. He will resume his position and start on a camera trip for C. L. Chester.

Eugene Roth Sees Bright Future for Exhibitors

EUGENE ROTH, managing director of the California and Portola theatres, San Francisco, has returned from a business trip to New York, on which he landed the output of the United Artists and what he considers the cream of the Hearst-Zitel, Famous Players-Lasky productions. The return trip was made by way of Los Angeles, where he spent four days looking over the producing field.

In speaking of conditions in the film world, he said: "I was greatly pleased to note that producers throughout the country are listening to the demand of exhibitors and the general public and have adopted the policy of making fewer but better pictures. This is a big step in advance, and will do more than any other one thing to standardize the business. It will prove more profitable for producers and exhibitors and will serve to maintain the interest of the public, upon which both depend.

"There is no doubt but that the open booking policy is more satisfactory to all concerned, and since better rentals can be secured for quality pictures, poor ones will be limited in number in the future. Wherever I stopped on my trip, I found a healthy condition in the exhibiting end of the business, not only in point of receipts, but in better exploitation and presentation. Pictures are now being shown in more pleasing environment, which is bound to reflect to the good of all."

Doraldina Engaged to Play in Masters' "Cave Woman"

E. LANNING MASTERS, INC., which brought about the negotiations of the deal last week whereby the Jess Willard picture, "The Challenge of Chance," was taken over by the Frank G. Hall interests—the deal involving an excess of half a million dollars—announces that it has in preparation for showing a new picture featuring Doraldina, the dancing girl. The picture was produced by the Pyramid Picture Corporation and carries the title "The Cave Woman." It is in six reels and will be released as a special.

The Masters organization announces that it is in a position to handle meritorious picture propositions in all their stages, including financing, production, marketing and exploitation. As outlined by Mr. Masters, his organization is divided into departments, each of which has a specific purpose, such as advertising, financing, publicity, authors and marketing.

Thousands of exhibitors in every state in the Union are paying $3 a year for The World and receive benefits that repay their investment over and over again. Their desks may be loaded down with unopened and unread circulars, posters, house organs and "promotion" letters—but they READ The World because they pay their money for it and find in its pages the help they need in conducting their business.

Lionel Barrymore Will Appear on Screen in Dramatic Success "The Copperhead"

LIONEL BARRYMORE will be seen on the screen in his dramatic success, "The Copperhead." Arrangements to that end were completed last week by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and the production will be released under the Paramount-Artcraft trademark during the coming year.

Dramatized by Augustus Thomas from the story by Frederick Landis, the play was presented by John D. Williams at the Shubert Theatre, New York, February 18, 1918, and was at once acclaimed one of the most notable dramatic performances of a generation. At the opening a precedent was established when the big audience remained for ten minutes after the final curtain to pay tribute with cheers and bravos for the star, producer and author, chiefly the first mentioned, for his performance, which has been characterized as the greatest individual dramatic achievement by an American actor since the days of Edwin Booth. After a long run at the Shubert, Mr. Barrymore duplicated his success in a number of other large cities of the country, continuing until he came to New York this spring to appear with his brother, John Barrymore, in "The Jest."

A Civil War Drama.

The scenes of the play are laid in southern Illinois—a section where the bitterest feeling existed between the respective sympathizers of the North and South during and for many years following the Civil War. Milt Shanks, the leading character in the drama, is known and despised by the Northerners as a "Copperhead."

Lionel Barrymore, although he has appeared in motion pictures, is best known for his work on the "legitimate" stage, his career dating from 1893, when he was seen in "The Rivals," in which his grandmother, the late Mrs. John Drew, was appearing as Mrs. Malaprop.

Jess Willard's "The Challenge of Chance" Opens to Big Crowds at the Park Theatre

SPORT writers throughout the country are of the opinion, according to their statements in the newspapers for the past few days, that there will be a large attendance of women at the Willard-Dempsey championship bout in Toledo on July 4. They state that on the first day of the seat sale in Chicago more than $600 worth of tickets were purchased by women.

This is interpreted by Frank G. Hall, distributor of "The Challenge of Chance," in which Jess Willard is starred, and which opened at the Park Theatre, New York, June 18, as a forecast of the appeal that the champion will have for the feminine picture fans. They base their belief on the ground that if women will go to a championship boxing bout, paying heavily for seats, transportation and accommodations to see a champion in action, there is good reason to suspect that they will pay a smaller sum into the box office of a motion picture theatre to see the champion in action on the screen.

With Arline Pretty playing the feature feminine role opposite the champion and a big production to introduce him, Jess Willard has proved a pleasing revelation to the screen fans and a welcome addition to the list of screen heroes. Fred. L. Wilke, president of Continental Pictures Corporation, produced the picture. Harry Revier directed and Roy Somerville wrote the story, continuity and sub-titles. Frank G. Hall controls the United States and Canadian rights and the picture is now running at the Park Theatre to big business at every performance.

Mr. Hall announces the picture will continue indefinitely at the Park. He also announces heavy bookings from all parts of the country embracing the larger theatres in the big cities.

Woody Leaves for West.

J. S. Woody, general sales manager for Realart Pictures Corporation, left New York last week on an extended trip. Mr. Woody will visit the principal cities of the West and Middle West, establishing exchanges for Realart. His first objective is Chicago, where he is meeting distributors and exhibitors from that territory. From Chicago Mr. Woody moves on to St. Louis, then to Cincinnati, where he has engagements to fill in the interests of his company. Later he will go to Detroit and Minneapolis. After covering the Middle Western territory Mr. Woody will go to Seattle, then to San Francisco, and later to Los Angeles.

Jane and Catherine Lee Enter Producing Field

JANE AND KATHERINE LEE, the little film stars, are seeking new distinction and further fortune by entering the producing field. Hereafter they will specialize in two-reel comedy dramas made by themselves. They have organized their own corporation, acquired a studio, employed directors, engaged players, contracted for scripts and already are working in their first production at their new workshop, the Erbograph Studios, with Tefft Johnson, their director-general, in charge. Phillip Bartholomew supplies the scenario.

Jane Lee
Now with the Lee Productions, Inc.

Two-reel comedy dramas, a picture each month, will, for the present, be produced by the new corporation. Later contemplated enlargement of product will be realized. The decision to concentrate on two-reel comedy dramas was reached after a six months' survey of the exhibiting field and accepting counsel of many successful exhibitors. "Short, snappy stories—better pictures, appealing to adults as well as to children, and a production each month" is a summary of their policy.

Associated with the Lee family as producers of their own pictures is Louis T. Rogers, connected for many years with the industry as an executive. The new venture will be known as the Rogers Film Corporation and will be housed in the new Capitol Theatre building, Broadway at Fifty-first street.

Mrs. Drew Buys "The Gay Old Dog."

Mrs. Sidney Drew has just purchased for screen production, through Mrs. Julia R. Tutwiler, Edna Ferber's story, "The Gay Old Dog," which appeared some time ago in the Metropolitan magazine. This story is reckoned one of the best that Miss Ferber has written, and since its first appearance, has been republished in a collection of her short stories.

Finis Fox Injured.

Finis Fox, scenario writer at Metro's West Coast studio, is on the job but his head is swathed in bandages. His auto overturned on a downtown corner and he suffered a nasty cut on the scalp and a number of bruises. He "boarded" at the California Hospital for two days.

Miss Traverse's Injury Not Serious.

The fall from her horse which badly bruised Madlaine Traverse while she was engaged in making "Rose of the West" (hitherto known as "Until Eternity") did not seriously delay the picture. After remaining in bed three days Miss Traverse was back at work.

Metro Exchangemen Meet at Annual Convention

MANAGERS of the Metro Pictures Corporation exchange branches gathered at the corporation's headquarters in the Longacre Building at 1476 Broadway, New York, June 18. The official headquarters of the convention will be at the Hotel Astor, where most of the exchangemen are stopping while they are in New York. W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro, will open the convention Friday morning, June 20, with an outline of the elaborate plans with which the firm proposes to handle the distribution of its forthcoming "fewer, bigger and better" productions.

The opening date for the distribution of the new features as announced by Mr. Atkinson will be on or about September 1 of this year, and the plans which he will impart to his exchange managers cover in detail the manner in which Metro will market its new specials. His address will be followed by one by Harry J. Cohen, foreign manager of the company.

EDUCATORS TO CONSIDER SCREEN VALUES

Committee Will Demonstrate Usefulness of Moving Picture Film for School and Collegiate Purposes

A DENT finally has been made in the indifferent attitude with which the National Education Association has regarded the moving picture; and this year for the first time in the existence of the association the educational value of the screen is to be demonstrated at a convention to be held in Milwaukee July 1 to 7. For this purpose a committee has been appointed consisting of the following well known persons: Alfred W. WHAT THE EDUCATIONAL SCREEN SHOWS

Modern Culinary Methods, Making of Pottery and Fountain Pens—The Beaver in Industrial Moods

"Cooking by Long Distance."

NO. 6121 of the Bray Pictograph contains a demonstration of how the modern housewife can keep peace in the family without laboring over a hot cook stove. It seems that in New York City there is an organization of practical cooks who prepare dinners in a community kitchen and who send them to homes where they are desired. The food is packed in containers which preserve both heat and cold for many hours and is transported by automobile to servantless homes of the moderately rich. The picture is interesting and is a forceful illustration of modern invention.

"First Families of America."

The Bray Pictograph No. 6121 also contains a most instructive and beautiful series of pictures showing life among the primitive artists of America. This subject, which is the first of a series called "First Families of America," exhibits the exquisite black glazed pottery made by the Santa Clara Indians of New Mexico. The Indians are seen modeling, firing, and glazing their pots and vases by methods which, except in point of detail, were the same a thousand years ago as they are today.

"Pen Points of Progress."

An industrial reel released by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., illustrating the growth of writing as a means of communication from the Stone Age to the present time is entitled "Pen Points of Progress." It exploits the manufacture of Waterman Fountain pens and is developed in a highly interesting way, showing the preparation of rubber from the time it leaves the plantation until it is made into the pen holder and the way in which gold pen points are made. The opening and closing scenes are animated drawings, but most of the film is in straight pictures.

"The Beaver."

In a recent issue of the Pathe Review are some extraordinary illustrations of beaver industry. Closeups of beavers at work cutting down saplings and hauling them to prospective home sites in the river are a tribute to the efficiency of the camera conveying intimate knowledge of animal life. The picture stands as one of the best of its kind that has been made.

To Discuss Pictures for Churches.

The committee in charge of motion pictures for the Centenary Convention of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Columbus, Ohio, under the direction of the Rev. Dr. Reisner and the Rev. C. C. Marshall, of New York, plan to hold a discussion to discover the kinds of pictures required for churches. This will apply both to those used in the Sunday services and by the various organizations connected with the churches. The National Board of Review has been requested to assist in forming this program and to present the system under which they are already making selections of the finest pictures for such purposes. It is expected that D. W. Griffith, who has expressed great interest in this development, will be present and will speak. The date of the conference is set tentatively for July 8.

Films for Social Welfare Work.

At the National Conference of Social Work, held at Atlantic City, June 1 to 6, Orrin G. Cocks, of the National Board of Review, was called in to demonstrate the advisability of using films in social welfare work. Following the general meeting each night on the Steel Pier pictures of various character appropriate to the discussions in hand were shown.

The subjects shown included child welfare, delinquency, family problems, mental hygiene, Americanization and industry. The demonstration was well received and stimulated interest in the moving picture film as an educator and aid in the correction of social delinquency.

Famous Players-Lasky Will Distribute Nature Pictures

ONE of the distinctive features of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's offerings to exhibitors next season will be the Paramount-Post Nature Pictures, a series of moving picture studies of nature in her most charming moods.

It is announced that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release twenty-six of these pictures next season, the first to be released in the first week of September. Ten of the pictures already have been completed, and, although great care and time are spent on each production, the picture will be released regularly on a basis of one every two weeks.

Nature, as she expresses herself in the United States and Canada, furnished the field for the Paramount-Post Nature Pictures. They are produced by the Post Pictures Corporation, co-operating with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and are made under the direction of Clyde E. Elliott, general director of the Post Pictures Corporation. The photography is the work of W. A. Van Scoy and H. C. Shimeld.

The Post Pictures Corporation is a New York corporation with offices at 527 Fifth avenue. It has centered on the production of fine nature and travel pictures. The officers of the company are Albert Redfield, president, and Clyde E. Elliott, vice-president and general director.

Dedicates Song to Norma Talmadge.

Irving Berlin, a popular song writer, has dedicated his newest composition to Norma Talmadge. It is called "The New Moon," and both the words and the music were inspired by Miss Talmadge's Russian story of the same name. This song will be welcomed by exhibitors now showing "The New Moon" as a fitting selection for their orchestras during the presentation of this picture.

ROEBLING THEATRE OPENS IN BROOKLYN

Within Forty-five Minutes of Starting Time Standing Room Is Sold in New Picture House

THIRTEENTH in the chain of Mayer & Schneider theatres, the Roebling Theatre, Roebling street and Lee avenue, Brooklyn, opened its doors on Friday the 13th. It all went to show that superstition has no place in the League of Nations, for by 8 p. m. the sidewalks in front of the house was blocked with those seeking admission, and by 8:45 there was standing room only. The crowd had been drawn by purely local advertising and by the exterior of the house, which was decorated with flags and colored lights.

Under the direction of Manager Ayton Harold Jacoby, a special program was gone through which included, besides "Daddy Long Legs," a Harold Lloyd comedy and Pathe weekly, the personal appearance of the Lee sisters of Fox Films, and Pearl Shepherd. Mrs. Lee was there to see Jane and Catherine appear on the flower decorated stage. The dedication speech was made by Isaac H. Chadwick, who also introduced the speakers. The jokes and pretty sayings made by the little actresses were much appreciated by the audience, which was generous with its applause. Miss Shepherd gave a few words of welcome, which the house accepted heartily.

House Seats 1,200.

The house was built by Solomon & Sons, of Brooklyn, on a lot 110 by 150. The area available has been fully utilized, and the house, a single-floored one, seats 1,200. There are no intervening posts, which gives the theatre a broad and spacious effect. The lobby is about 15 by 18 feet. The stage is shallow, and designed for screen use only.

The exterior of the house is brick, with white stone facings. In the lobby, the walls are faced with red marble, with gold leaf trimmings and panelings. There were no ornaments except the floral gifts sent the management by their friends. These were so numerous that they were also used on the stage and in the space at the rear of the house.

The theatre proper has been effectively decorated by Alfred B. Rosenstein, of Brooklyn. Gray is the preponderating note, offset by gold framed panels on the walls and bead work near the ceiling. Through two of these panels ventilation is effected. Four gold-finished chandeliers hung toward the corners of the ceiling, supplement two concentric circles of electric lights in the center, one about forty feet in diameter and the other about eight. On the walls, double candlesticks, with blue shades, are left lighted during the performance.

Building Is Fireproof.

A general appearance of being circular in form is given by the walls, which shape in toward the stage, and which come near together again where the lobby opens into the house. This, besides giving a maximum seating capacity, has a well balanced effect.

Projection is supplied by two Power's 6A machines. The operator's room is above the lobby. The entire building is fireproof, and this room is inclosed in concrete approximately a foot thick. A good-sized window opens into the rewinding room adjoining, and this, with an opening through the roof immediately above the machines, provides a cool place for the operator to work in. Entrance is by a ladder on the wall at the rear of the house.

Music at the opening performance was supplied by an eight-piece orchestra.

Actors with Stage Careers Used in "American Way"

THE cast supporting Dorothy Green, who plays with Arthur Ashley in her debut with World Pictures as a star in "The American Way," now being produced under the direction of Frank Reicher, includes Carl Sauerman, who supported Elsie Ferguson in "Such a Little Queen." This Channing Pollock's play the late Henry B. Harris star.

Another actor in this picture who has made theatrical history is Lisle Leigh. This actress has been identified with some of the biggest stage successes known to Broadway during the past decade. It is the policy of World Pictures in casting a production to give preference, all things being equal, to the actor who has made a name for himself in dramatic productions in order to help the exhibitor with the publicity that is attached to those who have scored in well-known stage successes.

Chapin Joins Pathe Scenario Staff.

Fred Chapin, scenario writer, playwright and author, has joined the scenario staff of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and is now working on a serial shortly to be announced.

ONE MILE PER HOUR IS DALLAS SPEED

One Mile of Film, That Is, and in One Year Enough Film Unwinds to Encircle Earth Twice

GENE FINLEY, publicity shark for the Hulsey interests in Dallas and a mathematician of the highest order, has used up a pack of lead pencils and a ream of copy paper doping out statistics on the local moving picture show business. His deductions would do credit to a Senior Wrangler from dear old Oxford.

Finley figures that the moving picture theatres of Dallas run on an average of a mile of film per hour. There are ten shows which operate between 11 a. m. and midnight. Seven shows run from 7 p. m. until midnight. Three vaudeville shows which make pictures a big feature each run four miles of film a day.

Every day, according to this accounting, 150 miles of celluloid are peeled through the projectors for the benefit of film-mad Dallas fans. This means that each year 55,050 miles of film, or enough to girdle old mother earth two and a half times, is run off in Dallas every year.

Two Million Feet Per Annum.

Coming down to feet—laughs, tears, groans and snores are evoked in the ratio of 289,080,000 feet a year. Now every foot of moving picture film contains just sixteen little different and distinct pictures. Gene Finley figures that the people of Dallas see 4,625,280,000 separate screen photographs in the course of twelve months—yet prosper and crowd the box offices seeking to see more.

Figures on what it costs to produce these pictures can be obtained only through the producing companies' press agents, and hence cannot be considered reliable. Finley is dealing only with cold facts.

He can tell, however, what the sovereign people of the Texas metropolis cough up gleefully each year for their moving picture amusement. This is exclusive of the war tax, which even adds a kick to soft drinks.

Ten Thousand Patrons a Day.

A canvass of film houses and moving picture show owners gives a conservative estimate of 10,000 persons seeing pictures in Dallas each day. Counting the kids and the grown-ups the average cost of admission per capita is 15 cents. This means that $3,000 is pushed over the marble. In a year it amounts to $1,095,000.

Finley worked out these statistics for the purpose of proving that the moving picture business ranked among the most important of those which have built up Dallas to what the city is today. The latest population estimate is 160,000.

Schnitzer Returns from Trip.

"Summer business in the Middle West promises to be above the average." This statement was made by Joe Schnitzer, Universal's general sales-manager who returned last week from an extensive trip which covered the country as far as Oklahoma City. Mr. Schnitzer made the trip for the purpose of superintending the new Universal sales plan announced through the trade papers.

"I talked to many exhibitors on this trip about our new sales plan as well as general business. Practically every one agreed that our new plan would assist them. Many told me they expected to do a greater business this summer than in any past summer."

Kansas Towns Discover How Big Money Is Made

EXHIBITORS in the smaller towns are discovering that the big money can be made in their own theatres, when they get up the nerve to tackle the job as the theatres in the cities tackle it.

The Marshall theatre at Manhattan, Kansas, took on "Daddy Long-Legs" the other day. The picture was booked for three days, and an advertising campaign mapped out. In the three days nearly a thousand dollars was taken in. And Manhattan hasn't more than 5,000 inhabitants—with no soldiers, now, to swell the attendance at the theatre. The expense of advertising was not great, local newspapers being chiefly used.

C. R. Lindsley, at Parsons, Kansas, whose New Elks seats a thousand, also has this new idea of multiple performances for a big picture. He booked the "Kaiser's Finish" for three days. He not only sold out the capacity of the house, but had them waiting in line, on the last two days. "It would have been a shame to have given only one day's showing," said a local Parsonian. "The people got up and shouted, during the first two shows—and what a disappointment it would have been to the rest of us if we hadn't had a chance to go and find out what caused all that enthusiasm!"

Visit of Film Magnates to Southwest May Portend Big Theatre Developments

GREAT moving picture theatre deals loom portentously in Southwestern territory following the recent extended visit to Dallas of S. A. Lynch, of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, and Y. V. Freeman, his general manager. They were here late in May and early in June.

Acccording to reports current in moving picture circles, S. A. Lynch is planning a gigantic deal which will put him in control of moving picture theatres of the highest class in the states of Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

It is stated that while in Dallas Mr. Lynch made a proposition to E. H. Hulsey, who owns three theatres in Dallas, one in Waco, two in Galveston and one in Houston, for the purchase of his holdings.

Hulsey Reported Antagonistic.

Julian Saenger, president of the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans, who owns theatres in Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi, came to Dallas and conferred with Mr. Lynch for a whole day during his visit here. E. V. Richards, vice president and general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, was also present at the meetings.

Current report says there is little likelihood that E. H. Hulsey, who also owns the First National Exhibitors Circuit film business here, will consent to closing such a deal at any price. Mr. Hulsey is one of the most progressive showmen in the country and his up to date methods have made every theatre he has been connected with a success. It is not known just what has resulted from the purported negotiations with the New Orleans men.

New Theatres Building.

Reports in Southwestern film exchange circles are to the effect that S. A. Lynch is undoubtedly coming into this territory as a theatre owner on a large scale. It is said that Pierre Levy, of Fort Worth, and J. Lytle, of San Antonio, both owners of several large theatres, have been consulted regarding the matter. Several large theatre enterprises in this territory are already under way with buildings contracted for. On their completion it may be found that S. A. Lynch is the man behind some of the new shows. As a distribution center Southwestern territory is now declared by film men to be second to none in the world and developments of tremendous importance to the Southwestern moving picture business may be expected soon.

He Must Be Some Letter Writer

If he can make Norma Talmadge look like that in her Select, "The Way of a Woman."

It Was a Saturday Evening Post Story.

An article in last week's issue called attention to a story by Homer Croy published in a prominent magazine of the date of May 24. The title of the tale was "The Movie on the Rhine." It was the Saturday Evening Post, as we stated in an article written by Mr. Croy printed on June 14, that carried the interesting description of the difficulties of showing pictures to the American doughboy.

Poland to Write for Universal.

Joseph Franklin Poland, a well-known screen author, has been placed under contract to write exclusively for Universal. Poland is the author of "The Spitfire of Seville," which was recently completed at Universal City with Hedda Nova as the star.

STARS NEED GOOD VEHICLES TO DRAW

Advertising, Says Manager Ellison of Denver, Will Not Help a Poor Play, Even if Actor Is Good

MOVING pictures are past the experimental stage and are no longer a novelty to the sophisticated American public," declares Homer S. Ellison, proprietor of the Rialto and Princess, two of Denver's largest and most progressive moving picture houses, in reviewing the after-war situation to a correspondent of the Moving Picture World. "The moving picture has taken its place among the legitimate amusements of the present day, and producer and exhibitor must deliver the goods or lose out.

"Fancy and alluring posters on the outside of the theatres featuring pictures that lack the punch no longer loosen the purse-string of the educated American theatre-goer," continued Mr. Ellison. "However, advertising is a potent factor of the moving picture game. It is just as necessary in this business as in the business of dry goods concerns and department stores.

Uses Printer's Ink Freely.

"I don't believe in holding back the advertising matter concerning a big coming feature picture on the grounds that it will hurt a production being featured at a playhouse. Let the public in on the ground floor. Let them know what is coming. That is my policy with my patrons. I used plenty of printer's ink and all sorts of sheet advertising at the Rialto several days before the first showing of Douglas Fairbanks in 'The Knickerbocker Buckaroo.' The result was that I did $500 more business on the opening day than I had on any other first day program on which Fairbanks was featured. And I didn't hurt the current business a bit.

"Nowadays, the star alone won't bring the crowds up to the box office. The star must have the vehicle. Lesser stars, with strong vehicles, are a better drawing card than the greatest of silent drama performers with a weak and unsatisfactory play. When we showed Sessue Hayakawa and Fanny Ward in 'The Cheat,' we drew big houses, because the vehicle was good. Since then they have appeared in pictures lacking the class of 'The Cheat,' and the result has been to show that there are no good box office attractions without a proper vehicle.

"With a star advertised on your bill, backed by a good vehicle, you fill your house, but without the latter you do not."

Pathe Employes Not Having Bonus to Share in Profits

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announced last week a new distribution of profits to employes in addition to the several bonus propositions which have long been in vogue with this concern. This new distribution was referred to by Pathe at the dinner recently held in his honor.

The new proposition is for the benefit of those employes who do not share in the various bonuses and is so arranged that each of these employes when he has been with the firm one year, will on the anniversary of his coming with Pathe receive a check for double his weekly compensation for that week.

Branch managers, bookers, cashiers and salesmen have participated in liberal bonuses at bi-monthly periods, these bonuses being the reward for increased business through their efforts. Home office heads of departments also are paid bonuses based on business brought in through their efforts.

With the new system of anniversary checks each and every employe of Pathe exchange from office boys up will participate in the profits.

Civil War Veterans Like "Secret Service" Picture

BEING desirous that the Paramount-Artcraft special, "Secret Service," should be perfect in historical detail before allowing it to be released as scheduled June 15, the executives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation arranged for a number of Civil War veterans, officers of the Grand Army of the Republic, to see the picture at a private showing and offer criticisms.

Accordingly, Matthew B. Brennan, commander Dahlgren-Powell Post, of New York; H. J. Kearney, commander of the Veterans of Farragut's Fleet; Willian F. Kirchner, chairman of the Memorial Committee of the G. A. R.; James R. Silliman, president of the New York State Home for Soldiers and Sailors, and Captain Fritsch, who had acted as the committee's organizer, sat in the Famous Players-Lasky projection room recently and watched the presentation of Hugh Ford's version of William Gillette's play, with Major Robert Warwick in the stellar role. Each of the veterans had been chosen as a special authority on essential subjects.

Two days later President Zukor received the following letter:

Having been invited with a number of representative members of the Grand Army of the Republic to view the photoplay called "Secret Service," one of your Civil War productions, I feel it my duty to say to you that I consider it as a great education for the new generation now coming in after the close of the World War.

I consider "Secret Service" to be as near perfection as any representation of costumes and scenery could be produced after such a lapse of time.

I would advise all Grand Army men to see "Secret Service" and to write to Mr. Zukor, giving their views of the play.

Nehls Uses Old Negatives in Building of Hothouse

R. R. NEHLS, general manager of the American Film Company, has ideas of his own concerning efficient management and business economy. Recently out at the Santa Barbara plant of the American, he observed an accumulation of "dead" negatives—some of the thousands that are used yearly in the making of "stills," news pictures and star portraits.

He conceived the idea of utilizing these old plates in the erection of hot houses for the storage of plants and shrubbery used in film settings. The structures were built of a framework of squares and molding strips into which the glass plates were fitted. It is estimated that 2,500 plates were required for both structures.

In addition to the conservation of glass the scheme yielded approximately $150 worth of silver from the emulsion removed from the plates.

Prizma Graduates Students.

William Van Doren Kelley, who is principally responsible for the development of the Prizma processes, and who has been an investigator and student in the field of color motion photography for nearly twenty years, is conducting a school for cameramen. When these students have reached a certain degree of efficiency in color photography by means of the Prizma cameras, they will be sent to the different parts of the world to secure subjects of a character that lend themselves to the Prizma processes. Already several have graduated and have been dispatched, one to Java and another to Central America. Within the next few weeks two more will make their departure from the United States to distant lands to secure negatives that will entertain and educate theatre patrons in this country.

JAPAN CENSORS CUT OUT LOVE SCENES

This, Says Ushizo Ono, with Nipponese Liking for Own Films Works Against American Product

CLEAN pictures of the heavy dramatic sort and comedies of the slapstick variety are the American film features that are acceptable to the mass of the Japanese theatre goers, according to Ushizo Ono, representative of the Japan Cinematograph Company, who has just contracted for the entire Robertson-Cole Star Series for Japan. The Japan Cinematograph Company owns 320 of the 450 theatres in the island empire of the Pacific and produces twelve five-reel pictures a month in Japan for exhibition there.

"The common people, as you would say, or about 70 per cent. of the people in Japan, like Japanese made pictures alone," said Mr. Ono, "and about 30 per cent. of the population also like American and other foreign pictures. Of course Japan is a progressive country and almost everyone there likes an educational picture. Indeed, pictures showing western customs in manufacturing and industry generally are very welcome to the people.

Do Not Want Sex Pictures.

"The Japanese people are very artistic and they like artistic pictures. The better educated persons are those who like to see American drama, but they do not want any sex questions in the pictures. They like high class drama. Some of the Robertson-Cole stars are already well known in Japan. The Nipponese people like pictures with plenty of action at all times and they particularly like plenty of action in comedies.

Strict Censorship Observed.

"Foreign producers generally do not realize the strict censorship which exists in Japan. No hugging or kissing or open demonstrations of affection are permitted to be shown, for the Central Censorship does not like children to see and emulate this. Frequently 1,000 feet is cut from a film of 5,000 feet, and it is estimated that about one in twenty of the foreign pictures is entirely prohibited."

The average capacity of the Japanese theatre is about 1,000, according to Mr. Ono, and the admission charge varies from about six cents in American money to twenty-five cents. New theatres are constantly being built and he believes the Empire can support about 2,000. He claims, however, that foreigners find it impossible to succeed in getting the business there because of the general public demand for Japanese-made pictures.

China Has About Sixty Theatres.

The Japan Cinematograph Company is now preparing to extend to China. At the present time, Mr. Ono said, there are about sixty theatres in China and most of these are in the American and English colonies. There is little Chinese demand for pictures and another difficulty is the lack of transportation facilities. It is very difficult to get prints circulated among the interior cities.

Free Picture Shows in Dallas Parks.

The open air free motion picture season in Dallas is on in full swing at the score or more public parks. The city commission this year voted for moving pictures free of charge in every park where a sufficient attendance was assured each night. Henry Putz, veteran moving picture showman, has the city contract and reports that the crowds are greater than at any time during the past six years.

Novel Trade Advertisement Planned for Picture Papers

UNIVERSAL'S advertising manager has announced a new ad to appear in an early issue of the trade magazines, which, he believes, never before has been equaled for elegance and artistry.

The ad—or twelve-page ad—is to be used in connection with the advertising campaign of the Stage Women's War Relief series of pictures which are to be released through Universal. They will consist of a series of twelve pages of "butcher" stock to form an artistic background with a mount of cream color on each page. The mount will be the photograph of one of the twelve of the most prominent stars in the entire cast for the series. The mount will be tipped on the "butcher" stock and will be embossed.

Law Prevents Selling of Standing Room in San Juan

ACCORDING to the terms of a joint resolution of the legislature at San Juan, Porto Rico, just opproved by the Governor, moving picture houses can only sell the number of tickets equal to the seats available. This law is designed to prevent overcrowding and to overcome the "prejudicial effect of keeping the public agglomerated in places where the atmosphere may easily become vitiated."

The joint resolution provides that whereas "it is a menace to public health to permit, in places where exhibitions are not given in the open air, as now happens in the so-called moving picture shows, where, in a deliberate manner and unmindful of the health of the patrons, more seats are sold than are available," and whereas "we already have had to lament in the said places the crowding of children and women, which has not been sufficient to make such moving picture theatres take proper measures to protect the public," be it enacted "that any owner of a theatre, moving picture theatre, or any other place devoted to public exhibitions, shall make a declaration and post same to the public in a conspicuous place as to the number of seats that he has and the classification thereof, and that at no time shall there be sold tickets for more seats than the number available at such places, whether such are numbered or not."

Fan Magazine Campaign for New Pathe Serial

PATHE has decided to branch out in a new field in the exploitation of its next serial, "The Great Gamble," featuring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison, which is scheduled for release on August 3. It has been decided to take considerable display space in the important fan magazine in an effort to increase serial patronage.

Pathe executives have decided that the growth in circulation and popularity of the fan magazines has been sufficient within the past year to warrant their use. One or two of them have reached the half-million mark in circulation. Billboards, newspaper and national periodicals have been used in the past.

The advertising campaign on the serial will be keyed so that the exhibitor will realize its value. Each of the display ads will have a coupon to be mailed by the reader to his favorite picture theatre asking the management to play this serial. Thus the manager will have a concrete demonstration of the desire of his patrons to see the serial.

Circuit's Minneapolis Office Moves Into Larger Quarters

THE Minneapolis First National Exchange has moved from the Film Exchange Building to new and larger quarters on the fourth floor of the Loeb Arcade.

J. F. Cubberly, manager of the local office, is this week supervising the carpenters, painters and other workmen who are busy getting the exchange into first class shape.

New racks and new slide cases have been provided, and all the stock is being inventoried and placed in the best possible condition.

New systems of bookkeeping, accounting, shipping, handling of paper and inspection, are also being installed. All of the prints are being renovated.

In fact, it is a general house cleaning on the part of Mr. Cubberly, who found the old offices too cramped to comfortably accommodate the rapid expansion of business.

A projection room is being operated in connection with the new office, a feature that was lacking at the other building.

Moving picture accessories may be quickly disposed of through announcements in The World's Classified advertising.

"I'LL TAKE MY COMEDY STRAIGHT"

Says Taylor Holmes, Serious Humorist and Comedy Star for Triangle—Works on Idea It Takes a Real Chicken to Cross the Road and So Get Following

By William J. Reilly

REMEMBER Taylor Holmes in "Taxi?" Remember how, as "Slim" the expert taxi driver, he would climb in behind the wheel of his Ajax and spin away to take home some gentleman whose thirst had been too great? Didn't he look right at home? You never would have dreamed, would you, that Taylor would be thirty-eight minutes late for an interview for no other reason than that on the way to the interview his car stalled at one of the busiest points of busy old Broadway?

For thirty-seven minutes and a half, publicity director Lem Stewart, of Triangle, and his soft-voiced Southern, and soon-to-be-a-star assistant, entertained the representative of the Moving Picture World, awaiting the arrival of Mr. Holmes.

"He has never been late to an appointment," said Mr. Stewart. "I cannot imagine what is detaining him."

A New Sort of "Vehicle."

On the tick of the thirty-eighth minute Taylor Holmes, whose starring vehicles, "It's a Bear," "A Regular Fellow," "Taxi," and "Upside Down" would suggest that he was perfectly capable of handling any known situation, rushed in, hat and cane in hand, with a tale of woe concerning a "vehicle" which had balked and refused to emote at no less a place than Broadway between Fifty-second and Fifty-third streets.

"It was that battle axe of Joy's!" he exclaimed, "but you must admit that I picked out a good spot to stop in." And his face beamed with the joy of an artist who has just finished a wonderful creation.

"I tipped about sixty-five stevedores to push the thing around into Fifty-third street and take turns at cranking it," he busily explained. "Why it stopped I'll never know. And how it started I'll never tell. But suddenly it became feminine and changed its mind, started, and here I am."

And he proceeded to get right down to business. It might be supposed that Taylor Holmes, star of happy-go-lucky, laughmaking photoplays, would be of a happy-go-lucky nature, with never a thought for the morrow or the day after that. Mr. Holmes takes his sense of humor along with him always, but he is a comedy maker of purpose. In other words, he goes on the principle that comedy making is a serious business and applies himself to that work with all the tenacity of the up-to-date business man.

Straight Comedy His Field.

"I would rather play comedy than anything else," said Mr. Holmes. "And I am particularly gratified to find that my comedies are now being received with much zest in England and France. The hurly-burly of the war is past and the people over there have a big spot in their spirit open for comedy entertainment.

"Straight comedy is the field I am trying to cultivate," the actor went on. "No one disputes Chaplin's possession of the broad comedy field; and no one gainsays Fairbanks' supremacy in the acrobatic comedy. I am trying to do the straight comedy, taking humorous stories and situations and working into them just as much of the laughable as the situation will hold.

"You know," Mr. Holmes said, a light twinkling in his eye, "any chicken can cross the road. But it takes a real bird to cross it and be looked at. Which means that it takes a real chicken to get the following."

It is this humorous principle upon which Mr. Holmes works when before the camera. He believes that it takes a real comedian to walk across the little highway upon which the eye of the camera is focused and at the same time do his perambulating so as to be humorously different, get a laugh and likewise a following.

No Rain Checks for Ruggles.

The success of Mr. Holmes' comedies not only in America, but in France, England, and even India where he has been given a name signifying "joviality," speaks for the soundness of his idea and is, moreover, a signpost on the road to an even bigger future. His "Ruggles of Red Gap" played for two weeks at the Alhambra in London, an unusual performance for any theatre of its prominence.

Taylor Holmes.
Who says as he smiles: "Fowl things are afoot when a chicken crosses the road." But even then he's serious.

And a lot of movie folk told Mr. Holmes that he could not make a success of the character of the English servant, Ruggles, because the man was all mental attitude. But Taylor Holmes, like his famous namesake, Sherlock, sleuthed around in his mental wardrobe, found a mental habit that fitted and then went before the camera with perfect ease of mind. The "fortnight" at the Alhambra in an English character before English spectators proved that the pessimists who were handing out rain checks before the Ruggles game was scheduled were all wrong on the Taylor Holmes score.

Mr. Holmes' Triangle pictures, the latest of which, "Upside Down," has been hailed as his best, bear out his theory that the process of building up a following with comedies is a cumulative one. It has been the policy of both Triangle and Mr. Holmes to make each successive play of his better than the one preceding and it can be said safely that when Mr. Holmes essays to cross the screen road, like the "real chicken" he has a good following.

Holmes Comedies Easy to Look at.

A letter from New Zealand struck an important spike on the head when it said that the Taylor Holmes comedies are "easy to look at." In other words, his photoplays have the "smoothness" which Hamlet asked of the players in his memorable instruction to them. Mr. Holmes tries not to make big jumps from one situation to another, and his broad viewpoint, stage training, and sense of humor let you sit back in your seat at the theatre and enjoy a ride of an hour and a quarter in a smooth running vehicle.

"In India," said Mr. Holmes, "the people have a keen sense of the proper in dramatic construction. And a brand of play which offends in dramatic technique is quite likely to be avoided."

In fact, Mr. Holmes' points in connection with the motion picture were made by references to such widely separated places as India, Constantinople, New Zealand, and Broadway that we thought several times we were talking not with Taylor Holmes, the comedy star, but with Burton Holmes, the travelogue chap who jumps from Switzerland to Peru without a moment's hesitation.

In Every Way a "Smooth Article."

But Taylor Holmes has not the bearded aspect characteristic of Burton. His face is smooth, like his pictures, and his stories, put over in characteristic actor-manner make you think he'd make a good pinochle partner in the smoker on a trip from New York to San Francisco.

His stage training has given him excellent foundation and background for his work in pictures. Two years and a half in "Bunker Bean," long runs in "Trilby," "The Third Party" and "The Million," added to headline acts in vaudeville have supplied him with abundant material with which to fill in his painting, "I'll Take My Comedy Straight."

That's an occupation in which Mr. Holmes will work and prosper long after the gray dawn of July 1.

AND THE GREATEST OF THESE IS HOPE

Hope Loring, Scenarist, Confesses Startlingly on Eve of Going Abroad on New Universal Serial

SHE was putting the final touches to her wrist watch, which was a pretty one, and really didn't need any touches final, and she was doing likewise with her nose, which similarly was in no way in need of touches conclusive. Which sounds as if the Moving Picture World man had entered a touching scene, but outside the English romances, such has never been his luck.

"She" was Hope Loring, scenario and continuity writer for Universal, and who is in New York preparing to sail with the company, which will make the international serial, "The Thirteenth Hour," starring Eddie Polo and Peggy O'Dare, and directed by J. P. McGowan.

This serial will find its way over the same route so many of its predecessors have gone—into every corner of the world.

Supporter of Trunk Lines.

Much trunkage in Miss Loring's suite at her hotel testified to the fact that she was soon to go on an amazing adventure and was going to take as much baggage as the hold of the Lapland would allow. In fact, so well did she like the idea that she could not separate herself from one of the wardrobe trunks, but perched herself up on it and insisted upon the World man taking the armchair at the window.

It is indeed an amazing adventure upon which Miss Loring is going as continuity writer for "The Thirteenth Hour." Some time ago she decided upon an un-Corinthian event as concerns her name, and reversing the edict of "the greatest of these," took "Hope" from her "Mary Patricia Hope" Loring and so set up "Hope" as the greatest.

Always she had hope of returning some day to the scenes wherein she spent her childhood. She was born in Barcelona, Spain, where her parents were killed in a driving accident. Her aunt took her to England at the age of two, and at five she was brought to America.

Could Settle the Kaiser Question.

Now, "The Thirteenth Hour" is taking her back to these countries which she saw through the colored glasses of babyhood. The serial, which features Eddie Polo in the role of a detective on the trail of internationally known crooks, will be filmed in England, Ireland, Scotland, France, Italy and Spain. Holland will be included if the Government will permit. Holland is probably afraid that the serial demons of Universal would use the Kaiser for the villain in an episode and thus settle the question as to what should be done with the well-known former Emperor.

Miss Loring's training as a serial writer for Universal for two years would give her ideas for the disposal of the former Kaiser which would surpass Al Jolson's suggestion of locking him up in an Automat and not giving him a nickel. "The Lure of the Circus" and "The Red Glove" are from Miss Loring's pen, and "The Thirteenth Hour" is being done by her, after the idea of Joe Brandt, serial production manager for Universal. With an Irish father and a Spanish mother, Miss Loring was blessed with a rare combination of wit and extravagant spirit which manifests itself in what she says and does.

Big Collection of Diplomas.

It is to be hoped that the captain of the Lapland, on which the serial party sails on June 21, will give Miss Loring the degree of first-class seaman when the ship docks on the other side. She has received inumerable diplomas and certificates from boarding schools, dramatic and dancing schools, was a budding sweet girl graduate at the University of Iowa for a year, and lacks only the first-class seaman degree to make her collection complete.

There was one "finishing" school, however, at which Miss Loring did not finish. Imbued with the idea of writing, she took a splashy idea from the lid of a candy box, wrote a story, and received $15 for it. In a boarding school $15 is absolutely too much money to keep, so it was put into a "spread." Sad to relate, the news spread to the ears of the administration and the only degree Miss Loring received from that Hope Loring.

Whose work on Universal's "Thirteenth Hour" takes her back to countries of her childhood.

Alma Mater was the decree to seek "spreading" classics elsewhere.

Which human incident explains Miss Loring's interest in people and her theory that the best story is the most human story, the precept upon which she bases all her writing. "I am tremendously interested in people and things," said Miss Loring, "and I try to make my actors as interesting to the people who see them on the screen as they are to me. I try to put them over."

It was at this point in the interview that the maid entered with a letter. "Don't forget, Mary," said Miss Loring, "that you are to tell my fortune today Mondays and Fridays are your fortune-telling days."

It was Friday the thirteenth, and Miss Loring was about to embark on "The Thirteenth Hour," but even so, the fortune Mary told could not be anything else but a tale of good luck and rewarded ambition.

For, to remember Miss Loring's own remark, "The greatest of these is Hope."

Exchanges Complain of Way Censors Handle Film

WASHINGTON city exchange managers do not like the way in which the Maryland censor board is handling their film. One manager in particular has had a great deal of trouble, it is reported, resulting in many complaints coming to him from exhibitors. This manager has received letters from first run accounts in Maryland to which films were shipped direct from the offices of the censors that the films were oily and sprocket holes torn. It was not until recently that the manager "tumbled" to the cause.

There was returned to this exchange film where the emulsion had stuck to the celluloid back further on and where sprocket holes had been cut, necessitating the taking out of large sections of the film. This was a new print and it is alleged had gone nowhere but to the Maryland board.

The managers dislike complaining to the board, no matter what the provocation. Naturally, they fear retaliation, and it is difficult to get them to put their names on a letter of protest. It is understood, however, some of the film men have overcome their dislike of controversy and have taken their problem up with board members.

Shows at Marine Barracks Affect Washington Houses

THERE has been a great deal of complaint on the part of exhibitors in Washington, D. C., of competition they are forced to meet in the shows given through the War Camp Community Service. It has always been the understanding that films were furnished this organization to be used only where it would not work a hardship on established theatres. Since the arrival of warm weather, the exhibitors of Southeast Washington have felt the effects of the public exhibitions of motion pictures and music at the Marine Barracks. It was learned, however, that the general public had been invited to concerts by the Marine Band and that motion pictures were also exhibited several evenings each week.

The motion picture men of Washington have suffered greatly during the war period through just such things as these. They have recently laid the matter before the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, declaring that a continuance of this competition will cause ruination of their business.

Rogers Speaks at Newman Theatre.

Will Rogers on his way to the Goldwyn Studios at Culver City, stopped off in Kansas City to attend the opening of the Newman Theatre.

Frank Newman advertised that at the opening of his theatre Will Rogers would be present in person. Said Will, by way of an opener, "There was a time when Frank Newman sold the tickets in his window then ran around the door to collect them, and to those who do not believe in building up from the ground, I would refer them to this house tonight."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Usher Stunts.

DRESSING your ushers to match the character of your current or coming picture is a capital scheme if worked only occasionally, but remember that the advantage of the idea lies in its novelty, and it ceases to be a novelty if you use it often. Either you must dress your ushers to match every picture, and so rouse curiosity as to what you are going to do next or else you must hold it for the "just once" class and retire it after you have used it. Then it would be better to dress in anticipation and get the real benefit of the advertisement. It is not an advertisement to appeal to the patron whose admission you have already secured. But here is one stunt which can be worked simply. Provide each employe with a ribbon printed with the title of the next picture. If the ushers are boys, use these for cap bands. If you use girls, let them bind them about their hair in the fashion girls employ. Your job printer can set up the type and run these off on the proof press, and you can get your ribbon cheaply from the job-lot houses in the large cities.

McCormick's.

S. Barret McCormick went out of the ordinary to give a big display to Anita Stewart in her second Mayer production, and this applies to space, text and general effort alike. The moon is used in most of the designs to emphasize the midnight feature, and most of the drawings work on the contrast idea. That used for the colored plate shows the star in both phases of her role. In the color plate green is used for the sea and the trees, with a blue sky and red for Sloan's hair. Below the girls are in red and blue, with red and green giving color to the room, and a splash of green for the legend. The small type above the title deals with the story and presents the high lights in their most attractive form, while that below deals with the star herself and announces the minor features. Throughout, the main title is imposed upon a clock face pointing to twelve. This is shown in a portion of an advertisement which forms the second cut, together with the moon face. As in the other, the upper portion of the display is given to the story. For the current showing two nines were used for the early days, and these deal with other features of the story. Here the star gets the upper cut, but in one Mazie gets the lower space, and in the other Sloan has it to himself. That on the right hooks up, the top legend reading, "Beginning with Eve Woman has always had a good ally in Old Man Moon," and below, "But Blonde Mazie was cut out for Mazdas, which gives a clean-cut suggestion of the character of the two women. That on the right makes an apt reference to Miss Stewart's recent success, "Virtuous Wives," which seems to be the only hook-up with this play. Both of these are unusually good examples of Mr. McCormick's work The cuts are almost certain to win your attention, and with this gained, he hammers away on the story angle and gets you interested in the play, as well. Whenever he has anything to talk about, he is quick to make use of it, and the best possible use, at that. He knows that he can sell stars to most people, but he knows that he can sell stories and not stars to some others, and that even those who follow the stars can be made interested in the story as well. But above all things, he shows that it is possible to use plenty of type and still get good display by holding to a few big lines and keeping the type down on the rest. Most of these cuts give almost as strong a display as though he used plenty of white space. This is because he does not fight his display lines with less important lines of almost equal type value. The moment he leaves the display lines he cuts down at once to an eight or even a six, never using better than a ten or twelve. As a result his big lines are still big. Toward the end of the week when he could run on the momentum gained earlier he dropped down to fives and sevens. The same idea is still carried out. You can seldom, if ever, turn to these reproductions and find a display in reduced form in which you cannot get the big display lines in a glance. The reduction carries the small type below the limits of legibility, but you always get the main title. This is a point in which Mr. McCormick excells.

A Four Elevens for Anita Stewart.

Slipped Up.

The Mikadow, Manitowoc, Wis., gets out a snappy program with bright program readers and a comedy column on the back page that really is funny; not funny because it is trying to be, but because it possesses real humor. A recent program offered a cut of Nazimova for the front page and dropped the date from the inside to go over to a four page special sheet. The front shows the only mention on the regular program. We think that this is an error of judgment, for in the proper date there should have been a reference to the special insert. The special is not bound up with the other four pages and is liable to become misplaced, when there is no reference to the Thursday and Friday other than the four point "Thur-Fri" below the cut. It was good judgment to get out the special insert for "Eye for Eye," but it would have been well to have included mention in the regular program, as well. The proof reading is rather careless, for the cut shows the name of the star misspelled, and throughout the play is called "An Eye for an Eye," and not "Eye for Eye," which is the correct title. We show two of the program extracts, one for "The Girl Dodger," and the other for Fred Stone:

> He's afraid of the Chorus Girls! Wrong, Watson. He's a trifle shy and outside of that he's a devil on wheels; and, talk about them falling hard, why the poor boy almost fractured his skull when he met a certain Anita Graham. 'Tis a funy world, Watson, but it has nothing on this picture. Come, we must be off or we will be late. After this Sherlock, wrapped in his thoughts, slowly drifted into a vacant seat, the last one left in the first row, to enjoy the picture a second time.
> When we get through showing this picture the roof of the town will be about 50 feet out of plumb, 'cause there is so much excitement and fun in this picture and it's so contagious that—that you just naturally have to find vent for your feelings, as this picture will keep you giddy and gay for at least a week or two. Listen, this is not a war picture, it's just one of those darn fool comedy dramas that keeps you in humor for a month and make's life worth living.

These extracts are set in a panel to the right of the paneled date and title as shown in a recent issue. It is a very effective arrangement.

Reverse Cuts.

A correspondent writes that sometimes we say that a reverse cut is poor and then print a cut of a decidedly good looking reverse. He thinks it is inconsistent. It does look that way sometimes, but it must be remembered that a three or four-column cut reduced to a single column width will close up and if properly printed will again give an absolute black. Even a full size cut will give a better effect when printed well. We reproduce the cuts to show what they are and not to show precisely how they look.

Mickey in Dayton.

Mark Gates writes that Milt Crandall, "the best publicity man in the country," is in town to help him put Mickey over. Mr. Crandall was here in New York lately and showed some stuff that would make the other Mickey pushers green with envy. Mr. Gates writes that the Saturday before the opening they have 65 window displays, and hope for more. Think of that, you managers who claim that it is not possible to get a hook-up with the stores. Crandall can show Mickey hook-ups with everything from socks to cigars. The first shot was an inch and a half single column teaser showing the bathing scene, but perhaps giving an erroneous impression of the play, and first impressions are important. But at the same time the phonograph stores were busy. We show a two seven and a halfs for the Columbia and the same space for the theatre with Mickey getting the underline. The Victor took a double twelve, the Columbia had a single six from another dealer, and two music roll dealers had a total of twenty two column inches, which does not count the Hunter hitch onto this house four tens for the Saturday before the opening. Of course, the music hook-up is nothing new. That has been worked all over the country, but the other window displays mean plain hustle on the part of Mr. Gates and Crandall, and it is might good hustling, too. Crandall is playing the territory he controls slowly, and is cleaning up everything in sight, instead of getting what he can quickly and letting it go at that. He has the right idea.

Improved.

B. L. Waite, of the Minor, Arcata, Calif., sends in a program to show how his printer has improved the issue after reading the criticism in this department. One of the improvements has been in the stock, which, of course, gives a better cut impression and makes it possible to use the small cuts supplied by the Paramount. The other changes included a smaller face for the descriptive lines and cutting down from twelve to eight point gives a much more sightly looking sheet. The change was slight, but it greatly improves the appearance of the issue. Mr. Waite writes that he does not use an advertisement on the back page, because these are primarily designed to go into frames in the leading stores. He adds that in many homes the program is framed for reference. The fact still remains that he could make the program self supporting by running the advertising, since the ads could be read in the homes if not on the store displays.

Ruff Stuff.

Ralph Ruffner has hit the front page of the Butte papers at last. The newspapers of Butte have more self-respect than—well, Boston, for instance—and refuse to sell their front page to advertisers, so Ruff did not think he would ever make it, but he did. They had the flying circus in Butte for the loan, and Ruff tuned his lyre and piped for a lay. We are free to confess that we have read better poetry, and we have read worse—in the obituary column—but it was good enough to get him a 4½ inch box, double column, in both local papers, and it was signed "Ralph Ruffner, Rialto Theatre," which is going some. It is not a finished product, but it has a real swing and it carries the punch. To give you an idea, here is the first verse:

> The Flying Circus has come to jerk us
> Loose from flocks of coin.
> The call is sounded, the heavens bounded,
> The multitude will join.

Ruff doesn't say he did, but we'll bet the oysters that he had it set to music and made his audience sing it. If he didn't, he overlooked a bet, and that is something he seldom does. He also takes the top of his four fulls for Mary Pickford to advertise the aerial show, winding up with: "if you've a twenty-five cent piece left after subscribing for Victory Loan Bonds, shoot it on Mary. There's interest both ways." Then he announced a special morning performance to take the place of his busted matinee, and adds: "See the early show and then to Marr Field." He is not going to let even the big attraction do him out of a Sunday matinee, but he doesn't try to spoil the big show. The other display is a three fifteens for Bryant Washburn, with some more original poetry (it's one of the signs of Spring), for this attraction. For this he uses a press book mat which comes out very well. As a rule Ruff has to make his own cuts to get just what he wants.

Stuck.

Add the Grand News, Keokuk, Iowa, to the list of stickers. The second year started back in April, and it is still going strong. It is all house advertising, a five by nine four pager, but it gives three pages of reading to one of program, and it is well selected matter. The house dropped its regular attractions the other day to take in the Lyman Howe show. Howe's program is a collection of shorts, and yet so few managers make their shorts important on their own programs while Howe is still cleaning up after all these years. Surely there should be a suggestion here.

Compact.

The Saenger theatres in New Orleans use a joint program, The Saengerette, for the Strand, Liberty and Globe, with a two color cover and red borders within. It is a twenty pager, carrying considerable outside advertising as well as the programs and cuts for the three houses. On the double middle page the attractions for the week are assembled on one side, with the underlines for the Strand and Liberty on the other. This enables the fan to study the week's offerings without having to search the entire twenty pages, and is a scheme to be recommended other companies using a joint program for two or more houses. Each house is properly cared for on the other pages, but the middle gives a review of the entire week, and will sometimes sell two shows where only one was sought. This is the advantage.

Doing It Right.

Here is the way the Princess, Colorado Springs, introduced Kinograms in a four nines. Only a small part of the space is given the five reel attraction. The rest is taken up with telling what the new idea is and giving the synopsis of the first offering. Naturally those who read this advertisement will feel that the new feature is worth while and will follow it up week after week. If it has just been slipped in as another filler it would not have gained the same respect. Your small features are precisely what you make them. If you can make them pay a handsome profit over their cost, you are just that much ahead.

A Four Nines in Which Most of the Space Is Devoted to Introducing a Short Feature.

Backsliders.

After all the trouble we went to to persuade Jay Emanuel to date the days in his Ridge Avenue program, Philadelphia, we note that the program has reverted to its old style, just because Jasper is a film salesman now. Apart from this the program is neatly done, but it would be better with dated days. Don't merely tell them "Monday." Tell them Monday, June 1, or whatever it may happen to be, and you have two chances of making the date sink in. One new scheme is the handling of the underline. This is not made a special announcement, but is a part of the six point reader for the current show. Each day gives the attraction, and then six to ten lines of descriptive matter in the six point, then a bracket and "Next Monday Clara Kimball Young in 'The Road

Through the Dark.'" The brackets serve to cut the underline from the current notice, and yet the coming attraction does not fight the current show through the use of big type or other distraction. It would be well to recapitulate the attractions to some in a single line each at the end of the program for those who want to look over the week. Not all of the programs are undated, but it seems to be more or less a matter of chance. For a monthly program the Ridge copies the directory used by some of the newspapers, adapting it to the use of the house by making the columns refer to four weeks of the month. This is printed on a 4¼ by 5½ card and forms a handy reference.

A Newspaper Program.

The Strand, Harriman, Pa., has to go to Bristol for a newspaper and runs a weekly program in the Saturday issue there, taking around six tens weekly for the following week and also running a tonight in a single six. This layout is along the lines of the Bleich style. We recently showed an extra large display used to launch the Houdini serial, but this six tens seems to be the regular house space with the tonight advertisement varying with the importance of the attraction. It serves all of the purposes of a program, and probably gets almost as wide a distribution.

Checks Its Passes.

The Apollo Theatre, Philadelphia, makes even its pass an advertisement, using a check form instead of the usual blank. People who get Apollo passes are apt to show them around because they are novel, and every mention of a house is advertising, no matter how well known the name may be. This is an angle many fail to appreciate. They think that a pass is just a pass. That mention of the house is of no value unless it is accompanied by some adjectives of praise. Practised managers know that any mention is advertising, and is good advertising, unless accompanied by unfavorable comment. Take the "Wilson, that's all." It did more for a brand of whiskey than columns of praise of that particular bottling. F. F. Proctor popularized the continuous performance in New York with the line "After breakfast go to Proctor's." Keep people thinking and talking about your house, and you will not need heavy advertisements. The main thing is to keep the house in the public mind, and a unique check, an odd house signature, a special color for house front or a particularly good orchestra is as much an advertisement as a half page in the newspaper, and if persistent enough is even a better advertisement.

A Summer Stunt.

If your house really is cool advertise the fact in the way the late Frank Montgomery made famous. He advertised that any patron who sat for fifteen minutes in his house and could honestly complain of heat could have a small boy to fan him for the remainder of his visit, and Montgomery actually had one or two patrons fanned at their request. It makes a good flash for newspaper advertising or a throwaway or painted sign.

That Synopsis.

SEVERAL writers have asked for a study of that synopsis recently run as a guide. What they really seem to want to know is how such a commonplace story sold to a company. One man wants to know what chance an outsider would have sending in the same sort of a story, and adds, "The plot is old and stale. Is not the acceptance due to its regular form and the certainty that success will come from the old and familiar detail?" The story was accepted because it was what the company wanted. It was fairly plausible, it was exceedingly well planned, and it was precisely suited to the stars for whose use it was offered. That was where Mr. Hoyt had the inside track. He probably sold this story because they knew that his stories worked into acceptable plays, but he did not sell his first story to them on past performance. There was one story they took without knowing him to be a safe writer. They took that because they knew that an acceptable play could be made from the material supplied. He became an insider merely through landing a succession of hits, and that same entry is still open to others who can tell their stories with the same clearness and supply plots that are what the companies want. All of the factors are old, but the combination is sound and well planned, and interest is built up in an ascending scale. It sold more readily than would a more fantastic and less probable story, but it sold mainly on the fact that it was sound technique and a synopsis from which any competent continuity man could make a good play. "I write better stories than that" is perhaps the natural retort, but do you write your story as clearly and as acceptably? That's the test and that alone.

The Market.

Recently our rubbernecking A. G. Giebler went on a tour of the studios for the benefit of this department, and here is his report. Of course this may all be changed by the time this gets into print, but here is how it did look:

American.—Wants stuff for Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fisher and William Russell.

Ince.—Employs four staff writers, but will consider outside stuff, though they seldom purchase.

Goldwyn.—Read for Tom Moore, Mabel Normand and Madge Kennedy. Good people to do business with.

Metro.—Wants stories for Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, Anna Q. Nilsson, May Allison and Nazimova. Partial to synopses with well written subtitles with a comedy touch.

Lois Weber.—Not in market.

National Film Corp.—Stories for Walthall, Billie Rhodes and two-reel comedies for "Smiling" Bill Parsons.

Fairbanks.—Wants typical Fairbanks stories.

Christie.—Want one and two reel stories along their well marked lines. They like stories of young married folks and their difficulties, but they must be lively and amusing.

Lasky.—Reads, but buys little.

Vitagraph.—Western studio buys no scripts. All should be sent to main studio in Brooklyn.

Mack Sennett.—Not in the market. Their stories are built—not written.

Arbuckle.—Some chance to sell gags.

Hampton.—Wants stories for Kerrigan, Desmond and Warner.

Rolin.—Not buying.

Universal.—Buying very little because of decreased production.

That is about the market the way things stand. It is not an encouraging market for the beginner, but there is some small opening for those who can write real stuff. The only trouble is that the novice is more apt to think his stuff is good than the more practised writer, and he keeps the studios filled with junk.

Plot Plus Technique.

All there is in photoplay may be summed up in two words—plot and technique. Bob Horner tells it all in a recent letter, when he says:

> 'Tis been a long time since I invaded your sanctorium, yet I have often wanted to write you, with many thanks for the benefits I received from taking your advice for the past five years. Perhaps you cannot go back to the days when I, the Yukon Kid, was a downright pest by intermingling my questions with "Lois" and "Rubena" to the Answer Man? Although you never liked that Kid, the term was used right then, inasmuch I was nothing but a sixteen year old kid. You gave me plenty of heartaches in those days, insisted that I would never get "there" and told me to go back to school. Despite this discouragement I kept plugging away with the determination of making the "first sale" before giving up the ship. But, as I sometimes glance over some of your old answers to my inquiries, you became less critical and more desirous of giving me a helping hand, registering that I was at least making some progress. There was one mental lesson from you that always loomed big to me, and that was PLOT. I made this my one big study, and have never regretted it. Next, I gained the "picture eye," but always made it a point to have a plot, otherwise I would be unable to see the action play as it was written. I wrote over three hundred plots before I made my first sale. Through hard work and study I became a real student of screencraft, and carefully stood at attention when radical changes were taking place along producing policies. First, I learned how to compose sufficient material for a one-reeler, then my twos, threes, and then the jump to fives. Never once was I puzzled as to where writers got enough material for a five-reeler. If a writer studies plots and plot formation until he becomes so familiar with plots that he will really know that plotting is all there is to a play, he will be able to write material to cover any length of subject that he so desires. But this was only accomplished by real practice. I received many disappointments even after I did begin to sell, but this only made me plug all the harder. I made good use of your columns, and did what I and all the rest of the readers were advised to do. I studied technique until I was almost blue in the face. And it wasn't long before the various editors began to watch me. I mastered a smoothly-running technique, and was soon offered a staff position. I worked in this capacity until I was appointed assistant editor, and then an editorship was offered me from another company. Never once did I "innocently appropriate" another writer's idea. I played the game fair and square, and arrived through this and hard work.
> It has been long years since Lois and Rubena used to write in questions. We never did know what became of Lois or why she dropped out, but we have always had a soft spot in our heart for her. Rubena got the idea that she was being kidded. Horner stuck, and he is just coming into his own. His early letters were something wicked, and more than once was sent back to him on the grounds that if he didn't know the answers himself he was not entitled to call himself a writer. We had our troubles with Robert in the by-gone days, but he was bound to become a writer, and he stuck and he is. Ebony blew up, and he got blamed for the loss of a lot of scripts for which he was in no wise responsible, but he kept right on, and is making good because he realized that plotting, which is imagination, and technique, which is the expert use of that imagination, is what makes plays. First learn how to plot. Then learn how to put those plots into plays, even though companies will now buy plots alone, for some day you will want to go into the studio, and you must have a complete technical training if you would realize to the full on your efforts.

No Preventive.

"No company can stop me from sending the continuity, too, if I want to," defiantly announces a would-be author. He speaks the truth. No company can prevent him from sending in what they do not want, but no company is under any obligation to read material not in the form they require, so what is the use of sending it in? We think that the synopsis only idea is not a good one, but if we want to sell we conform to the requirements of the purchaser. Do as you are told and not as you want and you are far more likely to meet success.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Lens Charts for Framing.

The December 28 issue containing the lens charts was exhausted very quickly. The demand for lens charts was so great that we have had a limited number printed on heavy paper, size 11x17, for framing. Covers amperage 25 to 60 A. C. or D. C., and Plano-convex or meniscus biconvex; also gives necessary projection lens diameter to avoid waste and distance of revolving shutter from aperture. Every progressive, up-to-date projectionist should have one. Price, 50 cents, postpaid to any part of the world. Send U. S. 3-cent stamps or money order.

How Do They Do It?

A certain one, whose name I withold, writes from Florida. I shall quote his letter only in part.

"Some few weeks ago I wrote from Greenvilee, Georgia, ordering a handbook. This will cancel the order and explain my position. Once I wrote you, from Atlanta, Ga., that I had just entered the projection field. Since then I have succeeded in gaining admission to the I. A. T. S. E. C. M. P. M. O. and it is now up to me to make good. Have been in union a year and a half. During all that time worked as assistant in house where there was a rectifier and compensarc, so you will see that all my experience has been on those two devices. Am anxious to succeed. From what I am able to learn from one or two old moving world magazines you have issued several books on projection. I have the first edition, I think—1910. Of course I would like to have all the books, but as I have been away on sick leave for six months am not in shape to purchase them. Which one of them would you suggest. Simply have got to get along."

Now here is a good brother who, by his own admission, has been in the projection game for at least a year and a half, yet he does not even know what text books on projection have been published. Can you beat it? He says "I just have to get along." Umph! why did you not think of that long ago? You wait until you are financially embarrassed by sickness and probably out of a job, then suddenly wake up with a jump and probably expect to remedy the carelessness of at least a year and a half in a few days or a few weeks.

Gets the Editorial Goat.

Brother, you get my goat! And might I most respectfully inquire what sort of "examining board" (?) the local had that admitted you to membership? You now hold an I. A. card and probably could not connect two 110-volt rheostats across a 220-volt line correctly to save your soul from purgatory. Yet the I. A. calmly expects its cards to be respected by theatre managers! It is to laugh. Given a motor generator set and a sparking commutator, you would have about as much idea of where to look for the trouble, and what remedy to apply as a Fiji Islander would have about adjusting the hairspring of a watch. And yet you hold an I. A. card, which is supposed to declare to all and sundry that you are a projectionist—pardon me, an "operator." Well, my good brother, you are not even that. And now you rush frantically around seeking that knowledge you should have started diligently to acquire from the very first week you entered the projection room.

Unions That Are Sponges.

Local unions which admit such timber as this are not effective organizations. They are sponges; that is to say, unless they admit the man and then proceed diligently to educate him in his business until he is really entitled to carry a card, they sail under what amounts to false pretenses. They claim to be organizations of projectionists—pardon me, "operators," but they are in reality organizations of half baked incompetents, who are not really even competent "operators" because they don't understand the machine they handle. Supposing the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers admitted incompetent men to membership and they were placed in charge of engines pulling trains the express YOU were riding on had to meet. How would YOU feel about that organization, huh?

As to the books, each edition (there are three) succeeds those which have gone before. I would advise that you get the third edition, which has been sent you, to Greenville, Georgia, I think. In addition to this it would be well that you get the Hawkins' Electrical Guides, ten volumes, at one dollar a volume. You can get them for one dollar down and one dollar a week. But merely getting the books will not do you one iota of good. You must get them and then buckle down to a long grind of STUDY.

Reflect Before You Get Mad.

I was amused at your remark that now that you were in the union it was up to you to make good. Suffering flicker blades, wasn't it up to you to make good from the very day you entered a projection room? Suppose you never joined a union at all. Is not the motion picture industry and the audiences you project pictures for entitled to any consideration, to say nothing of the man who employs you on the assumption that you know at least something about your business? Now don't get all het up under the collar. This roast was coming to you, as well as, in greater or less measure, to thousands of others. Reflect before you get mad. Think it over and see if Richardson is not right after all.

Will Delay for Awhile

Carl Coleman, Lenox, Iowa, says:

"I am NOT a professional projectionist, nor do I ever expect to be. Would like, however, answers to the following, if possible: Am a theatre owner and the prospect for a successful line of legit stuff is so thin that I am going into the new game—new for me, that is. Am purchasing a Simplex. Will use an arclight, taking current through a compensarc. Could you advise me as to some better light at same expenditure. The D. C. is best, if the department can be relied upon, but I don't want expense of a high priced outfit to get D. C., hence am taking, as far as I know, the next best thing—A. C. Voltage is 110; current is 60 cycle; throw 73 feet; picture 12 feet wide. What condenser lenses do I need? Also please give entire optical train that will suit my conditions. Intend buying a handbook, but that will rest for a while."

It is really a rather queer thing that men will seek to learn about every darned thing in connection with the motion picture, except how to project it in the best possible way. When it comes to that hugely vital thing it usually is, as friend Coleman puts it, "Oh, that can rest for a while." As a matter of fact that is the very last thing which should be "allowed to rest for awhile," since upon the screen result depends box office receipts, at least to a very great extent.

Spoiling the Vamp's Reputation.

Clara Kimball Young may pull 'em in the first time, just by her reputation, but if she appears as a shadowy, multi-colored, flickery now-you-see-it-and-now-you-don't, then all her beauty (or it would have been beauty if the projectionist had known his business), even combined with a good measure of high class vamping (or it would have been high class had Miss Kimball been properly handled by the projectionist) can not get them the second time. Nay, verily I say unto you that not even the liberal display of Theda when she is mostly Bara can do it the second time. As to the projection department being "to be depended upon," why we must all take that risk, neighbor Coleman, but there are those who have risked it for many years and their nerves remain unshattered. You don't want the expense of a high priced outfit? Well, is an outfit high priced if it costs $600.00 and brings in $1,000 additional revenue at the box office during the year? Ask yourself that question. Mind you I don't say D. C. would bring in that sum extra, but surely you yourself know that anything which improves the "show" will operate to bring in additional revenue? And certainly D. C. will improve the screen result. There is no question about that.

There Is Magda.

As to there being any other light source which will improve results as against A. C., at same expense, why there is the Mazda. If you propose using say 60 amperes A. C. and propose having a COMPETENT PROJECTIONIST, then I would advise that you stick to the arc. But if you propose skimping on amperage, or propose employing a projectionist who is such only by virtue of his over-vivid imagination, then I would advise that you try the Mazda.

Your optical train adjustments will depend on whether you use A. C. or D. C. and what the amperage is. For 60 amperes A. C. I would advise that you use two 6.5 plans convex condenser lenses, so placed that the apex of their curved surfaces are not to exceed 1/16 of an inch apart, with 18.5 inches from center of condenser combination to machine aperture. For greatest economy I would advise an objective 2 inches in diameter, meaning the opening in the lens, not its outside diameter. As to focal length of objective, I would suggest it would be better to advise your dealer that you want a 12-foot picture at 73 feet and leave it to him to send the right lens. The condenser combination given is right for anything between 50 and 60 amperes, but for 50 add about 1½ inches to distance condenser to aperture.

Now, friend Coleman, don't be angry at the mild roast I have handed you. It is not meant offensively, but to direct your mind, and the minds of others as well, to certain things, and to do it effectively. This department will be very glad to give you any further assistance you may require.

Fixing Wage Scale

Dayton Fast, Local Union 352, Springfield, Ohio, says:

"Venture the assertion this is the first letter you have received from our city, at least for some time. At any rate, I never see anything in our department from the Springfield boys. And now here is something which has been on my mind for quite some time. Guess writing you is my only source of relief: (A) How would we go about it to license the projectionists of Springfield? (B) Would it interfere with the work of the local? (C) Would some of our men be on the examining board? (D) How is the wage scale fixed? Does it depend on size of theatre? (E) Is it necessary to draw up contracts and have the managers sign them? (F) How many projectionists would each theatre employ? At present each house has two, working equal time on split-shift. Our present scale is only $18 per week, but nearly every man receives several more iron men than that. (G) Could an outsider take one of our jobs if he could pass the examination? (H) What is the fee for license? Am going to do my best to put this license business over here, Brother Richardson, so please give me the full dope. Will look for answer in projection department."

A Pretty Large Contract.

Pretty large contract, but I'll do the best I can with a limited space. (A) You must draft an ordinance and have it enacted by your city council and mayor. This ordinance must provide that 60 days (you can make it more or less) after its enactment it shall be unlawful for any theatre to allow any one within the theatre projection room while an audience is in the building, except projectionists duly licensed by the city, duly authorized city inspectors, the theatre manager and one apprentice. It must provide for an examining board, which should be composed of two city officials, preferably the city fire marshal, the chief of the electrical department of the city, and one practical projectionist. It must stipulate that the applicants for license shall produce competent evidence that they have served not less than a one year (I suggest the time. It may be made more or less) apprenticeship under a licensed projectionist of your city, or its equivalent if applicant be from another state or city, the first half of this last to be inoperative for the men now working in your city. It must provide as follows: "Said examining board shall examine all applicants for license as to their knowledge of electrical action, particularly as follows: (1) Knowledge of Nation Electrical Code as far as it applies to the projection room and its equipment. (2) Fuses—what they are for, how they act, etc. (3) Rheostats and the effect of series and multiple connection, etc. Testing rheostat for ground. Locating grounded coil or grid. (4) Motor generator, what it is for, how it acts and its care in general. (5) Knowledge of local laws as applied to projection room construction and practice. (6) Testing for grounds on circuit. (7) Knowledge of optical system of projector, including ability to apply lens charts to same intelligently. (8) Knowledge of mechanism of various standard projection machines used in city."

The foregoing will do very well as a starter, but it MUST be embodied in the ordinance, because otherwise the examining board is left to give any sort of examination it pleases, and experience teaches that as a rule the examination, when left to the board, is largely a joke, and a very bad one at that.

Must Provide Suitable Penalties.

In addition, the ordinance must provide suitable penalties for its violation and suitable fees for examination, which range from nothing at all to Five Dollars a year. It should provide that cards may be reissued yearly without further examination, but that a licensed projectionist may be called in at any card renewal time for re-examination. Penalties for violation of the ordinance should range from suspension of theatre license for allowing other than manager, city inspector, licensed projectionist or apprentice in projection room while audience is in theatre, to suspension or revocation of card of projectionist for violation of provisions of ordinance. Ordinance should provide that all apprentices must register with examining board, giving time of commencement, name of theatre and home address, time put in in one projection room to be credited if apprentice changes to another theatre during period of apprenticeship. That is all I think of offhand, but above all things have the ordinance drawn up by a competent attorney, and provide that if any of the projectionists now working in Springfield shall fail on first examination they shall be given permit to work for a period of six months, when they shall again be examined, and if they again fail to pass they shall not be permitted to work in Springfield until they can pass examination.

Union Scales Wanted.

(B) Not in the least. (C) See "A." (D) Am sending you copy of Baltimore, Md., scale. Incidentally will some of the unions be good enough to send me two or three copies of their scale to use in this way, as well as for my own information. I will appreciate it. (E) Yes. Will one or two secretaries send copy of contract to secretary local union 352, P. O. Box 357. I have used all those I had. (F That is a matter to be incorporated in your contract. Could not tell without knowing all local conditions. Probably your present arrangement is all right, provided supper time is taken care of. (G) Depends on whether you control the city or not. If a manager signs up with you he is confined to members of 352, of course. (H) See "A." And there you are. Not a very comprehensive answer, but this is all the space I can possibly spare, with a pile of correspondence waiting space which would choke an able-bodied elephant. Oh, yes, by the way, for Heaven's sake, DON'T call it a "wage scale." Call it a "Scale of Minimum Wages." There is a tremendous difference.

Likes the Transverter

Marvin H. Thoreau, Victoria, B. C., orders two more lens charts, sends carbon stubs and says:

"In my opinion the sooner the Simplex folks put on a tension shoe adjustment the better. Bending the springs is something of an experiment. After using a transverter for seven months, nine hours a day, can say I never saw or used anything better. No vibration, sparking or trouble of any sort. In describing an arc controller in the handbook you say it keeps an "absolutely steady arc voltage." Did you not mean approximately steady? Seems to me a slight variation is quite necessary."

Yes, there is slight variation. That is what makes the danged thing work, but for all practical purposes, as applies to the arc itself, the voltage is rock steady. The handbook wording is technically wrong. What I meant is all right, but it ought to have had a qualifying "approximately." The Precision Machine Company has time and again promised the tension adjustment, but due to reasons we have deemed sufficient, its addition to the projector has been delayed, but we thoroughly agree that the adjustment is badly needed; also the adjustment arrangement on other projectors, while better than nothing is in need of improvement. Lack of tension adjustment or lack of it in conveniently usable form has, we venture to say, cost the industry many dollars in the past twenty years. As to the other matter spoken of, yes, though I will not guarantee that it will be used.

Editor Honored

Recently in commenting on the Vancouver, B. C., local union and the high degree of technical and practical knowledge of its membership, the editor made the remark that he would "feel honored to carry a card in that local." While this remark was made in all sincerity, because any man may well feel honored to associate with men who have demonstrated their knowledge of their profession by passing the British Columbia examination, we thought no more of the matter and it was therefore with a mixture of pleasure and astonishment we read the following letter:

Vancouver, B. C., May 28, 1919.

Mr. F. H. Richardson,
Care Moving Picture World,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir and Brother: Appreciating to its fullest extent your remark, in a recent issue of the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World that you "would consider it an honor to carry a card in local 348, Vancouver, B. C.," we beg your acceptance of an honorary membership card therein, as the next best thing to active membership that we can offer.

This course was unanimously decided upon at a full meeting of our local, and we offer you this membership in token of the appreciation of our members for the efforts you have made toward the betterment of the industry. We trust you will accept it in the same spirit which prompts its offering.

We shall esteem it an honor to have you enrolled as Honorary Member of our local and hope your efforts toward efficiency in our profession will continue to be as strenuous for the future as they have been in the past.

For our part, we do our best. Should you in future find opportunity to pay us another visit we shall be happy to give you opportunity to qualify for FULL membership by stacking up against the Provincial examination of British Columbia. Fully reciprocating all good wishes as expressed by you for us, I am,

Yours fraternally,
A. O. HANSEN, President.

Brother Hansen and brothers of 348, the editor has at different times been honored by honorary membership in six locals; also he has been made Honorary Director General of the projectionists' association of Argentine Republic, South America. We appreciate the spirit which has prompted the various locals and the Argentine men to thus favor us, and in such matters comparisons would be odious. But this we will say: we genuinely appreciate being thus honored by the union which we feel stands ahead of any other local in the entire I. A. insofar as applies to its entire membership and technical knowledge of the profession of projection, qualified by the fact that members of Victoria, B. C., local union No. 168 must pass the same examination, hence should be equally well equipped with knowledge.

We hope to visit Vancouver again some day, but many miles lie between and who can tell? Anyhow we will try to continue to merit your approbation. We may make mistakes, but one thing they can truthfully carve on the stone, when we shall at last be laid in that inevitable six-foot-by-two, viz.: He did his best.

Lens Trouble

Earl Schaefer, Valley Junction, Iowa, recently wrote asking advice. We replied and he now says:

"Applied your advice to optical system and obtained much better results, but still have the fuzzy and out-of-focus in picture. Have concluded that it is due to objective—a cheap lens—and the fact that one projector sets a bit to one side of center of screen. When I try the objective of this machine on the other, which is in line with screen center, it gives a clear picture, but in the other it is fuzzy and in focus on one side and out on the other. In ordering a lens of given E. F. and diameter would it be possible to get it with a certain working distance (B. F.) within reasonable limits? I wrote the Gundlach folks and the Precision Machine Company. The Gundlach company told me that from an optical standpoint the working distance of a lense did not amount to anything, and that it was impractical to keep the working distance of lenses uniform. The Precision Machine Company referred me to you."

Try This.

Before ordering a new lens try this: cut from stiff cardboard a circular disc which will fit snugly inside the front of the lens barrel and rest against the front lens. Dip this disc in black ink or paste on it black paper such as comes around photographic plates. In the center cut a round hole one-half inch in diameter. Place in lens as above indicated and try it out. If you can then focus your picture you are all right, but you must then carefully trim out the hole, being very careful to keep it exactly round and central, until the out-of-focus just barely appears, or rather until the point is just reached where you are unable to get a sharp picture all over. You must then make a new disc, with the hole just a trifle smaller, and install it in the lens permanently. The idea is that reducing lens diameter gives it "depth of focus." In other words the smaller the diameter of lens the greater range of focus it has. With a large opening most lenses will not sharply focus objects which are either many feet nearer to it or further away than its front conjugate foci point, in your case the screen. Your lens evidently has little depth. This depth may be enlarged as above.

As to Gundlach's Statement.

As to the Gundlach folks' statement, it is correct, BUT if they had said from the projection standpoint, instead of from the "optical" standpoint, they would have been very much in error. As to its being impractical to keep the working distance (B. F.) of lenses uniform, why that depends on what they have in mind. The two-combination lens can, as I understand the matter, be made with a very nearby constant (uniform) working distance, but there are serious objections to making that distance other than what it now is. The 3-combination lens can easily be made with practically uniform working distance and that distance may be very much shorter than the working distance of 2-combination lenses, but the addition of the third lens involves an additional loss of light of about 12 per cent., so that unless the loss through divergence of the ray beyond the aperture exceeds that amount there would be no gain by the use of the 3-combination lens. As the matter now lies you will find it very difficult, if not impossible to get a lense of stated working distance. Unless your requirement happened to be the same as the working distance of some one of the standard lenses it would have to be made to order and the making of such a lens would be very costly, if you could get it done at all. It would not pay you. The lens proposition, as applied to projection, is still a matter for much and deep consideration. I think the problem will not be fully solved until such time as the projectionists themselves wake up to the seriousness of the light loss, and study their own requirements, because several things are involved in each individual case when it comes to ordering proper lenses for projection.

When the Intermittent Moves.

In a recent issue a correspondent asked how he could tell precisely when the intermittent sprocket began to move. We gave him one method, which is very accurate. H. W. Farnsworth, who describes himself as a reader of the department, though not a projectionist "yet," and who says he is a machinist, proposes the plan shown in accompanying drawing. The thing is largely self-explanatory.

Indicator A is cut from stiff cardboard. Pin B is merely an ordinary pin thrust through the cardboard, into any convenient wooden support. When the short end is held firmly against the sprocket face, or rested against a tooth, the very least movement of the sprocket will show instantly at the long end. No further explanation seems necessary.

Film Butchery

Charles Travis, Projectionist, Schenectady, New York, hands us sample of film butchery in shape of thirty punch holes in one 14-inch sample, sixteen in another and twelve in a six-inch sample of film. This very evidently is the work of an "operator." Maybe he is quite competent insofar as concerns the mere operation of a piece of mechanism, but certainly he is no projectionist because by his treatment of the films entrusted to his care he proves that he knew nothing at all about projection as applied to screen results. Brother Travis says:

"Am more than glad to know you are back on the job. Hope you will not have to again leave it on account of sickness. Regarding attached samples of the film butcher's art, words are inadequate to express my opinion of the man who would commit such an outrage. But what about the exchange which sends film in such condition to a house paying for first run? Samples were taken from the Paramount feature, "The Gipsy Trail." Then, too, I don't think much of the theatre manager who will allow his operator (I say "operator" because a man who will do such things is not to be classed with projectionists) to show such samples of butchery on his screen . Certainly the man who made the holes must have projected them to the screen, else why make them. Exchange managers could very easily locate men committing these outrages by watching their inspection more closely and refusing to rent films to theatres doing damage of this sort.

To Users of Martin Rotary Converters.

"And now that I have that matter off my chest, here is something which will, I think, interest users of Martin Rotary Converters. When I took charge of projection here at the Palace the Martin was delivering approximately 45 amperes at 70 volts (at the arc, you mean.—Ed.), with the entire grid resistance in series with the arc. I have connected the transformer on the A. C. side to the lower tap, which delivers less voltage to the converter, and have cut out about half the grids. Get about the same results at arc. By meter reading, taken with load on, I find a saving of about 800 watts. The manufacturer thought I would have trouble with carbons titing, but I have not. Am blessed with two converters, one 70 and one 140 amperes. Have so connected (3-phase current supply) that I have one converter on one side of the panel and he other on the opposite side, and can operate either or both arcs from either converter, hence should one of the converters go bad, I don't have to use A. C. Would like your opinion as to the lower voltage supply stunt; also to hear from other projectionists who may care to try it. Best wishes to yourself and the department."

Well, I dunno.

Well, I dunno. I cannot see any reason why the thing will not work, except that the Martin is, as I understand it, wound to operate at 70 volts supply and any considerable variation might have tendency to heat the winding. Of this I am not very sure, however, as applied to a converter. The lowering of voltage supply could, so far as I can see, set up no tendency to titing of carbons, because that particular thing is caused by a very short arc. I could really not express an opinion of much value without testing the arc voltage and amperage under both conditions, and studying the converter to determine possible effect of the things you have done. However, if you get the same screen results, the converter windings run at approximately normal temperature and there is a saving of 800 watts, regardless of what theory might dictate, you have done well.

Condenser Lenses

In conversation with Edwin Porter, of the Precision Machine Company, I recently called his attention to our published statement that the absolutely punk, not to say rotten condenser lenses, which are and always have been the rule, is chargeable directly to the projector manufacturers, who have led the procession by equipping their machines with cheap condenser lenses, instead of demanding something better at advanced prices.

Mr. Porter agreed with me in this and authorized the statement that his company proposed to go into the condenser matter extensively and to try to make the much needed improvement we have pointed out. All of which is good. We shall hope to see results come from this in the future, and see projection machines equipped with something better than a curved section of rather bum bottle glass.

PORTLAND ADMISSIONS MAY INCREASE

Results of Higher Prices for Special Features Were Encouraging to the Rose City Exhibitors

IT LOOKS as if Portland was due for another price raise soon, and that the Rose City show shops will fall in line with the other theatres on the Coast, and put the prices near that of the "legit" houses. Recently the Liberty played "The Unpardonable Sin" to big prices and big business, and the newest increase comes at the Majestic with "Yankee Doodle In Berlin," where Manager Parker has doubled his price and packed 'em in for a week.

While none of the managers will admit it, they are undoubtedly holding back on the price raise because they fear the public will demand large orchestras with the high prices, creating a competition situation similar to that in San Francisco. Just now there are no orchestras in Portland picture theatres.

Bennie Has a Wild Ride.

Ben Bernstein, chief shipping clerk at the Universal exchange, proved his mettle recently, when a film shipment due in Portland, was delayed and missed all train connections for the Dalles, Oregon, where Lew Cullins had it already billed at the Casino. Bernstein left Portland at noon with the film in his roadster, bound for The Dalles, 88 miles away. Going was comparatively easy for the distance of the Columbia Highway, and then Bennie was compelled to turn off into the mountains. Within ten miles of his destination he jammed his transmission on a thirty per cent. grade, and Lew Cullins would have had a dark house in spite of the shipping clerk's efforts, had not a passing autoist consented to carry the films on to The Dalles.

Hamberger Has Good Fronts.

F. M. Hamberger, manager of the Circle Theatre, has been surprising local exhibitors of late by his lobbies on the Circle attractions. He received much favorable comment on his "Cannibal" lobby, but it took his display on "Woman's Weapons" to show the Portlanders how a good title can be exploited. By arranging a few humble rolling pins, plebeian brooms and unassuming stove pokers artistically about a large cut-out of Ethel Clayton, he got the crowds that put the picture over big.

Managers Go to Convention.

C. M. Hill, manager, Harry Hunter, assistant, and Vernon H. Moore, publicity man, for the Portland Paramount office, have gone to Los Angeles, to attend the managers' convention, and have left the office in charge of L. G. Stang, head booker.

More Pictures at Weiser.

Frank Mortimer will open the Oregon Trail Park, Weiser, Idaho, about July 3, with moving pictures. The opening of this park is an amusement event of Weiser, and pictures proved popular there last season.

Astoria Opens to Pictures.

The Sunset Theatre, Astoria, has closed to musical comedy, and will now become a straight picture theatre. During the winter, Manager George Tagg has been playing a combined program of musical comedy and pictures. He recently made a booking trip to Portland to get his summer line-up for the Sunset and Jewel Theatres.

DUAL COLLECTIONS ARE STAMPED OUT

No More Unprepaid Films Will Be Accepted for Express Shipment in the Minneapolis Territory

THE dual collection evil on film shipments in the Minneapolis territory was thoroughly stamped out following the issuance of an order by the general agent of the American Railway Express company to all local agents not to accept film shipments unless they were prepaid.

This action was taken at the request of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, and means the saving of many dollars and the end of a great deal of red tape. It does away with a large amount of double collecting at both ends, which has been a great and costly nuisance in the past.

Warm Weather Crimps Country Business.

Very warm weather has been the rule in the interior and in the southern part of the state since the first of June, and exhibitors there report a very marked falling off in business. Airdomes are being opened in some places, but these are not meeting with former success, owing to the working of the daylight saving scheme. C. C. HITE IS NOW LOOKING FOR SITES

Cincinnati Man Is About to Add to Queen City Seating Capacity of Moving Picture Theatres

C. C. HITE announces that he is looking for sites to build one or two new picture houses in the Queen City. Several locations are under consideration, the most desirable being one at the corner of Seventh and Vine streets, opposite the site of the new house to be built by Asher Brothers, of Chicago. This lot is about 75 by 150 feet, and would make an ideal location, as the trend of business in Cincinnati is northward. The financing of the new houses will be by Eastern capital, the total investment for which will be above $1,000,000. The big volume of the business being done by Cincinnati theatres has attracted much attention and the need for new theatres is becoming more and more evident daily. Should this deal be consummated, in addition to the new Palace Theatre and the Asher building, it would add some 10,000 seating capacity to the regular picture houses in Cincinnati, and those who have closely watched the growth of the business agree that this increase is needed and will in no way hurt the theatres already running.

Asher Theatre to Open Thanksgiving.

More New Houses for Cleveland.

AS INDICATED by real estate deals recently consummated, Marcus Loew and his Cleveland associates are going right ahead on the building of three or four big theatres in Cleveland.

Plans for the house at Euclid avenue and East One Hundred and Second street have been approved, the seating capacity having been increased from 2,500 to 4,000.

Another event of importance was the leasing by the Huron Road Improvement Company of a downtown piece of real estate on Euclid avenue, just east of East Thirteenth street.

This same company took a long lease on the Metropole and Cadillac hotels, adjoining each other on Huron road, which is an excellent site for a theatre.

During the week of June 9, announcement was also made that in the Euclid and East One hundred and Fifth street district, Charles Miles would build a theatre. This makes the fourth announcement of a new house going up there.

Among Independent Producers

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

New Company to Reissue Series of Selig Features

BY arrangement with Exclusive Features, Inc., controlling the world rights to William N. Selig negatives, Film Specials, Inc., and a newcomer in the state rights field, with offices at 130 West Forty-sixth street, will reissue to independent exchanges a series of five and six-reel "Selig Masterpieces," each one selected from a well-known book or play, and featuring a popular screen star.

It is announced that each picture will be sold on its individual merits, and it will not be necessary for buyers to contract for the entire series. The first release, which is now ready, will be Tom Moore in "Brown of Harvard," directed by Harry Beaumont, supported by Hazel Daly, Walter Heirs and Kempton Greene.

This picture has been re-edited, new subtitles constructed and new prints made. An artistic line of paper, including one, three and six sheets; also a set of 11x14 and 22x28 photos for lobby display, together with slides, press matter and lobby displays prepared.

Other productions to follow in this series include H. B. Warner in "The Danger Trail," "The Country God Forgot," "Piney Ridge," "The Circular Staircase" and a series of Marshall Neilan reissues.

Many Fine Bookings Secured by Pioneer on Beban Film

THE George Beban feature, "Hearts of Men," is said to be proving a great success in New York under the exploitation policy of the Pioneer Film Corporation. The Marcus Loew and William Fox circuits have been booked solid on the picture and simultaneous with the first showing at these houses the Pioneer began its outdoor billboard campaign.

The new Pioneer branch in Buffalo, which opened its doors two weeks ago, reports heavy bookings on "Hearts of Men," as well as "Virtuous Sinners" and other recent pictures.

In the state rights department of Pioneer things are moving rapidly. A force of salesmen with Jerry Abrams at their head are traveling throughout the country with the latest Pioneer attractions. Negotiations for the sales of several territories on "The Boomerang," "Virtuous Sinners," "Suspicion," and "The Girl from Nowhere," and "Sins of the Children" are under way, and the closing of several deals is expected at an early date.

Frohman Company to Make Two New Series of Films

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, has returned to Los Angeles to supervise the completion of the last five of the series of two-reelers, and to arrange for the inauguration of a new series of two-reelers with a star who is said to have devoted his services heretofore solely to feature attractions.

Negotiations by telegraph have reached such a stage, says General Manager Jesse J. Goldburg, as to necessitate Mr. Sherrill's presence on the Coast in connection with still another proposition, and it is expected that an announcement will be made in a short time regarding a series starring a comedian whose name is not divulged, but who is said to be one of the most unique and popular comedians on the screen.

Mr. Goldburg further states that the demand for short length subjects produced with the same care, detail and attention as features is greater than the supply, which has determined the Frohman Amusement Corporation to make the two new series. "The Texas Guinan" and Mack Swain productions have gone over with a rush, says Mr. Goldburg, "which vindicates our judgment of the demand for high-class one and two-reel productions, and it appears that exchangemen and exhibitors, as well as the public, appreciate the meritorious short length subjects and will patronize a theatre showing them as they will for five and six-reel features.

Nearly Half of Territory Sold on "Yankee Doodle"

SOL L. LESSER, president of the State Rights Distributors, Inc., and the Yankee Doodle in Berlin Company, reports the following rights, comprising about fifty per cent. of the territory, have been sold on Mack Sennett's feature, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin": Western Pennsylvania and New Jersey, First National Exhibitors Exchange; Ohio to Masterpiece Film Attractions; Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma to True Film Company; California, Nevada, Arizona to All Star Features Disb.; Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana to De Luxe Feature Film Co.; Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico to Orson Adams; Michigan to Diehl & Mowat; Indiana to Doll-Van Film Corp.; Upper New York State to Gardiner Syndicate; Iowa & Nebraska to F. A. F. Enterprises.

More Territory Sold on Sawyer-Lubin Film

H. C. SIMERAL, general manager of Co-Partner Attractions, Pittsburgh, Pa., visited S-L offices this week for the purpose of purchasing additional territory for "Virtuous Men." He closed contracts whereby Co-Partner Atractions acquire Kentucky for the S-L production starring E. K. Lincoln.

Mr. Simeral is now distributing the Sawyer-Lubin attraction for Ohio, western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Kentucky. He at present has three touring companies presenting "Virtuous Men" as a special road show. It is his intention to open "Virtuous Men" in western Pennsylvania and West Virginia in the near future.

During his visit to New York, Mr. Simeral ordered five additional prints to take care of the bookings he has secured in these territories for the production.

Sidelights and Reflections

GOOD news for the lovers of a rattling tale of adventure and romance! William Fox has purchased the screen rights of Louis Tracy's widely read story, "The Wings of the Morning," and William Farnum will appear as the hero. Only the immortal "Robinson Crusoe" of De Foe outranks the Tracy work as a story of adventure, and the love interest in "The Wings of the Morning" is beautifully true and tender.

The fight at the mouth of the cave between the Englishman and his sweetheart and the savages will make a stirring series of incidents, and the chance for fine scenic effects is almost unmatched.

A screen version of William Gillette's civil war drama, "Secret Service," with Robert Warwick as the Union spy, will be shown in New York the week of June 22. Here is a stage drama which should lend itself to the moving picture with the best of results. The story is intensely dramatic and earned the reputation of being the finest example of a war drama ever written on the struggle between the North and the South. Its long run at the Empire Theatre, New York, some twenty years ago made it the most talked of play of its time.

Marshall Neilan's dictum that "what we need now is not better stories, but better continuity writers" is the opinion of every one who really understands the requirements of a well-made scenario. Like the stage play the finished product of a continuity writer may read perfectly and would answer the purpose if the story were intended for reading only; but special skill and training are necessary to enable a writer to turn the work into actable shape. Explanation which is essential when the story is read by the untrained reader is discarded by the director as he realizes that some bit of business which he has put in renders useless two or three scenes which follow. Sometimes a turn of the head or the lifting of the eyebrows is sufficient to take the place of several pages of explanation.

George Randolph Chester echoed the same hard and fast fact the other day when he said that the screen has no dramatists. This is rather a sweeping statement; but there is room and to spare for all the ambitious young men and women who can qualify for the position of expert continuity writer.

The active participation of the author himself in the making of his story into picture form will teach him a wholesome respect for the art of the continuity writer and the expert knowledge of the man who directs a production.

"Sunnyside"

Charlie Chaplin's Third First National Exhibitors' Circuit Comedy Is Rich in Entertainment.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CHARLIE, or rather Charles Chaplin, as he writes it himself on the title page of his picture, is still advancing the tone of his screen comedy. "Sunnyside" is the most human of all his stories, and he gets his laughs with but little of the old slapstick method. One scene is immensely droll and burlesques the craze for the Greek dance with the skill that only this king of screen comedians knows how to use. To see him join in the flying leaps and poses of a quartet of bare-limbed maidens as they bound lightly all over the landscape, is to witness a bit of caricature that is as classic as the dance itself.

Not for an instant does he strain for a point, not even when he trips and lands in the thorny bosom of a large and quick-acting member of the cactus family; but his endeavors to keep step, hide his embarrassment, relieve himself of a collection of stinging little darts and wear the beautiful smile of innocence which is the chief adornment of the nature dancer, is a thing of pure delight.

Quick action marks the opening of the picture. Charlie is the full staff of "help" at a country hotel and is obliged to go to bed with his clothes on so that he may waste no time in getting up in the morning. It is this getting up or getting him up operation which starts off the comedy with a bang, and his efforts to do the bidding of his slave driver of a boss is the motive of much of the fun. One of the most amusing incidents is where he is sent to drive the cows home and loses the herd at the fork of the road. His inimitable walk has never been used more effectively.

There is real romance in "Sunnyside." Charlie is in love with a country maiden and his dream of happiness is badly upset when a city chap spills himself out of his automobile in front of the hotel, and Charlie imagines he has a dangerous rival for the love of his charmer.

The scene where he comes to the house of his country sweetheart and finds his rival in all the glory of fashionable attire paying attention to the young lady, who has put a fetching ribbon in her hair and donned her Sunday clothes, is neat preparation for the time when Charlie returns clad in an amusing imitation of the city chap's stylish garments.

In spite of the grotesque flavor of the incidents this part of the story seems real, and that hint of deeper feeling which always underlies the work of a genuine comedian is never absent from the picture. The finish, showing the departure of the city chap and Charlie in possession of the fair prize, is a welcome addition to the happy ending.

The production has been given every care. "Sunnyside" may not be the loudest Chaplin "big scream," but it abounds in hearty laughs and clean fun.

"The Man Who Stayed Home"

Six-Reel Metro Pictures Corporation Subject Presents Strong War Play.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN this six-reel screen classic production, "The Man Who Stayed at Home," the Metro Pictures Corporation presents a strong adaptation of a well-known stage play. It is a secret service story, dating back to August, 1918, with an American locale. The hero is a man who failed to go into service, to all appearances, when the United States went into the war, but it develops later that he is a secret service man. King Baggot does some effective work in this role and is supported by a well balanced cast.

The production is better in the matter of continuity and suspense than many of the war plays have been. The incidents connected with the rounding up of the WILLIAM DUDLEY PELLEY'S short story, "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day," as published in the Saturday Evening Post and produced by Metro, with Bert Lytell as its star, is announced for release on June 23.

Mr. Pelley's original story proved most successful as a laugh-provoker in print, and it is claimed that the complete photoplay is one continual round of mirth and intensely humorous situations. It was converted to the screen by George D. Baker, who also converted and supervised Bert Lytell's great comedy success, "The Spender." John Ince has guided Lytell through this comedy vehicle.

Some of the distinct novelties of the picture are the spectacular scenes of the entire three ring show in progress, with the entire audience caught by long pano-

Levy Puts Trailer on Films Handled by His Exchange

AS a part of the campaign for making the only film exchange in Louisville a recognized local institution, with a position in public estimation throughout the territory equal in importance to that of the largest department stores or the leading newspapers, Colonel Fred Levy, president of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Kentucky and Tennessee, has purchased a novel film trailer for use with every print of all subjects handled by that branch.

The trailer shows a curtain unfolding, which reveals two children turning the crank of a motion picture camera. Stars shoot out from the lense case and form the words "Big Features Rights Corporation." A second star bursts to form the line "Fred Levy, president;" a third star dissembles itself and is arranged to read "Lee Goldberg, secretary." Then the word "Presents" follows this as the immediate preface to the main title of the particular production.

The trailer was first used on a print of "Daddy Long Legs," at the Strand Theatre, in Louisville, and won a notice from the local newspaper critics for its novelty and for the advertising values it possesses.

To Exploit Stage Women's Films in Fifty-nine Cities

FIFTY-NINE of the cities which will be visited by Universal's representatives who are to exploit the screen of Stage Women's War Relief pictures in the United States, have been selected and are named below. This unusual exploitation of a series of pictures is being done to acquaint the exhibitors of the country with the entire series, as well as giving them as much information as possible regarding the stars. The two men who will visit the cities named are William Howard and W. R. Wilkerson. Both men have met and interviewed the most prominent of the stars, and are thoroughly acquainted with the production of the entire series.

The cities which will be visited by Mr. Wilkerson are Des Moines, Davenport, St. Louis, St. Joseph, Mo.; Kansas City, Topeka, Kan.; Wichita, Muskogee, Oklahoma City, Santa Fe, Pueblo, Colorado Springs, Denver, Cheyenne, Lincoln, Omaha, Sioux City, Aberdeen, Fargo, Bismark, Helena, Butte, Spokane, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland, Salem, Boise, Ogden, Salt Lake, Frisco, Oakland, Sacramento, Berkeley, San Diego, Los Angeles, Pasadena, Tucson, San Antonio, Ft. Mr. Howard will call upon the exhibitors in the following cities, Boston, Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Columbus, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, and Minneapolis.

Desmond Submerged in "Bare-Fisted Gallagher"

IN "Bare-Fisted Gallagher," released by Robertson-Cole, through Exhibitors Mutual, one of the big punches of the picture is obtained through a fight between Desmond and Lanning, which takes place alongside a babbling brook. Breaking free from a death grasp about the neck, Desmond gets Lanning's throat in his clutches and pushes his head under the water. Lanning keeps his head below the water long enough for the cameraman to obtain a close-up which was considerably more than a minute. The close-up was filmed without the use of any submarine photographing device.

Little Brownie Vernon and Jeanette Rankin are the only women in the production. Miss Vernon is leading woman for Desmond, while Miss Rankin interjects some good humor.

Strand Rebooks "Daddy Long Legs."

Two months ago exhibitors in Louisville and vicinity discovered in the presentation of "Virtuous Wives" at the Strand Theatre, that the local population was more than sufficient to patronize a special feature attraction for a run of one week, instead of the maximum of four days, which had prevailed up to that time.

Last week the showmen of Kentucky and Tennessee were given another surprise in the announcement that Louisville was about to receive another test to prove that even week stands were not long enough to exhaust the maximum number of patrons for any one production.

Arthur Fix, manager of the Strand Theatre, has rebooked "Daddy Long Legs," first of the Mary Pickford specials to be released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, for a return engagement of three days after playing to fifty-two capacity houses during its first run of one week.

AMERICAN announces that it will release next month another Mary Miles Minter film, based on an original story by Joseph Franklin Poland and prepared for the screen by Frank Howard Clark.

"Yvonne from Paris" will present Miss Minter in a part that is considerably different from anything she has had in months. As Yvonne Halbert she is a dazzling young Parisian dancer who runs away from her tyrannical aunt and comes to America incognita. The aunt has contracted for her appearance in a new musical comedy to be presented in New York.

The cast includes Alan Forrest, who plays opposite the star, while J. Barney Sherry, Rosemary Theby, E. Alyn Warren, Bert Grassby, Jeanne Robbins, Jack Farrell and Frank Clark enact the other important roles.

The production was directed by Emmett J. Flynn.

The dramatic moments are effective for the most part and the climax is led up to in a satisfactory way. This is the type of war picture that should interest most spectators even though the war is over, as its story stands by itself and is well worked out.

The Story.

Christopher Brent, the hero of "The Man Who Stayed at Home," is looked down upon by his fellow townspeople because he has apparently not volunteered for any form of war work. Even the faith of his fiancee, Molly Preston, is almost shaken by the constant reports coming to her ears that Brent is a slacker.

Brent, however, is enrolled as a secret service man and has been detailed to watch some spies at Old Point Comfort, where the principals are all located at a summer hotel. Among the spies are the proprietor of the hotel itself, a young engineer named Sanderson, who also loves Molly, and numerous guests.

A woman named Mrs. Miriam Leigh arrives at the hotel and is seen frequently with Brent. This arouses Molly's jealousy, but Mrs. Leigh is a woman member of the United States Secret Service. She and Brent together locate a hidden wireless outfit in the rooms of one of the German spies. They destroy this and set about capturing the spies, who are at the time communicating with a submarine in the vicinity of the point.

Brent shoots down a carrier pigeon, released by one of the spies, recovering valuable maps drawn by Sanderson. He and Mrs. Leigh are suspected of being German sympathizers, but in the end clear their names in good fashion. They also bring about the destruction of a prowling submarine, through the agency of a swift U. S. destroyer.

"Fools and Their Money"

Metro Pictures Corporation Presents Emmy Wehlen in Society Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

AN UNUSUALLY excellent comedy of smart society is this five-reel Metro feature, "Fools and Their Money." It has a bright, original plot and is set amidst charming scenes. The cast, headed by Emmy Wehlen, is one that fits the story particularly well. There is a correctness about the social atmosphere of the production that is not always found in subjects of the kind.

The action centers about the efforts of a newly-rich family to break into high society in an exclusive country neighborhood. This has furnished the theme for innumerable stories, and there is nothing particularly novel in the general situation. But the original touch comes in the daring effort of the heroine to pass herself off as a professional social secretary and the effort of the hero to avenge himself and his family by playing the part of groom. This leads to some amusing complications.

The Story.

"Fools and Their Money," refers to the Tompkins family, which has come into millions through munitions and Mrs. Tompkins is determined to make her mark in high society. The son, Richard, is in college, and the family takes up a fine country estate in an exclusive neighborhood.

Mrs. Tompkins mistakes Louise Allenby, a beautiful young society girl living near, for a servant. The girl is amused by the error and decides to carry it further. She tells Mrs. Tompkins she is a social secretary to the Allenbys, and Mrs. Tompkins immediately offers to double her salary if she will come to them. Louise accepts the place and proceeds to initiate the Tompkins family into society life.

The son, Richard, on his return from college, overhears some girls on the train laughing about the joke Louise is playing on his people. To avenge himself, Richard hires out as groom to the Allenby family. He meets Louise and they fall in love.

During a ball, given by the Tompkins, Louise is accused of stealing her own jewels by a jealous young society man, named Van Dusen. In the scenes which follow, the identity of Louise is brought out, and also that of Richard. Van Dusen himself is found to have stolen some of the jewels, and is sent to prison.

"Cowardice Court"

Five-Reel Fox Release Features Peggy Hyland In Amusing Comedy-Drama.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is a great deal of pictorial charm and a pleasing social atmosphere in this five-reel Fox subject, entitled "Cowardice Court." It was adapted from a novel by George Barr McCutcheon, author of many successful stories of the popular type. In screen form this particular tale carries a blithe comedy spirit and moves with good action; it never dips very heavily into drama and has little regard for the realities. It is purely a surface story of an engaging type and one that carries a fair amount of entertainment.

Peggy Hyland plays the heroine, Penelope Drake, sister of a lord who has married into an American family. The plot centers about two adjoining country estates, between which a small river flows, with a connecting foot bridge. The owners of these estates are at swords' points and the girl brings about a termination of the feud by marrying her brother's enemy.

The locations in this are very charming and do much to add to the enjoyment of the picture. The cast is also pleasing as a whole and the social life is in keeping with the story.

which labor should find relief from six days of toil."

"The screen," Dr. Copeland went on, "should be further used in spreading health propaganda. It could help, for instance, to bring to normality the 200,000 school children of New York City's million who are underfed and undernourished."

John J. McInerney, a prominent Rochester attorney and counsel for the state exhibitors, took the place on the speakers' program of Aaron J. Levy.

"This is a great day, not only for the triumvirate, but for the rank and file of exhibitors," said Mr. McInerney. "Do you realize that the exhibitor of New York were in a chaotic state of organization until the great Berman swept upstate, going into the highways and byways, making friends for the Exhibitors' League, where formerly enemies existed? Perhaps you didn't know that he was working under the old Tammany plan of General O'Reilly—and put up to the whole thing by the mind of Sydney Cohen. And O'Reilly at Albany played the Irish harp for the Irish and the jewsharp for the Jews.

McInerney Adds Fine Words.

"As time goes on these men will be remembered as the peak of the wedge which fought the fight for Sunday pictures. And each state, as it comes into the column that marches on as New York does, will remember these three men for what they have done.

"They realized," said Mr. McInerney, and his remarks were greeted with applause, "that the moving picture is a safety valve for the workingman—that when he is looking at a movie in a theatre the Bolshevik cannot get at him."

William A. Brady, introduced by Toastmaster Walker as "the debutante," struck a national note when he said that men and women have a right to do as they please with their Sunday afternoons and evenings.

"And as your national representative," said Mr. Brady, "as the president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, I appeal to you to support a friend of the moving picture in whatever the future holds for him: I appeal to you to support Senator Jimmie Walker."

Mr. Brady went on to outline a scheme of national representation of the motion picture industry in Washington and in the various capitals of the states.

Pictures Are Thought Stirrers.

Arthur Brisbane, besides paying the wonderful tribute to the right of the open Sunday cause by his figure of "the greatest moving picture and the Greatest Director," also paid a tribute to the screen as a whole by saying: "In the last ten years the moving picture has done more to stir up thought among the people than all the newspapers, all the books and all the preachers." This word of praise was the more noteworthy because it came from the lips of a newspaper man. And it was all the more pertinent because of Mr. Brisbane's previous remarks on the need of curbing the spirit of Bolshevism by proper education.

The last speaker on the list was Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State Exhibitors' League, and the spokesman appointed by his colleagues, Berman and O'Reilly. Before introducing Mr. Cohen, Toastmaster Walker had presented to each member of the triumvirate a platinum watch. With each watch was a slender chain with pearls, and with each watch also were some beautiful words from Jimmie Walker

In fact, when Mr. Cohen began his speech, the effect of this final tribute was evident in his voice. But Mr. Cohen soon recovered himself, and proceeded with dignity to thank every one who, from the inception of the Sunday campaign to its conclusion, had helped in the cause.

William Fox.
Marshaled beauty, wit and oratory as chairman of committee on banquet arrangements.

The Thanks of Cohen.

Beginning with William Fox, who offered to pay all the expenses incident to the Sunday campaign (which offer it had not been necessary to accept), Mr. Cohen then named Health Commissioner Copeland, William A. Brady, Arthur Friend, of Famous Players-Lasky, James L. Holland of the American Federation of Labor, Peter J. Brady, Senator Jimmie Walker, Simon L. Adler, Clarence F. Welch, the entire trade press, and finally Governor Smith himself.

"I take it," said Mr. Cohen, "that this praise, these fine tributes are intended for the exhibitors of the State of New York whose representatives we are temporarily." The president of the Exhibitors League then went on to recount the fine organization of the upstate cities, mentioning Buffalo and Rochester in particular, saying that it was the support and conviction of the exhibitors which won the fight.

"I shall treasure this gift," Mr. Cohen concluded, "and the memories of this evening always." Then came the music.

The Story.

Richard Randall, a patriotic lawyer in "The Profiteers," is conducting a crusade against food profiteers, headed by a capitalist named Everett Dearing. The latter is an unscrupulous man and makes up his mind to crush Randall.

Beverly Randall, the wife, is very much devoted to her husband, but she has made the mistake of cultivating the acquaintance of Tony Terle, a society idler. Dearing, seeking a way in which to wreck Randall, gets hold of Terle. By blackmailing methods Dearing induces Terle to lure Mrs. Randall to a country inn on pretense that her husband is ill.

At the inn Mrs. Randall finds herself the victim of a bold frameup, in which she is photographed in Terle's room, in the latter's embrace. In her efforts to clear her name, and to prevent her husband's ruin in the public eye, Mrs. Randall visits Dearing. The interview results in a violent struggle, in which Dearing falls upon a paper file and receives a mortal wound. It also develops later that Terle was concealed in the adjoining room and fired a shot at Dearing from behind during the struggle. Mrs. Randall's name is cleared of all blame and she is reunited with her husband.

"Men, Women and Money"

Strong Paramount Story by Cosmo Hamilton Presents Ethel Clayton in a Role She Interprets with Charm and Intelligence.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

OF VITAL theme, handled skilfully in spite of its many difficulties, rich in treatment, the lead interpreted with grace and beauty by an actress of keen sensibilities, the sum of values in "Men, Women and Money" is very high. It holds close attention though the difficulties of developing a motive so intricate and thoroughly modern were not entirely overcome. The author has chosen to make his heroine a mere drifter, and a selfish one at that. Completely at the mercy of circumstances, the heroine barely recognizing the noble sacrifices made by her parents that she may enjoy what they never had, in the end she shows how the innate purity of a truly fine woman may work wonders for herself and all within the sphere of her influence. That Miss Clayton assumed this role was fortunate for the story. It is largely through the refinement of her impersonation, her expression of womanliness, intensely American in character, that the Paramount production carries conviction.

The author enforces his point in "Men, Women and Money" through the character of a wealthy young man, finely impersonated by Lew Cody. His conduct brings in the element of contrast, so lacking in pure vehicles, and strengthens the entire Paramount product accordingly. The cast is exceptionally able, embracing such skilled performers as Irving Cummings, Charles Ogle, Jane Wolfe, and others; the treatment is lavish in all scenes, beautiful in large ensembles and consistent throughout, so that "Men, Women and Money" is bound to please wherever shown.

The Story.

"Men, Women and Money" do not absorb the thoughts of Marcel Middleton until she leaves her simple and true-hearted constant self-sacrifice. While on a visit to a school chum, Noel Parkton, in New York, she becomes almost heartless and thoroughly mercenary through the life of luxury into which she is plunged. She spends the money her father raised by mortgaging his home in buying gowns and gambling, her only recognition being a dress for her mother and fifty dollars for her father from her winnings at bridge whist. When young Chadwick, Noel's pretended friend, proposes to Marcel, the latter gets her dismissal, and this comes coincident with the accidental death of her mother and father.

Thrown on her own resources, with a couple of thousand rescued from the wreck of her father's fortune, she tires of trying to earn her own living, and returns to New York, where she hires a Riverside apartment and starts in to make a splash socially. She runs heavily in debt at the dressmaking establishment of Madame Ribout and is tempted to pay her bill by check, with a hope of making good by gambling. This act places her in the power of the dressmaker, for whom she is compelled to pose as a model, much to the delight of Chadwick, whom she has rebuffed, and of ladies envious of her social success. As a crowning act of humiliation, she is asked to do posing in lingerie before a large and fashionable crowd.

Cleveland Buchanan, a young man of wealth, made cynical by his experiences with women, is staggered to find that he has misjudged Marcel. She scorns his proffered protection, even when she is heavily in his debt, and bravely tries to redeem herself through hard work, rooming with Katie, who works in a menial position for the fashionable dressmaker, and takes care of an invalid little brother. Buchanan finds that Marcel is really making a courageous, though futile, attempt to pay for her folly, and gives Katie his telephone number to be used in an emergency. It is when Marcel is called upon to make herself ridiculous before her social acquaintances, that Katie calls for Buchanan. He goes to the rescue, now thoroughly reformed by the purity of Marcel's character and deeply engaged in good works. When she finds that he has done so much to deserve her good opinion and make amends for his insult, she yields at last, and they drive away from the dressmaking establishment to the license bureau and to mutual happiness, both refined in the crucible of experience.

"Oh Boy," based on the well-known Broadway success, is termed a "filmusical" show. With June Caprice and Creighton Hale as stars and a strong cast of players, the picture has been given all to make for perfection.

Zena Keefe, who plays the part of the cabaret favorite, is a popular screen star; Flora Finch will be recalled as the comedy mate of the late John Bunny, in the Vitagraph comedies; W. H. Thompson is one of the foremost character actors of the "legitimate" stage; J. K. Murray is a well known comic opera star. Then there were Ben Taggert, Joseph Conyers, Charles Hartley, Grace Reals and "Lefty" Flynn, the Yale football player, who, with several other athletes, give the real college flavor to the varsity scenes and the story.

Serials and Comedies Active.

"Bringing in the Law," episode No. 10 of the Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland, opens with Belle Boyd, (Ruth Roland), saving Jack Randall, (George Larkin), from death in a well, down which he has been dropped by Bull Shotwell and his gang.

The Harold Lloyd comedy which creates "a power house of live wire merriment," is called "Off the Trolley." The usual screen comedy may be comprehended in this title, but the Lloyd brand is governed by a definite logic in its high speed, its amazing stunts and the attendant thrills.

In the Pathe Review, Dr. Ditmars shows, at close range, the work of the beavers as builders; analysis of motion pictures of ice-skating champions; hunting the aigret, shown in Pathecolor; how the wounded heroes are cared for, and the scenic beauties of Java in Pathecolor.

Alma Rubens Completes First of Own Productions

WORK was completed this week on the filming of the first of the Alma Rubens productions to be distributed by Pathe, entitled "Paradise Annie," starring Miss Rubens under the direction of the author, Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman. Cutting and titling probably will be finished within ten days.

The final scenes were "shot" recently, in the Paragon Studio, at Fort Lee. The set, representing a huge ball room with a grand staircase at one end, is large and massive, although it is probable that only a few flashes of the ballroom and dancers will be shown in the completed picture.

Star Supervises the Sets.

In addition to her work before the camera, Miss Rubens is spending much time personally supervising with Dr. Goodman the sets, lighting and other studio details. She is one of the few women stars with the technical knowledge necessary for such co-operation with her director and she takes as keen an interest in this work as in the actual work of acting.

Miss Rubens' leading man is Lumsden Hare, who supported Elsie Ferguson in her last three pictures, Robert Williams, Mercita Esmonde, Gladys Valerie and Mathilde Brundage.

Huge Crowd Appears for "Riders of Purple Sage"

THE Lyric Theatre, of Yankton, S. D., last month booked "Riders of the Purple Sage," the Zane Grey story purchased by William Fox and filmed with William Farnum as the star, and the people of that city turned out en masse when the picture was shown. A huge crowd gathered in front of the theatre long before the time of showing, and waited patiently to see this thrilling drama. In the accompanying picture the crowd can be seen lined up waiting admission. A feature caught by the camera was the theatre sign reading, "William Farnum in 'Riders of the Purple Sage.' Staged and Photographed in Grand Canyon."

"Beauty Proof" Is a Story of the Snows.

"Beauty Proof," Harry T. Morey's current release, is a stirring screen dramatization of life in the rugged northwest, with snow scenes, dog teams, hairbreadth escapes and thrilling episodes galore. Harry T. Morey plays the role of Corporal Steele, a mounted policeman of that body known as the Northwest Mounted Police, which is Canada's great law-preserving body in those parts of the Dominion which are not easily reached by the courts.

Betty Blythe appears opposite Mr. Morey in a role full of tensity and emotion.

DeMille Starts Work on "The Admirable Crichton"

CECIL B. DE MILLE has started work on another Artcraft picture. The new production is founded on "The Admirable Crichton," by Sir James M. Barrie. Jeannie McPherson has written the continuity, retaining much of the charm and whimsical humor which distinguish the work of the English dramatist.

Thomas Meighan and Gloria Swanson head the cast. Others included are Lila Lee, Julia Faye, Mayme Kelso, Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, and Babe Daniels.

As usual, no effort is being spared to make this picture correct in every detail. A special feature of this attention to detail is the addition of Major Ian Hay Beith, of the British Army, to the producing staff. Major Beith, in addition to being an author and lecturer of note, is an authority on all matters pertaining to British life and customs, and he will personally superintend the entire production to insure correctness and realism throughout.

Settings are Noteworthy.

In the matter of settings, Mr. DeMille promises to pass all former marks with this picture. One entire stage at the Famous Players-Lasky studio is occupied with the interior sets which will be used, and the full talents of the Lasky staff have been employed to check every detail of this work. Major Beith lent his assistance in matters purely English with the result that the public can count on the technical realism of this portion of the production.

Perhaps the most distinctive feature of the picture is its outdoor settings. One half of the story is laid on a tropical island and this island will be shown in full. An island off the coast of California was selected as the site, and has been planted with thousands of dollars' worth of tropical foliage. The entire company will spend several weeks there in the making of the picture.

Jean Paige Comes to Fore in "Too Many Crooks" Film

ON the day that she reached New York, Jean Paige applied at the Vitagraph studio for a position, and she was accepted. The next day she was at work.

Those who see her in "Too Many Crooks," her first featured appearance, dividing honors with Gladys Leslie, may understand why the gods singled her out.

The story tells of a young woman playwright's ambition to construct a character play along new lines. She does not believe the psychology of the plays of that description which flood the stages to be correct. Therefore, with the assistance of the family lawyer, she deftly introduces several horrible exponents of the underworld arts into her household, while a party is in progress, thus to observe their methods at first range. Complications ensue as well as a romantic attachment, which society would frown on.

A Mrs. Woodrow Novel for Williams.

Reports from Vitagraph's West Coast studio tell of rapid progress in the latest Earle Williams' picture and all indicate that the star has an outstanding role in the adaptation of the popular novel, "The Hornet's Nest," by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow. James Young is directing the picture and in the supporting cast are Brinsley Shaw, Viola Vale, Ogden Crane, Kathleen Kirkham and Edward McWade.

"Love and the Woman"

Five-Reel World-Picture Presents June Elvidge in Double Role.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN this five-reel World-Picture, "Love and The Woman," June Elvidge plays a double role, the first that of a poor woman, married to a drunkard, and later the daughter of this unhappy couple. The story is one of the melodramatic type, quite obvious as to plot, and rather mechanical in its movement. It carries the interest, though it offers nothing exceptional in the way of presentation or development.

June Elvidge does some pleasing work and differentiates the two characters she portrays. As the beautiful young Helen Stevens, reared from childhood in luxury and entirely without knowledge of her lowly origin, she is very different from the Mary Dorsey of the beginning. The mother, who is working as maid in a hotel, to support her drunken husband and her child, exchanges her own baby for an infant in the hotel. The latter baby and its mother have both died, and the changeling is accepted by the wealthy father of the dead baby as his own.

The melodramatic incidents grow out of the fact that Mary Dorsey is discovered making the substitution of her child for the dead infant, by another maid. The latter carries on a persistent course of blackmail through the years that follow, in which she is assisted by the drunken husband of Mary Dorsey. Helen, the changeling, is beloved by two men, and eventually marries the one who loves her for herself alone.

The Story.

Mary Dorsey, the leading character in "Love and the Woman," is employed as maid in a hotel and works hard for her wages. Her husband is a worthless drunkard, and she is the sole support of the family.

Mrs. Stevens, wife of George Stevens, is taken with a fatal illness in the hotel, and both she and her infant daughter die there. Mary Dorsey, who has been nursing Mrs. Stevens' baby, conceives the idea of substituting her own daughter for the dead child, and proceeds to carry out this scheme. She is observed in making the substitution by another maid, Hannah Shay, who agrees to keep silence only if she is paid for it.

George Stevens accepts the changeling as his own daughter and she grows up under the name of Helen Stevens, quite unaware of her real birth. Mary Dorsey is persistently blackmailed by Hannah Shay during her remaining years, and after her death Hannah turns her attentions to Helen, to whom she communicates her story. Hannah is aided in her further blackmailing by Jim Dorsey, Helen's real father.

Helen is loved by Grant Murdock, manager of Mr. Stevens' interests, and a young artist, Walter Pemberton, whom she had known since childhood. When the facts of her lowly birth are made known, Murdock deserts her and she marries Pemberton. She is also made happy by the fact that George Stevens still looks upon her as his daughter.

"A Sporting Chance"

Five-Reel Pathe-William Russell Production Sets New Pace for Comedy-Drama.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT is perhaps wrong to call this ripping little five-reel subject, "A Sporting Chance," a comedy-drama. It is really a dramatic comedy, as the first four reels present as tense and baffling a series of events as could well be imagined. The spectator has the feeling that it all calls for a comedy solution and is in a constant state of wonderment as to what possible denouement can be good enough for the puzzle depicted. When it comes it is comedy right enough and it is satisfying, leaving the spectator gasping with surprised appreciation.

Stephen Fox wrote the story and scenario for this production, which was directed by Henry King. William Russell finds himself right at home in the leading role, with Fritzi Brunette as the heroine. Both these players are particularly fortunate in having so admirable a vehicle and they are supported by a strong cast.

The story is one of action from start to finish. The scene is in a small hotel, not far from Times Square, New York City, and the events are in keeping with the general vicinity. A very compact and enjoyable production.

The Story.

John Stonehouse in "A Sporting Chance" registers at a small hotel in the theatrical section of New York City, and goes up to his room with every intention of killing himself. He even writes a note of farewell, addressed "To Whom It May Concern."

But just as Stonehouse is about to pull the trigger of his revolver, he hears a shot fired in a room across the court. He hastens to investigate and finds a girl, Gilberte Bonheur, bending over the pros-

Wide Variety of Pictures on World's July List

A WIDE variety of films feature the July releases of the World Film Corporation. These releases star the following screen players: Arthur Ashley, Dorothy Green, Rubye de Remer, Montagu Love and Evelyn Greeley.

First on the list of July releases comes "The American Way," in which Arthur Ashley and Dorothy Green are co-starred. This is a modern comedy drama offering big opportunities to both of these stars. Florence C. Bolles is the author of the story, while the scenario was prepared by Wallace C. Clifton. Frank Reicher directed the production. Prominent in the cast are Charles Wellsley, Franklin Hanna and Lisle Leigh. The production is scheduled for release on July 7.

To be released on July 14, is "Dust of Desire," starring Rubye de Remer. This is Miss de Remer's first picture of the series she has been engaged to make for the World. Prominent in the cast are Stuart Holmes, Thomas J. Carrigan and Marion Barney. Perry Vekroff is the director. Clara S. Beranager and Forrest Halsey are the authors of both story and scenario.

"Bringing Up Betty," starring Evelyn Greeley, who made her first appearance as a full fledged star in World Pictures in "Phil-for-Short," is scheduled for release on July 21. This is another Oscar Apfel production. Prominent in the cast are Lyster Chambers, Reginald Denny, Ben Johnson and Grace Carlyle. Charles Sarver, the World scenario editor and author of a number of successful World productions, is the author.

The final release of the month, on July 28, will be "A Broadway Saint," which stars Montagu Love. Forrest Halsey is the author of the story. Harry O. Hoyt, who directed Mr. Love in his recent release, "Through the Toils," directed this production. George Bunny, brother of the famous John Bunny, is prominent in the cast, and among others appearing in support of Mr. Love are Mrs. Stuart Robson, Helen Weer and Emile La Croix.

Willard Picture Booked for Week-Run Houses

MORE than 100 week-run houses throughout the country have booked the Jess Willard picture, "The Challenge of Chance," according to an announcement made by Frank G. Hall, who has the exclusive distributing rights to the Willard picture for the United States and Canada and under whose direction the picture is playing now at the Park Theatre, New York. So great has been the demand for first showing of the Willard picture that during the week of June 30, the picture will be playing in a dozen or more houses in the same city the same day and date.

This, Mr. Hall claims as a record for bookings in so short a space of time. Coming as it does at the time that Willard is preparing to defend his title of heavyweight champion of the world against Jack Dempsey, his picture, the scenes for which were taken during his preliminary training for his bout, has a country-wide publicity.

Film "The Wolf" on Shores of Lake Tahoe.

Earle Williams and his supporting cast and Director James Young are now on the shores of Lake Tahoe in California, where Vitagraph will film practically in its entirety its screen version of "The Wolf," Eugene Walter's stage success. The players expect to remain at the mountain lake until the latter part of July.

No more appealing location could be chosen for Vitagraph's dramatic production than Lake Tahoe, and there thus is assured a background that fully measures up to the dramatic power of the drama. The very few interiors will be taken in and near Los Angeles on the return of the players to the Hollywood studio.

Accompanying Mr. Williams in his support are Jane Novak, who will play opposite the star, Brinsley Shaw, who with George Nichols, Robert McKim and Billy Mason, make up a strong cast.

Pershing's Return Will Give Picture Publicity

THE report that General John J. Pershing, commander-in-chief of the American armies in Europe, is to return to the United States shortly, has led the Fox Film Corporation to speed up extra publicity material for the showing of the Fox feature, "The Land of the Free," which depicts in dramatic detail the life of the general from boyhood to the present time. In order to arouse the greatest popular interest, one-sheets and three-sheets have been ordered for this production.

Of this film the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation says:

"Hardly a day passes without the newspapers carrying some article on the American commander-in-chief's activities. His generalship, his consideration for his soldiers, his triumph over the Hun, his frequent consultations with members of the Peace Commission, all bring him into the limelight of public interest and public affection.

"In making the film, Mr. Fox had a staff of traveling investigators at work for several months verifying incidents in the life of General Pershing; and the film presents many interesting facts not known to the world prior to the making of this picture. This story of Pershing's life has elements so romantic and tragic that it grips the heart every moment."

Three Sunshine Comedies Have Been Completed

THREE Fox Sunshine comedies have just been completed under the supervision of Hampton Del Ruth. These are "Chicken a la Cabaret," directed by Victor Heerman, featuring Chester Conklin, Billy Armstrong and Dorothy Lee; "The Yellow Dog Catcher," directed by J. G. Blystone, featuring Jack Cooper, Glen Cavender and Bill Franey, and "Wild Waves and Women," directed by Frank C. Griffin, featuring Ethel Teare and Slim Summerville.

Hampton Del Ruth has begun work on three other Sunshine comedies, which are to have a number of special features. To this end he has employed an expert mechanical engineer to devise apparatus.

The beauty brigade to which Mr. Del Ruth has been giving so much attention is now assembled in full, and he claims that it takes the prize for variety, versatility and pulchritudinous charm. It is said to possess members who not only can act, but can dance, sing, dive, swim, run, wrestle, box, drive motor cars and speeding motor cycles, climb—girls, in fact, who will take all sorts of dare-devil chances on sea and land, or in the air.

Featuring Tom Moore's Grin and His Little Alice.

Still another director has been added to the long list recently acquired by Mr. Del Ruth for Fox Sunshine Comedies—Eddie Cline. Mr. Cline was formerly associated with Mr. Del Ruth for several years.

"Challenge of Chance" Is Only Film Showing Willard

THE CHALLENGE OF CHANCE," the seven reel special featuring Jess Willard, which opened for a run at the Park Theatre, New York, this week, is the only Willard film which will be shown before the big July 4 battle, according to a statement from the offices of Frank G. Hall, president of the Film Clearing House and Independent Sales Corporation. This is due to the fact that no pictures, for news reels or any other purpose, have been made of the champion in his training, and "The Challenge of Chance" thus is the only screen production showing Willard as he appears today.

The picture, it is announced, cannot be affected by the result of the fight, because it is not a prize ring picture. The story, which was written by Roy Somerville, presents big Jess in the role of a range boss, the leader of a band of swift-riding, courageous cowboys. It has its principal action in and around Juarez, Mexico, where Villa and his rebels are now fighting. Through a coincidence, Mr. Somerville wrote into the play a great many scenes which are now transpiring on the border, especially those involving the Juarez racetrack. The plot moves around the effort of a crooked horse dealer, in league with Villa, to steal all the valuable racehorses quartered at the track, the most valuable of these being "Silver Moon," owned by a Kentucky girl, played by Arline Pretty. Willard and his men outwit the raiders and rescue all of the horses by swimming them across the Rio Grande while the Mexican federals and the Villistas are fighting.

"Spark Divine" Nearing Release Dates.

Nearing its release is "The Spark Divine," Vitagraph's new Alice Joyce offering. The play depicts the awakening of embittered girlhood to the realization that there are things in life beyond the petty and the gross. It is written around Miss Joyce's personality by Alicia Ramsay. The future is declared to present Miss Joyce at her very best.

Unusual opportunities, too, are afforded to William Carlton, Jr., who appears opposite Miss Joyce. Eulalie Jansen, Frank Norcross and Mary Carr are the other players of a small cast, which fact insures each one of them a greater share in development of the plot.

trate figure of a man in her room. She tells him the man was Aaron Witt, who had possession of a famous stone, called the Signet of Sheba, which belonged to herself. Witt, according to her story, had asked her to redeem the stone with her honor and she had shot him.

Stonehouse is impressed with the girl's story and being tired of life himself, agrees to assume guilt for the shooting. Many visitors come speeding to the room and the police appear. Stonehouse pleads guilty to the crime and then dashes through an open window. He fights in the hallway to regain possession of the precious stone, which had been taken by a man named Ripley.

Having evaded the police temporarily, Stonehouse returns the stone to Gilberte. He is amazed to see the supposedly dead man come to life. Innumerable other complications follow swiftly, but Stonehouse does not know the truth of the situation until the following night, when he attends a theatre at the invitation of Gilberte, and finds he was rehearsing in a play unawares.

"A Girl at Bay"

Vitagraph Picture with Corinne Griffith Strong Story, Masterly in Suspense.

Reviewed by William J. Reilly.

WHEN it comes to maintaining the oft-mentioned and necessary element of suspense, "A Girl at Bay," the Vitagraph feature with Corinne Griffith is more then equal to the occasion. In fact, the picture is all suspense. It begins sharply, showing a girl awaking as if from a faint in her apartment and finding at her feet the body of a man, and in her hand a paper-knife, covered with blood.

She obeys the first impulse and flees. The "why" of the murder is never told until the last flash of the film, but the search of the detectives to find the murderer of the man, a judge, supplies good action. The girl, audacious, becomes secretary to the murdered man's brother. There are no wild jumps in the plot, and there is a strong surprise at the finish. This picture will go well. It will uphold the entertaining standard of any manager's program.

The Story.

In Vitagraph's feature, "A Girl at Bay," Mary Allen is discovered awaking in a dazed condition, and not at all sure that she is innocent of the murder of the man at her feet. She drops the bloody knife and flees. The murdered man was Robert Craigin, a New York City judge. His younger brother, Bruce, is also a judge, and into his office Mary Allen comes by a ruse which takes his secretary out of his office, and gives her the place.

Her imagined security is broken into by Professor Galt, a criminal psychologist, and Hooker, from the detective force. Galt takes a clue from the artistic furnishings of the apartment in which the crime was committeed. In the meantime, a strong love has grown up between Bruce Craigin and Mary, and they are married. Galt persuades Craigin to let Mary furnish the new home, and the similarity of tone between his home and that of the room in which his brother was murdered so impresses Craigin that he is convinced Mary is the murderess.

The surprise comes when Thomas Gray confesses to the murder of Craigin, telling that he had been concealed in the room, waiting to avenge his wife's wrongs upon Craigin. When Mary had fainted in Craigin's attack upon her, Grey had seized her paper-knife, killed Craigin, and left the knife in her hand. The circle of the plot is thus closed, and Mary and Bruce are happy.

As Herewith Indicated, "Queen of the Sea" Will Be a Good Hot Weather Feature.
William Fox is again putting forth this Annette Kellerman photofantasy of the deep sea.

Fox Suggests Some Hot Weather Advertising

HOT weather can be made to serve the exhibitor with increased rather than decreased profits, according to the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation.

"'Queen of the Sea,'" the bureau says, "is an ideal picture to make an appeal during the summer. With its star, Annette Kellerman, in graceful and thrilling stunts, its 200 beautiful girls posing as mermaids, and its water scenes filmed at Bar Harbor, Bermuda, Jamaica, Florida, Mexico and California, it represents the very height of desirable summer suggestion and publicity strength.

"For example, exhibitors are advised to prepare a cut-off of Annette Kellerman in one of her diving poses and give it a prominent place in front of the theatre. It is suggested that a cartoonist be employed to make drawings for the lobby showing boys playing 'hookey' at the old swimming hole, with the apt catchline, 'Come on in, fellers, the water's fine!'

"Newspaper copy and heralds prepared for this production include pictures of Annette Kellerman in her graceful poses, the mermaids sporting in the surf, and various beautiful water scenes. The posters, too, carry the suggestion of breeze and billows—most welcome to the heat-tormented fan."

Olive Thomas Is Quaker in Latest Triangle Film

THE reception accorded the first three productions of the special series of Triangle plays starring Olive Thomas has convinced that concern that "Prudence on Broadway," the fourth of the series, will prove equally popular. This is a story of contrast, the story of a demure, little Quakeress who is introduced to the bright lights of Broadway.

In order that she may learn to battle with the wicked world, Prudence's father sends her away from her Quaker home to a fashionable New York school, and later to visit her aunt, a wealthy society matron. She is besieged by suitors, but the most ardent Romeo is John Melbourne, who has already indulged in matrimony to the limit allowed by law. But shy Prudence matches her Quaker wits against the worldly knowledge of Melbourne, and when the smoke of battle blows over, a deeply chagrined man and a triumphant girl are disclosed.

"Prudence on Broadway" is from the pen of Catherine Carr, who has contributed many successes to Triangle. The picture, which will be released on July 6 was directed by Frank Borzage with photography by Pliny Horn.

Century and Rainbow Comedies Progress.

Work on Century and Rainbow comedies is progressing at the studio lot in Universal City. Fred Fishback is directing a new comedy titled "A Baby Doll Bandit," in which Edith Roberts and Jimmie Adams are starring. The comedy varies in action from school-day scenes to modern dancehalls and holdups.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Russell, vaudeville comedians, are busy in the laugh-producer, "A Horrible Honeymoon." James Davis is directing a number of animal scenes in the comedies which will star "Brownie," the dog.

Vera Steadman, of the diving queens, is said to be showing "fine form" in her latest picture, which William Watson is directing.

Peggy Hyland in McCutcheon Story.

"Peggy Hyland's new picture, "Cowardice Court,'" says the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation, "is most admirably adapted to express her personality. George Barr McCutcheon, who wrote the novel from which this play was adapted, might have written it to order for Miss Hyland, so admirably does the character of the heroine suit her individuality.

"Cowardice Court" is light and satirical in theme, laying no claim to the sensational. The play conveys a sterling lesson in democracy, pleasingly presented."

Powers Company Reports Many Cameragraph Sales

THE plant of the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., is a busy beehive these days. Everybody is on their toes taking care of the big demand for Cameragraphs. Mr. Lang, export manager, reports a large increase in the business of his department, and states that many orders have been received for Cameragraphs for Mexico, Porto Rico, Spain and Latin America.

In the domestic department, the demand for Cameragraphs is on the increase and distributors and dealers show great activity.

Vitagraph Announces Its Third Criminal Drama

A TENTATIVE draft of Vitagraph's third criminological drama to serve as a sequel to "Within the Law" and "The Third Degree" has been prepared by George Randolph Chester, the well-known author and production editor of that organization, with the active co-operation of Chief Justice Harry Olson, of the Municipal Court of Chicago.

Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph, when asked for further information in regard to the picture, stated that he had had in mind for some months a plan to film a third criminology picture to follow "Within the Law" and "The Third Degree," bringing the subject of police methods up to date as regarded their exposition on the screen.

"Both of the pictures mentioned," said Mr. Smith, "show the old-fashioned methods so long in vogue in the handling of criminals, which now are generally discredited. Scientific and psychological ideas have supplanted time-worn methods which did nothing to alleviate crime and often incriminated men at least not morally guilty.

"So I went to Chicago to see Harry Olson, chief justice of the municipal court of that city, who is responsible for the world famous psychopathic laboratory, an adjunct of his court, which analyzes and classifies the minds of prisoners. I told him that there was a field in the courtrooms for a gigantic picture drama showing the new humanity of the law and immediately won his interest."

Alice Joyce is to assume the leading role in the new courtroom drama.

"The Outcasts of Poker Flat"

Harry Carey Featured in Six-Reel Universal Adaptation of Bret Harte Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A VERY creditable screen adaptation of Bret Harte's famous "Outcasts of Poker Flat" has been accomplished in this six-reel production, done into scenario form by H. Tipton Steck and directed by Jack Ford. It catches admirably the spirit of the early days in California, contains numerous characters which are true to the author's originals, and is set in the midst of a splendid Western environment. From the time the gambler, John Oakhurst, befriends Sophy, on the deck of the steamboat, until the pathetic end of the outcasts in the winter storm, the spectator is caught in the grip of genuine sympathy. The Bret Harte story is followed pretty closely throughout.

Harry Carey portrays Oakhurst in an agreeable manner, though he is not quite the dandy that might have been expected in most scenes. Gloria Hope is tremendously appealing as Sophy, the helpless object of Stratton's scheming, which Oakhurst frustrates. Minor characters do some interesting bits. The snow scenes are patently studio sets, but will pass without question. Oakhurst's message, written in ink, on the deuce of clubs will not be accepted so readily; he should have been shown writing this in the cabin before he went out to take his life.

The Bret Harte narrative is preceded by a short modern prologue and followed by an equally brief epilogue, in which the same principals appear.

The Story.

"Square Shootin'" Harry Lanyon, proprietor of a gambling hall in an Arizona town, is in love with his ward, Ruth Watson. But he thinks the girl is in love with his pal, Tommy, and intends to let the youth have the girl.

While in this uncertain frame of mind over his own love affair, Lanyon picks up Bret Harte's story, "The Outcasts of Poker Flat," and reads the story of John Oakhurst. He likens himself to the Oakhurst of the tale. Oakhurst befriends a that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMANS"?

WHY?
Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Famous Players Working on Big Detective Drama

WHAT promises to be one of the most sensational detective photodramas produced in recent years has just been started at the Fifty-six street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The title is "The Teeth of the Tiger," and it is an adaptation by Roy Somerville of the detective story of the same name by Maurice Le Blanc, which recounts the further adventures of Arsene Lupin.

Directing the production, parts of which will be filmed at the Fort Lee studio, is Chet Withey, well known for numerous splendid productions including the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Hun Within," and the Paramount picture, "On the Quiet," and "In Pursuit of Polly." An all-star cast will be featured, the list being headed by David Powell, who has been seen in several Paramount pictures as leading man with prominent Paramount stars.

"The Teeth of the Tiger" chronicles the return of Arsene Lupin, the reformed gentleman burglar and swindler of Paris, who had supposedly met his death, but in reality had enlisted in the Foreign Legion for service in the Great War. It was here that he met Cosmo Mornington, a wealthy adventurer, whose life he saves, the two becoming fast friends.

In order that a number of scenes planned for the picture, which are supposed to transpire in the office of the chief of detectives, might be correct in the minutest detail, permission was obtained from Police Commissioner Enright, of New York, to sketch the interior of the office of the chief of detectives at Police Headquarteres, and W. C. Menzies, of the art staff of the studio, was detailed to do the work.

"Cupid Forecloses" Exhumes the Old Family Mortgage

A STORY book by Florence Morse Kingsley, "Hurrying Fate and Geraldine," is the vehicle for the coming Bessie Love picture. "Cupid Forecloses" is the title of the picture and Miss Love is cast as Geraldine Farleigh, village school teacher and the sole support of a mother, brother and aunt, who becomes entangled in high finance and nearly loses her home and heart. The mystery element is strongly sustained throughout.

David Smith is directing the picture on the West Coast and in the supporting cast are Wallace McDonald, Dorothea Wolbert, Frank Hayes, Jim Donnelly, Aggie Herring, Jake Abram, Anne Schaefer, Gordon Griffith and Otto Lederer.

Deepest mystery surrounds the identity of the real holder of a mortgage note, and the man Bullers which is not lifted until it is developed that Bullers all along has held not only the note, but also her love, and explanations bring lasting happiness.

Gladys Brockwell Working on New Play.

Gladys Brockwell has begun work on a new Fox production temporarily titled "A Sporting Chance." This is said to be an entirely different sort of play from "Chasing Rainbows," which she recently completed, and director Frank Beal declares that it is the most sensational story of Miss Brockwell's career.

Tom Mix as a "Tenderfoot."

Having completed "High Speed," a Tom Mix picture, Edward J. LeSaint is taking a vacation prior to directing his fifteenth production for William Fox. The coming play also will be an original story written by the star and temporarily titled "A Hard-Boiled Tenderfoot."

Start Work on "A Girl at Bay."

Corinne Griffith already has started on "A Girl at Bay." It is adapted from a widely read magazine story by Joseph Gollomb. Tom R. Mills is directing the picture at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio, and the supporting cast includes many popular players.

The story deals with the theory that some distinctive expression of a person's personality may be relied on to reveal criminal guilt.

"Painted World" Next Anita Stewart Film.

Anita Stewart fans are looking forward to the release of her third Vitagraph offering, "The Painted World," a melodrama of stage life.

Seen in the support of Miss Stewart are E. K. Lincoln, Julia Swayne Gordon, Harry Northrup and others. The play was written by Jacques Futrelle and staged by Ralph Ince. It paints a picture of stage life as only one conversant with those conditions can present it. It is declared that Miss Stewart finds her greatest emotional opportunities in the role of Yvette, a refined daughter of a coarse queen of burlesque.

Select Declares "His Bridal Night" Is Best Ever

FOR the first time in the history of Select Pictures Corporation, officials of that concern have openly declared a certain production to be the best the star has ever done. In this case the star is Alice Brady, and the attraction is Miss Brady's coming Select picture, "His Bridal Night."

Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures Corporation, says "'His Bridal Night' strikes a new note in the screen work of Alice Brady. It is the best thing she has ever done."

Sam E. Morris, Select's general manager, says "'His Bridal Night' is the best picture Miss Brady has ever done."

Director of Sales Charles R. Rogers says "Miss Brady never made a better picture than 'His Bridal Night.'"

There are several reasons for the marked superiority in Miss Brady's coming attraction. One reason is that it is a sort of story different from anything Miss Brady has ever done, and another reason is that it displays a departure in photography which was perfected and used in this picture for the first time in any production by Director Webb and Photographer George Folsey. The production is a dual-role story, with Miss Brady playing the part of twin sisters.

Moreover, the picture is strictly comedy while Miss Brady's previous Select pictures have been more in the dramatic order.

Mammoth Cut-Out Booms "Jack and the Beanstalk"

FOR an original and enterprising business-getter this cut-out of Jack and the Giant in the William Fox production, "Jack and the Beanstalk," which reaches for a height of two stories over the front of the Pathe Cinema Theatre, Rio de Janeiro, takes the prize. Every available form f publicity is evidently made full use of by this enterprising theatre. For instance, a very attractive blotter is issued on one side of which is a beautifully lithographed portrait of a charming girl with the name of the theatre, and on the other the following copy: "'Jack and the Beanstalk'—Fox Production—Monday, April 14, 1919—Another Sensational and Original Novelty—Presented by the Fox Film—'Jack and the Beanstalk'—a fairy tale interpreted by Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin (Children aged 5 and 6, respectively). Remarkable Scenes—a Wonderful Fairy Tale—a Work for Children—a Splendid Idea Remarkably Well Executed."

"The Red Lantern" at Coney Island.

Campaign methods that compare with those practiced by the big Broadway producers in heralding the first performance of a drama are being used by Feltman's photoplay airdome at Coney Island, New York, now showing "The Red Lantern."

William Brandt, managing director of Feltman's Airdome, has availed himself of every known possibility for advertising the running of the picture, from daily advertising in the New York and Brooklyn papers to the planting of 24-sheet posters.

Feltman's Airdome has a seating capacity of 2,000, and last week the theatre played almost to capacity during the entire period, which points out clearly the fact that the seashore movie theatre properly managed will draw as large crowds as any house located in the heart of the Metropolis.

Address Announced for Pioneer Branch.

The Buffalo branch of the Pioneer Film Corporation is now permanently located at 145 Franklin street. The new exchange is equipped to handle all the territory from Utica up to Buffalo, while the office in New York City serves the exhibitor in New York state south of Utica.

Miller Preparing to Start Second Picture.

Charles Miller, Charles Miller Productions, Inc., announces that he has the story for the second of his series of specials for release by Frank G. Hall, now under consideration, and expects to start production work within the next two weeks. Mr. Miller's first picture under the banner of the Charles Miller Productions, Inc., is completed. It is titled "A Dangerous Affair." Herbert Rawlinson, Florence Billings, Stuart Holmes, Vinton Friedley, Regina Quinn, Charles Stevenson, Warren Cooke and Ernest Torrence are the principal players.

girl named Sophy, on a steamboat. The girl is being deserted by a gambler named Stratton, who had promised to marry her, and Oakhurst saves her from self destruction.

The story continues in the questionable neighborhood of Poker Flat, where Oakhurst brings Sophy. He encourages the girl to marry a youth who loves her, though he also cares for her. Stratton reappears, and Oakhurst makes it his personal business to rid the camp of him. Later the Vigilantes sweep down upon Poker Flat, in a reform movement, and send Oakhurst, Mother Shipton, The Dutchess, and others, into the hills. Sophy and her young husband follow, and they are all caught in a violent storm, from which the two latter alone emerge alive.

Lanyon is so impressed with the Bret Harte story that he vows he will not repeat the mistake made by Oakhurst in sacrificing his love to another, and finds to his surprise, that Ruth loves himself and not Tommy, after all.

"A Desert Hero"

A Paramount-Arbuckle Comedy Burlesquing the Border Melodrama of Dance Hall and Gunmen.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A WELCOME burlesque of those dramas laid amid a shabby group of shacks, supposedly a mining town, where everybody shoots everybody else, and winds up with reform, the Paramount-Arbuckle product, "A Desert Hero," is a laugh from the start and might be to the finish but for an effective bit of contrast, a few really serious moments—The reform is not burlesqued; at least, not to an offensive degree. Of course Fatty Arbuckle provides most of the fun in the characterization of a "desert hero," so lucky as never to get a scratch amid all the shooting, such a remarkable shot himself that he hits the cuckoo in a clock and causes it to drop into a glass of beer below, converting it to a cocktail.

He thwarts all the villains, foils all the plots, rescues the persecuted maiden, destroys the bar, closes the dance hall, and is instrumental in converting a long line of hardened gunmen to lives of usefulness as members of the Salvation Army. "A Desert Hero" is a timely burlesque with a point that will be appreciated, admirably done at every stage of the game.

COMMENTS

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

JUST NEIGHBORS (Rolin-Pathe).—An unusually funny comedy featuring Harold Lloyd and Harry Pollard as two commuters who live in adjoining homes in a suburban town. They get into an amusing quarrel, and almost wreck each other's premises as a result. Very laughable.

IN THE BREAKERS (Pathe).—Instalment No. 11 of "The Tiger's Trail." This again pictures Belle's remarkable leap from the cliff to a tall tree and her subsequent rescue. Other features of importance concern the plans of Gordon to recover the Pact of Three and the trouble he gets into as a result; also the theft of the idol from the safe. At the close Belle and her lover are once more captured while canoeing off shore.

American Has Three Features for June Release

THE "Flying A" list of releases for June includes three star features titled "A Bachelor's Wife," "Trixie from Broadway," and "A Sporting Chance."

"A Bachelor's Wife," featuring Mary Miles Minter and released June 1 has met with a splendid reception from coast to coast and has doubled the usual run at scores of big theatres. It was booked for a solid week at the Tivoli in San Francisco, the Strand in Denver, the Rialto in Los Angeles, the Doric in Kansas City and the Strand at Newark, among others.

The production was written by Joseph Franklin Poland and directed by Emmett J. Flynn. The cast includes Alan Forrest, leading man; Myrtle Reeves, Lydia Knott, Charles Spere, Margaret Shelby and Harry Holden.

Miss Minter's next "Flying A" picture, "Yvonne from Paris," will appear in July. The script was furnished by Poland and the continuity by Frank Howard Clark. The story features a youthful French dancer who comes to America in disguise and, through her appearances in a Greenwich Village cafe, wins the star part in a Broadway musical comedy, with the love of the author of the play to boot. Alan Forrest is again leading man, and the cast includes Rosemary Theby, J. Barney Sherry, E. Alyn Warren, Vera Lewis, Bertram Grassby, Jeanne Robbins and Jack Farrell.

The Margarita Fisher special, "Trixie from Broadway," released June 15, was scenarized by Frank Howard Clark from an original story by Agnes C. Johnston. An interesting combination of life behind the scenes on Broadway and in the contrasting environment of a small California town, it has scored a decided hit with fans and exhibitors everywhere and is adding new points to Miss Fisher's reputation for versatility and charm. Emory Johnson, Olga Grey, J. Farrell MacDonald and George Periolat are in the cast.

William Russell's June 29 release is "A Sporting Chance." It is an enthralling mystery play by Stephen Fox, directed by Henry King. Fritzi Brunette was "Big Bill's" lead in the only feminine role of the play. In the cast are George Periolat, J. Farrell MacDonald, Lee Hill, Harvey Clark and Perry Banks.

Four New Comedy Releases Announced by Christie

"CAN Wives Be Trusted?" one of the latest Christie Comedies featuring Bobby Vernon, with Ethel Lynne and Jimmie Harrison, was filmed on the steamer "President" between San Francisco and San Diego. Having already made eight boat trips along the Pacific Coast and to Honolulu with Captain Cousins, the skipper of the steamer, Al E. Christie, who directed the picture, was given carte blanche in the making of scenes on every part of the boat from bow to stern.

"A Full House," the next Christie release, features Dorothy DeVore and Earle Rodney. This is a new angle on the mother-in-law story in which the husband, in order to get even with his wife for the too frequent visits of her mother, hired a tramp to come to the house and pose as his uncle from Brazil.

The next Christie release is "Oh My Dear," featuring Bobby Vernon with Patricia Palmer and James Liddy. The plot revolves about little Willie, a son Jim and Patricia were supposed to have had for some ten years.

Dorothy DeVore and Earle Rodney appear together again in "Anybody's Widow," a speedy little drama of courtship, in which Earle Rodney and Jimmy Harrison appear as the boys who thought they were through with women, until the widow appeared.

"In Secret" Nearly Finished.

"In Secret," Pearl White's latest Pathe serial, based on stories by Robert W. Chambers, is now in the last stages of completion at the studio of the George B. Seity Productions, Inc. Director Seitz is now working on the fifteenth and last episode.

Miss White has as her leading man in the new serial, Walter McGrail. Prominent in the cast also is Major Wallace McCutcheon, formerly of the Canadian Army, and a veteran of the first two years of the great war.

Loew's New York Circuit Books "Veiled Adventure"

CONSTANCE TALMADGE'S current Select picture, "The Veiled Adventure," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and which is now completing its tour of first-run theatres in other cities, will have its first New York showing during the week of July 14, having been booked in all of the Marcus Loew theatres in this city.

Due to the fact that the New York exchange is behind all other Select exchanges on Constance Talmadge attractions, "The Veiled Adventure," has not yet been shown in any of the houses which come under the jurisdiction of Branch Manager Henry Siegel, although immediately following the Loew dates for the week of July 14. The picture will be shown in the following houses: Poli's, Waterbury, three days; U. S., Paterson, three days; Colonial, Orange, two days; Electro, Brooklyn, two days; Plaza, two days; Colonial, East Orange, two days; Montauk, Passaic, three days; Peerless, Brooklyn, two days; Olympia, three days; and Majestic, two days. All other theatres under the New York exchange will show the production in the order following the previous Talmadge production, "Experimental Marriage."

Vidor Completes "Better Times."

Lloyd C. Haynes, president of the Brentwood Film Corporation, whose productions Robertson-Cole releases through Exhibitors Mutual, has returned to Hollywood, Cal., with definitely formulated plans for an extensive production program of King W. Vidor pictures. During his stay in New York, Mr. Haynes completed a transaction whereby the entire product of the Brentwood Corporation for the ensuing year will be taken over by Robertson-Cole.

King W. Vidor has completed "Better Times," which Exhibitors Mutual will shortly release. He has already laid his plans for the picturizing of his third attraction, "The Other Half," which will be built around a drama appealing largely through its human elements.

Lila Lee in "A Daughter of the Wolf."

In the Paramount picture, "The Daughter of the Wolf," Lila Lee plays the exciting and colorful role of the daughter of a rough fur smuggler of the Canadian Northwest. In this picture, which is released June 22, Miss Lee has as her leading man Elliott Dexter.

The story, which was written by Hugh Pendexter, appeared in the January issue of Women's World. On account of its atmosphere and action it is especially adaptable to motion picture purposes.

Irwin Wallat directed. J. O. Taylor was cameraman and a strong cast supports the star. Included in the cast are Elliott Dexter, Clarence Geldart, Raymond Hatton, Marcia Manon, Roy Diem, and other well-known players.

Gloria Payton to Lead for Lewis.

Select announces "La Rue of the Strong Heart" as the working title of Mitchell Lewis' coming Select attraction, upon which he is now working. The name of Gloria Payton, Mr. Lewis' leading woman, is also made public, as are the names of two other members of the cast, Patricia Palmer, who will have the engenue role, and Frank Whitson, the heavy.

Gloria Payton, who has still to celebrate her twentieth birthday, is known as a rising young screen artist of considerable talent. Her olive complexion, black hair and brown eyes, lend her a sort of distinction that is particularly adapted to the type of leading woman, which she is required to play in Mitchell Lewis' coming production.

Simplex

EXHIBITOR AND PROJECTIONIST

What Does the Added Fire Protection Through the Use of Simplex Mean to You?

A film may part at any time during its course through the projector. That portion that remains in the mechanism may stop unobserved by the projectionist, ignite and even though the fire be confined to the reel on the machine, to you it means the following:

LOSS OF AN ADVERTISED REEL—
PAYMENT OF THE DESTROYED FILM—
DAMAGE TO PROJECTOR—
LAYING UP OF PROJECTOR FOR REPAIRS AND CLEANING—HOLDING UP OF SHOW—
LOSS OF PRESTIGE TO PROJECTIONIST—
LOSS OF PRESTIGE TO THEATRE—INCREASED FIRE RATES—

The Simplex is so constructed that when used as designed, the exclusive film trap prevents the ignition of film further than the aperture plate. A one-inch hole burned in a film is far better than any of the inconveniences enumerated above.

Can You Afford to be Without a Simplex?
